The other side of Calvary's tragedy is equally suggestive of our liberation. Following the statement we have considered in Col. 2:14, the Apostle proceeds to declare that our Lord "despoiled principalities and powers in (or through) it (that is the Cross), making a show of them openly in triumph". If we refuse to accept this as evident fact, we miss the germ of the redemptive processes of the Cross. As our Blood-Brother, the Lord Jesus met our enemy and His, with all the minions of evil, in His sacrificial offering, and vanquishing them once and for all, completely and eternally. This is the meaning of Heb. 2:14, 15, "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also likewise himself took part of the same that through death he might overcome him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage." To eliminate, therefore, this spiritual and tremendous triumph from the Cross, through the death of the incarnated Son of God, is to defeat the entire meaning and potency of its glorious intent and provisions.

The comprehension of the Way of the Cross then lies not in speculative reasonings, in any processes of intellectual analyses. Those who would adopt such procedure will meet an insurmountable barrier. We may submit the Way of the Cross to analytical dissections; our crucibles may reduce it to terms of finality; our filters may strain it of supposedly foreign elements; our scales may weigh it with exact precision. Yet, when we have gotten to ultimate results, we discover fog and uncertainty in our postulates, unsettlement in our assumed security. But unquestioning faith finds in the acceptance of its pledged power and vitality the fulness of the divine intention. The Way of the Cross is light in our darkness; strength in our weakness; joy in our sorrows; a thrilling and throbbing gladness in surrender to the evident will of God; a hope in every dark perplexity; a balm for every wound; a compelling love for all men which enriches as it expends; the illumination of the pathway upward, as we close our eyes to things earthward and "depart to be with the Lord".

A Message From Paradise

What mean you by this weeping
To break my very heart?
We both are in Christ's keeping,
And therefore cannot part.
You there—I here, tho' parted
We still at heart are one;
I only just in sunshine,
The shadow scarcely gone.

What though the clouds surround you,
You can the brightness see,
'Tis only a little way
That leads from you to me.
I was so very weary,
Surely you could not mourn,
That I a little sooner
Should lay my burden down.

Then weep not—weep not, Darling,
God wipes away all tears,
'Tis but a little while,
Though you may call it years.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

ESTHER.

ESTHER, meaning "star", was a star of hope for the Jews in the day when they were sold into the hands of their enemies.

Subject.

The unseen hand of Jehovah working deliverance for His people, the Jews, through one who would not bow down to their enemy, but who humbled himself before God, and was exalted to the place next to the king, where he sought the wealth and peace of his people (ch. 3:1-5, 10:4-1; 10:3).

1. Chs. 1-7. The self-exaltation, plot, and humiliation of Haman, the Agagite, a descendant of Amalek, the enemy of the Jews (1 Sam. 15:20, 32, 33; Ex. 17:8-16).

Haman is a type of the Antichrist who will exalt himself and seek to destroy, during the great tribulation, all of the Jews because a remnant will not bow down to him. He will be humbled by the One whom God has exalted, the One who first humbled Himself (2 Thess. 2:4; Rev. 7:1-8; 12:13-17; Zech. 12:1-4; 2 Thess. 2:8; Rev. 19:20; Phil. 2:8-11.)

2. Chs. 8-10. The exaltation of Mordecai to the place next to the king, and deliverance of the Jews from the hand of their enemies.

Mordecai is not only a type of Christ, but of the Jewish remnant who will not bow down to the Antichrist, and who will be exalted to the place next to Christ, the King over all the earth in that day (Ex. 19:5, 6; Isa. 60:12; Zech. 14:9).

Purpose.

1. Chs. 1-7. The plots of Satan, the self-exalted one, to destroy the Church of Christ are continually overcome by the One who would not bow down to Satan (Matt. 4: 1-12).

Satan himself has been brought to naught by Christ, who would not bow down to him (Heb. 2:14).

Everything in our hearts which exalts itself against God will be brought down by the One who humbled Himself (Heb. 2:5-9; Phil. 3:20, 21; 2 Cor. 10:5).

2. Chs. 8-10. Christ, the One who humbled Himself, and who has been exalted next to the Majesty on high, delivers us from Satan and his hosts, and ever lives to seek our wealth and peace (Rom. 8:34, 37; Heb. 7:25; Eph. 6:10-18).

SUNDAY BEFORE EASTER

Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

> Almighty and everlasting God, who, by Thy tender love towards mankind, hast sent Thy Son our Saviour, Jesus Christ, to take upon Him our flesh, and to suffer death upon the cross, that all mankind should follow the example of His great humility; mercifully grant, that we may both follow the example of His patience, and also be made partakers of His resurrection; through the same same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ACCORDING to Lord Alfred Tennyson all the collects are the best specimens of English prose, and this is one of the best of them. Observe the choice wording of it, and the "balance" (as the rhetoricians call it) of sentences and clauses; how easy to read it is, and how clear, and forcible, and easily understood, all characteristics of the best prose; the ascription especially. And see the logical order of the petition. We pray that we may be "partakers of His resurrection"; but how is that "unspeakable gift" to be ours? Only by following "the example of His patience". There is no crown without the cross.

THE Epistle for the Sunday next before Easter is Phil. 2:5-11. The theme of this Epistle is the humility of Christ. The ascription of the collect is taken from this: "That all mankind should follow the example of His great humility." "He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." There is a climax here, the force of which it is difficult for us to feel; for painful and excrutiating as is the death by crucifixion, it has long ceased to be the death of the criminal and the felon; and has been so exalted and glorified in sacred story and song, that the ignominy of it is lost, and we fail to realize the depth of degradation to which the Son of God gave Himself so freely for our sake. If we would feel the full force of this celebrated passage of the Epistle, it should read thus: The Son of God "humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death by the halter of the hangman". One word in this Epistle needs explanation, "robbery"; Jesus "thought it not robbery to be equal with God". The meaning is made plain in the R. V.: "He thought it not a thing to be grasped at, to be equal with God; but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Himself the form of a servant . . . ." And the R. V. gives more correctly than our A. V., verse 10, which should be, "In the name of Jesus (not 'at the name of Jesus') every knee should bow. . . . ."

THE Gospel for Sunday next before Easter is St. Matt. 27:1-54. It tells us of Jesus' trial before Pilate, and of His crucifixion and incidentally, of Judas' fate. The Gospels for the next five days, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Good Friday, are all given to accounts of Our Lord's trials and crucifixion, taken from the Four Gospels. It is painful to read them, yet as the Church gives them, we shall no doubt find it profitable to contemplate all that the Son of God suffered for our redemption. Sad reading as it is, think what it would be, could we read it as it would have been given in newspapers, had there been such in those days. Let us gather from the Four Gospels a full view of what Jesus went through, from His arrest in Gethsemane, before day of that Good Friday, till His death, about three o'clock in the afternoon.

LEAN HARD

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee"
—Ps. 55:22.

Child of My love, Lean Hard,
And let Me feel the pressure of thy care;
I know thy burden, child, I shaped it;
Poised it in Mine own hand, made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength;
For even as I laid it on, I said,
I shall be near, and while she leans on Me,
This burden shall be Mine, not hers;
So shall I keep My child within the circling arms
Of My own love. Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds. Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough; I would embrace thy care
So I might feel My child reposing on My breast.
Thou lovest Me? I knew it. Doubt not then;
But, loving Me, Lean Hard.

"Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you"
—1 Peter 5:7.

Book Reviews

THE RIDDLE OF LIFE: By the Rt. Rev. Neville S. Talbot, D. D., M. C., Bishop of Pretoria. Cloth. Pp. 110 (small type). Published by Longmans, Green & Co., New York City. Price, $1.

Bishop Talbot is writing out of the anguish of his own heart, and trying to find for himself and us the secret of suffering. He shows the heartlessness of Nature "red of tooth and clay", in an eloquent paragraph; discloses that man unaided by divine revelation is powerless to explain the presence and mystery of pain; and then analyzing the life of our Lord and His meritorious death, writes: "We find Him unmistakably viewing life as a battlefield between good and evil. He does not explain why it is so, nor attempt to explain the fact away. But that He looked upon life as a battlefield, means that we are asked to recognize, as integral to His outlook, the presence of Satanic influences in the evil in the world. It is impossible to separate Him from the conviction that the evil which is in man and which besets man has a diabolic source. His own life was a running fight with the powers of darkness. He girds Himself throughout for battle with a personal Antagonist, 'an enemy,' a 'strong man armed,' a 'prince of this world.' He is fully aware that counter to the Kingdom of God which He came to establish, there stands another kingdom, an alien intruder, the kingdom of Satan."

From the depths of our souls, we may thank the good Bishop for this conviction. He has found the secret and we are the stronger for it. What has created all the muddle of life has been the modern persistency to dismiss from the stage the arch-enemy of God and of the souls for whom Christ came to die. It is pitiable to have a modern school complacently declare that "St. Paul was unable to shake himself free from the Jewish notion of a personal Devil". We may congratulate ourselves that we are in such good company as the Bishop, the Apostle and our Lord Himself.

THE WORD OF GOD AND THE WORD OF MAN: By Karl Barth. Translated by Douglas Horton. Cloth. Pp. 327. Published by The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass. Price, $2.25.

Everybody is reading Barth. If he is not he should be. It is a challenging appeal, direct, forceful and heart-warming. When Harnack declared some years ago that there would "be no solution of the present unrest until there is a return to positions which have been forsaken", he kindled a spark in Protestant Germany which is now flaming with zeal to bring back the evangelical truths for which Germany had been conspicuous in former epochs.

These chapters are a collection of addresses in different places. And Dr. Barth has shown commendable judgment in selecting for the first, "The Righteousness of God". In our day of spiritual arrogance, when God is given a place of respectable distance and ordered to stay there, it were well to protest, with Dr. Barth, that God has His own place and character, and deserves full recognition of His august sovereignty.

"The Strange, New World Within the Bible" is fascinating and thought-provoking. "The Need of Christian Preaching' 'stirs one to the recognition of the crying call of hungry hearts, for a definite message to the people, divested of specious reasonings and trite generalities, pressed into the lives of the people with an authority that comes from the initial absorption of the message by the preacher himself. Dr. Barth is the explication of this. For one sees at every corner of his tense arguments, that he has thought profoundly, and personally appropriated the sublime truths he expounds with such clarity and persuasion.

Get Barth and you will be grateful.

AT THE LORD'S TABLE: By David Owen Thomas, M. D. Cloth. Pp. 298. Published by George H. Doran Company, New York City. Price, $3.

An unusual contribution to this field of study and meditation. Written by a physician in a calm, thoughtful, studious and painstaking spirit, we have here a developed concept of the meaning and value of the Holy Communion.

Almost half of the book is occupied in the publication of Communion Talks and Lenten addresses. Given at different periods, they possess the value of well-digested thought. The author's scholarship in Greek and sacramental literature stand him in good stead as he pursues his pathway to the gratifying conclusion that the Supper of the Lord is not only a memorial of His death, but a means of life to those who claim life by this avenue. It was Andrew Murray, that astute evangelical sacramentarian, who said: "We may receive as much from the Holy Communion as we have the faith to expect."

Our author is not a stickler for ecclesiasticism; for he maintains that the primitive and normal order was congregational, not priestly. But no one will allow that to bar him from discovering in the volume the rich veins of gold he has so successfully unearthed. An ample index closes the book. But strange to say, there does not seem to be any plea for the individual communion cup, though the author is a doctor of medicine. The concluding paragraph succinctly states the end in view: "Tested by enlightened criticism, the Lord's Supper retains its credentials as a Christian Sacrament, to strengthen the living, bless the dying, exalt the Church and glorify our Lord Jesus Christ." A truly desirable accession to our libraries. Let us get it.

FIERY GRAINS—THOUGHTS AND SAYINGS FOR SOME OCCASIONS: Put together by H. R. L. Sheppard and H. P. Marshall. Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 281. Cloth bound. Price, $1.50.

Here is another message from the earnest, impatient parson over in England. "Fiery Grains" is the result of the combined efforts of a member of the older and a member of the younger generation to offer a collection of "all sorts of strong and lovely things by reading which we ourselves would be ready for the next step towards attaining a nobler balance of living and a greater conception of what life means and entails for us and for our friends". The Bible and great devotional books are definitely left untouched "not only because happily they are familiar, but because choice would be so invidious".

There is a delightful index to sympathetic thoughts on facing every-day life such as: "On getting up in the morning," "On seeing the joke," "On drinking soup," "On falling in love," "On playing the game," "On a moment of doubt," etc.

Mr. Sheppard seems to have the faculty of bringing to the forefront the joy of the good, of the beautiful, of service, of the noble life—and as such, "Fiery Grains" should have a special appeal for Lent when we should be trying more than ever to form our lives in relation to our Saviour, the perfect life and perfect beauty. As such, too, it should prove a welcome gift at Easter, offering inspiration and a rare understanding sympathy for any and every-day of the year.

THE RICH MAN'S OPPORTUNITY.

Mr. Editor:

I read the letter in The Southern Churchman concerning the DuBose School at Monteagle, Tenn., with much interest.

The thought comes to me, What a great opportunity for an investment! Such an investment that would return wonderful dividends. And dividends of such quality and richness that soon the capital invested would be overwhelmed and forgotten by their abundance.

Here is a School that takes the mature man in the ripeness of his character and gives to him the necessary equipment for going forth as a Soldier of the Cross to fight manfully under that Banner against the world, the flesh and the devil.

This man has lived long enough to know the emptiness of life without religion; and he is on fire to take the Christ to people who do not know Him.

He is not able financially nor mentally to take the long and arduous training in our regular seminaries. But here is a School that has adapted and adjusted its courses of preparation to just such men. Men who have had the experience of life, and now must be given instruction and spiritual training.

The DuBose Memorial Church Training School is the only one in the Church doing this kind of work. The Church should appreciate it and support it. The men are given opportunity to help pay their expenses; so the cost of training is at the lowest.

Each year men have to be turned away. And yet the bishops are always calling for more men to go into the field. These men will fill the rural field if there be enough of them. There are idle men who do not work because they cannot find a parish suitable to their taste. Here are men who feel that it is a high honor to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to any of God's children anywhere.

Will men and women who have the means refuse to make such an investment in the Cause of Jesus Christ? Or will they release the money tied up in real estate, stocks and bonds, and permit it to flow into a channel whence a continuing influence will flow out and give spiritual irrigation to the field of human souls perishing for the Living Water?

Rouse ye rich men! The call is to you to invest in the Name of the Lord!

"GOD, GIVE US MEN!"

Mr. Editor:

. . . . . I want to tell you again how I rejoice at your strong, stalwart defense of the faith so much needed in these days of rapidly growing apostasy everywhere. "God, give us men!" in these days who will be willing to stand with unsheathed sword in defense of the whole Word of God against every enemy in Church and school.

Although I am now in my eighty-first year, I am giving a large part of my time to extending the work of The Fishermen's Clubs (when not trying to "do my bit" for the Bible Champion and one or two other fundamentally sound magazines) and in this would be glad to have your prayers both for funds with which to carry on the work and for openings for the Clubs.

DIVES AND LAZARUS.

Mr. Editor:

This account taken from the Gospel according to Luke is not called a parable though classed as such. By some it is regarded as an actual scene which our Lord in His omniscience described.

Because this so-called parable is interpreted to teach that those who have departed this life pray for the living we desire to look more closely into it to ascertain if such an interpretation is a true inference from the facts.

Let us look at some of the principal statements in their order in the narrative. First, "Dives lifted up his eyes and saw Lazarus . . . and he cried, etc." Mark, it does not say that Dives prayed; for the word of true prayer is not used here; but "he cried". Would it not be more appropriate to say that "being in agony he yelled?" Second, "Between us and you a great gulf". If we follow the order of the words in the original it will read, "a chasm a great one". It was no small or insignificant affair. Third, "Is fixed". Better, "has been firmly or immovably fixed". When was it so fixed? From eternity in the character and mind of God. It was fixed between fallen Adam and the tree of life; it was fixed between the clean and the unclean, the holy and the unholy, the godly and the ungodly, the righteous and the unrighteous. It is, therefore, a moral chasm. Fourth, "So that they who would pass, etc". Read, "So that those who are willing to pass". The word willing being a present participle implies a continuing desire to go to the relief of any one. We may assume that Lazarus was willing to go to the relief of Dives; and, we may be sure, that Dives was more than willing for Lazarus to do so. What prevented? "They cannot." "Cannot" is from a word which means whatever is within the power or ability of any one to do; and being in the present tense emphasizes the fact that this inability is continuous; they could not then; they cannot now, or at any future time.

What possible comfort can any derive from this history? Is it in the mere inference that, because Dives prayed (?) for his brethren, the dead pray for the living? But, let it be carefully noted that, Lazarus uttered no prayer for tormented Dives, though he had enough to move him thereto. The only instance of the dead praying (?) for the living is recorded in Revelation 6:9, 10: "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God . . . and they cried with a great voice, saying, How long, O Lord . . . dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" Poor comfort!

There is no recorded prayer of any of the saints of the Old or the New Testaments for the living. Moses offered many a prayer for rebellious Israel in the wilderness, but not one since his departure is on record. To what lengths will not some go to bolster up their perverted belief. Here in the whole range of Scripture they find themselves shut up to the agonizing yell of a tormented soul in hell, and then complacently tell us that the dead (all of them?) pray for the living! Did Lazarus pray for those miserable beggars he left behind, some of whom were very likely his friends, and sorely needed his prayers? May we not just as reasonably infer from this fact that the dead do not pray for the living? Again, Dives prayed to Abraham, the friend of God, with no result in the way of any alleviation of his sufferings. May we not reasonably infer that prayers to the saints are unavailing? But what saint would think or presume on his own initiative to act counter to the judgment of the court of last resort? What saint would thus take matters in his own hands? Dives makes no reference whatever to God. When he himself was on earth he rejected Him; and now in hell he will take no notice of Him. And yet from a God-rejecting, condemned sinner, who scorns God even in the midst of his torments, we are to find comfort in the fact (?) that the dead pray for the living! Mirabile dictu! Why make so much of Dives' so-called prayer, but say nothing about the silence of Larazus?

But prayers for the dead by the living; why not pray for the Apostles, Chrysostom, John Huss, Luther, Ridley, Cranmer and all the rest of that glorious company of saints? nor should we forget Judas Iscariot, who sorely needs them.

It will soon come to this, and then as now we shall be told that what the Church has decreed must be obeyed. "As the Church of Jerusalem, Alexandria, Antioch and also Rome has erred in manner of ceremonies and matters of doctrine" (Art. XIX), may it not be that this Church has erred in the "manner of ceremonies and matter of doctrine or faith?" Has she reached the point where she can say with Rome, "Roma locuta est?"

"THERE IS A REASON."

Mr. Editor:

The DuBose School and especially myself is very grateful for your kindness to us in putting my letter in The Southern Churchman of March 2. It was indeed kind of you.

I think the whole Church should be grateful to you for the editorial. We are beginning to get somewhere with the statistics showing the condition as far as statistics can, of the Church in America, and I believe Mr. Alfred B. Williams can do good work here for the Church in showing its growth or lack of growth. After this is done, we shall get many opinions and alibi as to why the Church has not held the people. There is a reason.

I think Mr. Williams is very generous to the clergy, but I am wondering if we parsons are as faithful to our trust as we humanly should be.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Chester Bradley, of Nashville, Tenn.:

> "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all mercies;
> Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God" (2 Cor. 1:3-4).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

THE ATONEMENT

But to come back to our more immediate purpose, the Atonement, the Incarnation did bring God and man together by the union of the divine and human natures in the Person of Jesus Christ, but something more had to be done since sin came as a barrier between man and God, and prevented him from holding communion with Him as a Son with a Father. An Atonement had to be made in order that man's sin might be done away and a reconciliation between God and man be brought about. There was no member of the human race capable of making this atonement, because he could not atone for his own sin, much less that of mankind as a whole. Christ was the only one who could make the atonement, because His human nature was without sin, and He was also capable of representing in His own Person, the whole human race, and as the Son of God, giving to it an eternal value and significance since His sacrifice was not only for the sins of the whole world, but was once for all, never needing repetition.

My intention, however, in working along this line of thought was to bring out the truth, that the Atonement was intended to complete and make perfect the union of God and man, for the accomplishment of which the Incarnation was the preparatory step.

It seems to me that St. Paul, in the sixth chapter of the Romans, throws some light on the subject; thus he says: "Know ye not that so many of us, as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into His death?" and, in the fifth verse we read: "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall also be in the likeness of His Resurrection." Here, "planted together", may be better translated "united or grown together", which gives the idea used elsewhere in this epistle of being grafted into Christ.

In the mystical union betwixt Christ and His Church, His death upon the cross formed a necessary part, but it is a mystery which we can only partly fathom. However, this passage does shed some light upon the subject.

Using the metaphor of grafting, we may notice that the tree into which the branches are grafted, makes the sacrifice of losing part of its life through the cutting of its own branches.

Then the branches which are grafted in are cut off from the tree of which they formed part, signifying the separation from the old life of sin. They are then grafted into the other tree and grow into it till they share in its very life. Similes or metaphors of this kind are, of course, imperfect and cannot be pressed too far. There is the vital difference that in an ordinary grafting the graft retains its own character by producing the same kind of fruit that it did before, whereas as members of Christ, it is His Life which gives the character to the fruit that we produce the fruits of the Spirit take the place of the works of the flesh, and so man becomes one with God, by sharing the Divine life, which was made possible, (1) by man being created with the rudiments of divinity implanted in his nature, (2) by the Son of God taking our nature upon Him and thus making it possible for the divine in man, to find its fulfillment in Him the Son of God, and (3) by Christ making an Atonement for sin by His sacrifice upon the cross, so that the sin, which came between man and God might be done away and man become reconciled to God and God to man, and thus an Atonement be effected in the sharing of a common life.

PART TWO.

We will now take up another line of thought and proceed to examine what we may call the legal point of view.

We have been taught as a dogma of science the absolute uniformity of nature, that is to say, everything is governed by law. In the creation of man, however, we note a very important exception, for to him was given freedom of the will which made it possible for him to diverge from the divine purpose and set up a plan and purpose of his own.

This is the heart and kernel of the fall, however we may regard it from other points of view.

The gift of free will might seem to be a dangerous experiment as being likely to produce confusion and disorder in an otherwise harmonious universe.

On the other hand, from later developments, we can see that its purpose must have been to raise creation to a higher level through the forming of a being capable of entering into an intelligent comprehension of the divine will and purpose and one who could be brought into alliance with his creator, and into cooperation with Him in the fulfillment of the divine purpose. This would make men the sons of God and sharers with Him in carrying out the higher purpose of the divine mind.

It is this which is spoken of in the New Testament as the New Creation in which man being brought into union with God, becomes the instrument through which the rest of creation is brought into closer relations with God, and enters upon a new and higher stage of its development. This, however, is only very imperfectly realized at the present time. To return to our starting point, man was created with freedom of will which made it possible for him to depart from, and even come into collision with the divine will.

The divine purpose then was to bring man's will into harmony with the divine. The law was evidently given as a school master to set before man what the will of God was and man's duty with regard to it, namely, obedience. The history of the nation to whom this law and discipline were given proved conclusively the inability of man to live in harmony with the divine will by his own unaided strength and this inability, or sinfulness, on the part of the Jew, typified the fallen condition of the human race. This is expressed clearly in the Epistle to the Romans, "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God". Now, the sinfulness of man consists not merely in the commission and omission of individual acts of disobedience, but in an imperfect condition or state, which rendered him unable to rise to the level which would bring him into conformity with the divine will. The prophets before the coming of Christ had foretold the giving of a new covenant, when the Spirit of God would enter into men and reinforce their own enfeebled will and enable them to keep God's commandments and thus be brought into harmony with the divine will.

Something of the utmost importance, however, had to be accomplished before the Spirit of God could thus enter into man's soul and take possession, and thus bring the will of man and the will of God into harmony, for we are told in St. John's Gospel: "This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive for the Holy Spirit was not yet given because that Jesus was not yet glorified." This, of course, means that the redemptive work of Christ had to be wrought out before man could be raised to that higher level where, through the power and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, he could live in harmony with the divine will. Thus we may clearly see throughout His life and ministry, Christ emphasized the fact that He had come into the world to do the will of the Father: "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me"; and again, "My meat and drink is to do the will of Him that sent me to finish His work"; and this fact was still more strongly emphasized in the Garden of Gethsemane, when He prayed that if it were possible the cup might pass from Him but at the same time saying, "Nevertheless not my will but Thine be done".

This, we are told, was done thrice, which shows the intensity of the struggle and, at the same time, the completeness of the surrender to the divine will and thus in the sacrifice of the Cross, we see the will of man and the will of God restored to harmony in the person of Christ the Son of God.

Our attention too is focussed on the eternal law of righteousness which received its justification in the sacrifice of the cross; this lack marks the elevation of the creature to a new plane of existence, because the moral law is something entirely different from the physical laws which are generally regarded as the laws of nature. The moral law only applies to man and more especially to his relations with God, for to be like God represents the moral ideal at its highest point of perfection.

The eternal law of righteousness is not something separate and distinct from God Himself, by which God is governed, nor is it a law which God has arbitrarily set forth for the government of man; so far from that it belongs to the very nature of God Himself and we recognize in it, not something which we do not understand, but as representing the perfection of goodness and holiness.

The Incarnation and Atonement were evidently intended to bring the wayward will of man into a perfect harmony with the will of God as the rest of nature is in harmony with the laws which govern it. We may compare man's state of sin to a limb out of joint. It has been said that God could forgive men without any Atonement, but that would not bring their wills into harmony with the Divine Will. It would simply mean compromising with sin and accommodating His Will and Purpose to Man's. In other words it would be accepting the situation as incapable of being remedied.

In the case of a limb out of joint we are not satisfied to let it remain in that condition. The arm, for instance, cannot function properly if the shoulder is out of joint, it must be put in its proper place and this may serve as a very imperfect but suggestive illustration of what took place on the cross. We read in the Old Testament, "In sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure, then said I, lo! I came to do Thy will, O God". Evidently sacrifice had come to be a mere form, although it was the appointed way by which man could approach God and find favor with him. This recalls an earlier passage where Samuel said to Saul, "Obedience is better than sacrifice and to harken than the fat of rams". In the sacrifice of Christ, however, its true meaning and value were restored, for Christ as the representative of the human race and summing up in His Person all that human nature not only was, but could possibly be submitted his human will to the divine will and thus not only made satisfaction to the eternal law of righteousness, but brought our human nature once more into harmony with the divine.

It may perhaps, be helpful to use the parable of the "Prodigal Son" as an illustration, at the same time making it clear that the story, wonderful as it is in its illuminative power, only gives a part, though the most important part, with reference to the reconciliation of God and man. The story brings out in a clear and vivid way the Fatherhood of God and His forgiving love; it also brings out the necessity for repentance and faith, since the son believed that his father would forgive him, even if he did not restore him to his former position. There is nothing, however, said about justice.

Rather we see mercy rejoicing against judgment; it was the older brother who represented that side of the matter: "Lo these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandments, and yet thou never gavest me a kid that I might make merry with my friends, but as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf." He naturally felt the injustice of it and there have been many who have sympathized with him in this attitude and have felt that he did not get a "square deal".

But this story only gives a part of the truth: Christ gave us the other side of it on the Cross, when He, as our Elder Brother, went into the far country of separation from the Father found the prodigal there and said to him, "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise", where we have no doubt that He brought him to the Father, having taken His place and satisfied the eternal law of righteousness for him. It is a happy coincidence that St. Luke gives us, both the parable of the Prodigal Son and our Lord's words to the thief on the cross.

It may be said, of course, that this bringing of the will of men into union and harmony with the will of God which satisfies the eternal law of righteousness, seems to take back from man the freedom of will, which was given in the first instance, so that he becomes the mere automatic echo of the divine will; and if this should be so, why should not man have been made like the rest of nature, under the reign of law and entirely subject to it?

The answer to this is that by virtue of his experience and the illumination which has come to him through the life and death of Christ, man has come to recognize the fact that the will of God, when fully understood, represents man's own ideal, that which he would desire to attain to, as the most perfect fulfilment of his own higher aspirations and thus the reconciliation of the will of man and the will of God represented not merely the submission of the human will to the divine, making a virtue of necessity, but a joyous acceptance of the higher will of God, as giving to man the opportunity to fulfil his own destiny on a far higher level of achievement than would have been otherwise possible.

Like the old and blind Roman General who explained his happiness and contentment by saying, "I am always satisfied and contented because I choose whatever God chooses", or, as it is expressed in the Prayer Book, "Whose service is perfect freedom"; and thus we may perhaps see the way by which Determinism and Freewill may be reconciled.

This brings us back to the old question of St. Anselm: "Why did God become man?" Was it only that men might be redeemed and made the sons of God and heirs of eternal Life? The New Testament seems to go beyond this. It seems to teach that men are made the sons of God, in order that they may share with Christ in bringing creation into closer relations with God, and that Christ's becoming man, was the beginning of the New Creation, which was to give a new significance and meaning to all created things. Thus St. Paul, in his Epistles to the Colossians, wrote: "For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell, and having made peace through the blood of the cross by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself; by Him, I say, whether things in earth and things in heaven." And there are the words of Christ Himself: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." But this belongs rather to the realm of religious speculation, than to the matter we have in hand. There are, however, two significant passages, which seem to carry us up to the heights, which we can only regard as prophetic glimpses of that which is to come.

The first has reference to the first line of thought which we followed, that which had to do with man's life, as being brought into union with the life of God, through the Incarnation and Atonement, and it is this: "And He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers. For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ. Till we all come in the oneness of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

And the other passage seems to carry the other line of thought, that which had to do with Law, or the divine will beyond the present capacity of the human mind to follow, and it is this: "In whom we have redemption through His Blood, according to the riches of His Grace. . . . . Having made known unto us the mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure, which He hath purposed in Himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him, in whom we also have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will."

Church Intelligence

Sewanee Summer Training School.

The Sewanee Summer Training School will be held at Sewanee, Tenn., August 1-14 for the Adult Conference, and August 15-28 for the Young People's Conference. The faculty will contain such headliners as Dr. John W. Wood, on Missions; Miss Grace Lindley, on the Woman's Auxiliary; the Rev. John W. Irwin, on Publicity; the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, on Business Administration; Miss Christine Boylston, on Christian Social Service; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, on Church School Administration; the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, on the Church's Program; Dean William H. Nes, on Current Religious Problems; the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, on Personal Religion; Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, on Training for Leadership; Dean Charles T. Wells, on Church History, and many others of like ability.

The Young People's Division will be under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, with the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter as his Acting and Associate Director. An unusually strong staff of helpers have already been secured for this school, many of whom are already actively associated with Sewanee.

Sewanee will miss the figure of the late Dr. Mercer P. Logan, founder of the Summer Training School and President of the Board of Managers until his death. He is succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., who with Bishop Frank A. Juhan, Bishop Edwin A. Penick, Dr. Homer W. Starr and Dr. Benjamin F. Finney, form the directing force. The Executive Secretary is Mrs. William P. Cornell, 325 Market Street, Jacksonville, Florida.

Mrs. Wm. P. Cornell.

Gratifying Reports From Campaign Centres.

Gratifying reports from various parts of the country have been pouring into the New York office of the St. Luke's Campaign. With $675,000 already subscribed there is every indication that the necessary funds for building the great Medical Centre in Japan will be raised.

Following are excerpts from the news coming in from various parts of the country:

Chicago, February 23.—The women of the Diocese of Chicago have fully organized each parish and are now making personal solicitation through these committees. Mrs. Robert B. Gregory is the exceptionally able chairman.

To date there have been three report meetings with an average attendance of forty ladies. A total of $13,935.88 has been reported.

Mrs. Gregory said: "The women of Chicago have become more united through their effort in behalf of St. Luke's medical Centre than ever before and I look for the accomplishment of great things in this diocese."

Dr. George H. Thomas, Chairman of the Bishop's Committee, Diocese of Chicago, has gathered a strong group of men about him who are now actively soliciting among the men in their respective parishes. Dr. Thomas believes St. Luke's, Tokyo, "Is a responsibility assumed by the Church in 1901 and this obligation must and will be discharged in 1929. It is the greatest opportunity of the Church today".

Cincinnati, Ohio, February 25 (By wire from Col. William Cooper Proctor).—Cash and pledges in hand for Southern Ohio total thirty-six thousand dollars. Reports from diocese yet incomplete. We hope to secure further substantial amount. William Cooper Proctor.

Springfield, Ill.—Great interest was shown in the luncheon given by Mrs. George Thomas Palmer at the Abraham Lincoln Hotel on February 27. This is the first piece of organization work that has been done here.

Doctor Irving Metz, Men's Diocesan Chairman, said: "Mrs. Palmer and I are now trying to line up a worthwhile committee of one man and one woman in each parish throughout the diocese. We hope to have this organization perfected shortly."

"The Diocese of Springfield is rightheartedly with this campaign and is ready to do everything possible to facilitate reaching the total."

Boston, Mass.—An intensive effort is being made during the month of March to increase materially the $20,000 which is now on hand. The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, Bishop of Massachusetts, is actively at work with his St. Luke's Committees, one of which, the Men's he heads. Recently Bishop Slattery said: "Dr. Teusler has been an inspiration to every one who has met him. We believe in him and shall do our very best to help him."

Mrs. Lowell has manifested keen interest in the campaign and has every reason to believe that her part of it will be a success. Speaking of the campaign Mrs. Lowell said: "The women of this diocese, together with many others of different denominations and interests will do their part toward raising the woman's million."

Prince Chichibu, Emperor's Brother, Praises Hospital: Guests at a dinner held on Lincoln's birthday by the American Association in Tokyo, Japan, were surprised and at the same time gratified by the allusion made to St. Luke's Hospital by Prince Chichibu, brother of the present Emperor of Japan. The Prince said, in part, "Our people owe you a great debt of gratitude for your latest gifts, St. Luke's Hospital and the Rockefeller Library."

It is almost unprecedented for a member of the Imperial Family of Japan to make an utterance of approval to a "foreign project" in public. It is true that the father of this Prince gave $25,000 to this fund, but to have the Heir presumptive to the throne publicly state at a dinner his gratitude is a unique endorsement.

This enthusiastic stamp of approval by one of the most honored men in Japan surpasses all of the praise of the project that has been voiced by the most prominent men in the nation.

Millions Starving.

Asserting that they are so moved by the "frightful tragedy" which is presented in the plight of the starving millions of North China that they "cannot stay their efforts" to provide relief for the famine sufferers, the directors of China Famine Relief, U. S. A., 205 East Forty-second Street, New York City, have issued a statement of facts and an appeal to the American people

The famine relief directors declare that out of the total of between 12,000,000 and 20,000,000 men, women and children who are facing death from starvation 4,000,000 can now be reached by relief, and that for that purpose $4,000,000 is immediately needed. This information is based upon a cablegram just received from the American Advisory Committee, which is supervising the application of American relief funds in the famine areas.

An Urgent Appeal.

Charleston, S. C.

To the Friends of Honest Work Among the Negroes:

In sending our fifteenth annual appeal for funds, we record our profound regret of the death of our late beloved Bishop Guerry, who always did whatever he could for the advancement of our work. While we shall greatly miss his special interest in our field of labor, we are glad to note that his successor, the Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, will take up where he left off and will give his influence and aid in promoting the work.

We express here also our deep appreciation to those of our friends within and without the diocese, who have been helping us for a long time in our urgent missionary work. It is due to their encouragement and generous assistance that we have been able to carry on, and we still need their Christian sympathy and help.

During this year, we have had two severe blows to our work: The first and the greater was the loss by death of our beloved Diocesan. The second was the violent storm which hit the South in September and completely destroyed the crops of most of our people in the country districts. They will not be able to give us the usual financial help.

To continue and extend our program of educational, industrial and religious work during the year 1929, we are forced to look to our friends within and without the diocese for financial support. While our people, as a whole, are faithful and are making sacrifices in supporting the work, they are not able to carry the load alone.

Our schools and missions, for the most part, are among the country people in the very heart of the Black Belt in South Carolina, where community work and educational and religious training are a crying need.

In our schools, we are rendering a great service. We are taking the lead in doing what the public school system is not able to do at the present, and the county authorities heartily approve our work. These schools are imperative. We are endeavoring to give a training of the head, of the hand and of the heart, which will make good citizens.

Furthermore, our mission schools are greatly needed to furnish leaders among our people in the country districts and also to furnish students for Voorhees School, Denmark, S. C., and for other schools for the training of leaders. The growth of the Church in the South will depend upon the reaching of the masses and giving them both a secular and religious training.

To carry on our program of development, we are in urgent need of money for salaries for missionaries, nurses and industrial teachers, and to erect church and school buildings. Funds are also needed to complete payment on rectories for Sumter and Summerville.

The list of some of our most urgent needs follows:

$10,000	For salaries for industrial teachers, missionaries, and maintaining the work.
4,000	Toward salaries for four experienced trained nurses to work in the rural districts. One is at work.
3,000	Toward a Young People's Camp.
1,000	For scholarships for deserving and needy students.
10,000	For church edifice, College Center, Orangeburg.
2,000	Toward equipment for mission schools.
50,000	For new buildings and extending the work in the country districts.

Please send whatever you may give to this urgent and most deserving mission work to E. L. Baskervill, Archdeacon, 54 Bogard St., Charleston, S. C., or to Bishop Albert S. Thomas, 48 King Street, Charleston, S. C.

Thanking you in advance for whatever you may send, and with deepest gratitude for past favors, I am

Very gratefully yours,

E. L. Baskervill,
Archedacon.

Rural Church School, April 1-12.

The third annual Rural Church School of the Vanderbilt University School of Religion at Nashville, Tenn., will be April 1-12. The Rural Church School brings together a carefully selected group of rural church pastors of all denominations to consider the problems of the rural church community and rural life in its widest sense.

A feature of the school is that it is the only interdenominational school of Religion south of New York for the training of religious workers. Twenty denominations from seventeen states were represented last year. The enrollment in 1928 was 377. This year about 400 can be taken care of. These men have been selected from more than 1,000 applicants, on the basis of their proved leadership ability, their personality and training.

The faculty for the Rural Church School is made up of outstanding leaders in rural church community development. They are men who know the work actually as well as in theory, and by lecture and informal discussion give the students the benefit of their knowledge and experience.

A few of the courses of study which show the breadth of the work that will be done are: Rural Social Problems; Farm Homes; The Church and the Farmer's Business; Song Leadership; Community Leadership, and Community Recreation. Public addresses will supplement each field of study covered.

The Rural Church School is a part of a comprehensive expansion program of the Vanderbilt School of Religion, which will include the publication of bulletins for the use of rural pastors on such subjects as Rural Church Building Plans, Religious Education Programs for the Country Community, and other subjects important to the rural church worker.

Dr. Charles J. Calpin, Director of the Bureau of Farm Population and Rural Life, U. S. Department of Agriculture, says of the Rural Church School: "I do not need to be a man of superhuman wisdom to predict that this Vandervilt Rural Church School will be epoch-making in the South and in the nation."

Dependent on Good Friday Offerings.

The International Hebrew Christian Conference which met in Warsaw in 1927 agreed that the literature available for distribution among Jews interested in Christianity is so out of touch with present conditions as to be useless.

The Episcopal Church, through the Department of Missions, hopes to be able to do its share in producing reading material, which will be effective. To accomplish this object, however, it is necessary that the Church show a larger interest in the annual Good Friday Offering than ever before. Parishes already interested are not asked to increase their contributions; but parishes which hitherto have overlooked this opportunity are asked to support it this year.

It is most fitting that the Church should turn to this Offering to secure the comparatively small sum needed to begin a tactful, loving Christian approach to the Jews, the racial brethren of our Lord. For years a large part of the amount contributed has gone to Bishop MacInnes, who represents the whole Anglican Communion through "The Jerusalem and the East Mission". On his staff of clergy at St. George's Cathedral in the Holy City is the Rev. H. Danby, especially assigned to Christian contacts with Jews. Our share in this work must not cease, nor can we delay attempting our duty in the United States.

Another priest on the staff of this cathedral is the Rev. C. T. Bridgeman, American Educational Chaplain in Jerusalem. As member of the faculty of the Armenian Seminary, he teaches Practical Theology, Preaching and English to candidates for the ministry.

Bridgeman's support, and also that of the Rev. J. Panfil in Mosul, Iraq, comes entirely out of the same Good Friday Offering. Have we not here a sufficient variety of objects to enlist the interest of every parish?

New Bible Class Lessons.

An announcement of interest to all Bible Class leaders and Church School Superintendents, has been made by the National Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Beginning with April, 1929, Brotherhood leaders will prepare and George W. Jacobs & Company of Philadelphia, will publish a course of lessons for use by Bible Classes in the Episcopal Church. The course will be based upon the International Uniform Lesson Outlines, adapted to the use of our Church, the class quarterly and the teacher's helps will be written by Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and special articles from leading Bishops in the Church will be included from time to time.

The International Lessons for Adult Bible Classes are already being used by many in the Episcopal Church, it is said, and about ninety per cent of Bible Classes in other communions have been using these lessons for years. This makes possible a concentration of Biblical scholarship on the passage of the day and the publication of a large number of helps at a small cost for the teacher. Heretofore, however, there have been no helps on these lessons written from the Church standpoint and published by Church publishing houses. The new series now arranged for meets this defect and makes it possible for Bible Classes in the Episcopal Church to use these lessons acceptably. The editors of this series will endeavor to provide a course of Bible study lessons suitable for use in the average adult class of the average parish, whether taught by the rector or by a layman. The aim will be to lead the class to the direct study of the Bible itself, with emphasis upon the practical application of the lesson to present-day conditions and the problems of Christian living.

The price of the quarterly for the members of the class will be seven cents per quarter, or twenty-eight cents per annum. The teachers' helps will be published in The American Church Sunday School Magazine, at fifteen cents per month, or $1.50 per annum. Full information regarding the cost can be obtained from the publishers or from the Brotherhood.

Rural Life Sunday.

At its recent meeting the Home Missions Council, representing twenty-six different denominations, officially approved the keeping of an annual "Rural Life Sunday".

"Resolved, That the Home Mission Council approve the suggestion that the constituent denominations of the Home Missions Council observe, where possible, the fifth Sunday after Easter in each year as "Rural Life Sunday", this to be done in such ways and by such means as the various church organizations and local conditions permit," reads the resolution passed by the Council.

Some of the denominations have offered special prayers to God for His blessing on crops and soil for years past. Now it is proposed to invite all churches not only to pray for flocks and herds and crops, but for the husbandman himself—the spiritual, intellectual and social life of those who grow the food and feed the roots of the nation's life.

Dr. C. J. Galpin, of the United States Department of Agriculture, said when he heard of the action taken by the Home Missions Council, "What a vital thing to do! Should the Government of the United States, the governments of the several states, and colleges and schools and farm organizations unite with the churches in keeping an annual 'Rural Life Sunday' no one can estimate the results of such observance". This is the verdict of others acquainted with and interested in the country life of America.

The Episcopal Church, at its National Convention in Washington, approved the suggestion that its clergy include the subject of rural work in their sermons on the fifth Sunday after Easter, and no doubt other churches will take similar action.

Suggested ways of observing Rural Life Sunday include special prayers, sermons on "The Importance of Rural Life and Work", addresses to Sunday schools on such topics as "Jesus, the Good Shepherd", "The Parable of the Sower", debates by Young People's Societies on such questions as; "Resolved, That the Country Church is more important than the Country School", special services for farm organizations, and rural life plays and pageants.

Kanuga Lake Camp Site to Become Church Property.

Many will recall the Summer Conferences conducted by the Carolina dioceses at Kanuga Lake near Hendersonville, N. C. Last August representatives of twelve states attended. These and many others will rejoice to know that the purchase of this beautiful property for the permanent use of this work is now practically certain; $87,000 of the $100,000 needed has been assured. Both Bishop Finlay of Upper South Carolina and Bishop Thomas of the Diocese of South Carolina, are showing keen interest, and taking active part in the efforts being made to secure the camp site.

Bishop Finlay recently returned from a trip to Hendersonville and Asheville, N. C., where he took the preliminary steps toward drawing up the final papers.

The property, which is to be held by a board of trustees representing the various participating dioceses, will be run on practically the same schedule as that of last summer: beginning June 12 the different diocesan and inter-diocesan conferences will be accommodated until the first of August, from which time it will be operated on a hotel basis.

The program of activities will extend to the first week in September.

The faculty membership includes three bishops: the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, the Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas and the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay.

Balanced Budget.

Statistics generally may "leave you cold", but can such be the case with any earnest Church member in the consideration of the following, addressed by the Department of Finance of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church

To the Church

Resolution of General Convention adopted October 24, 1928:

Resolved, That, First, each Diocese and Missionary District shall annually on or before January 15, submit to the National Council a statement of the amount which it expects to pay to the National Council towards the Church's Program for the ensuing year, and that, Second, the National Council, at its first meeting fort he year, shall adjust the actual appropriations for the year to an amount not to exceed the total income to be expected from these estimates, plus amounts expected from other sources.

The National Council makes the following report:

Budget for 1929 as approved by General Convention	$4,224,670.00
Estimated Income from Trust Funds and from United Thank Offering	718,870.00
Balance apportioned as quotas to the Dioceses	$3,505,800.00
Dioceses report that they expect to pay in 1929 on these quotas	2,829,693.00
Balance of quotas not raised		$ 676,107.00
Towards this difference the Council has available:
Miscellaneous Income	75,000.00
Balance of 1927 Surplus	32,539.09
Estimated Surplus of 1928	100,000.00
Balance of 1928 Contingent Fund	25,654.14
Estimated Lapsed Balances 1929 Budget	250,000.00
		$ 483,193.23
Net shortage, to meet which appropriations must be reduced		$ 192,913.77

To meet this shortage and balance the budget, the Council on February 7 reduced appropriations for 1929 in the amount of $193,061.

In the bulletin carrying this report there follows the report from each diocese and district and a detailed statement of the reductions in appropriations.

Of the ninety-eight dioceses and districts, twenty-eight report that they expect to pay what was assigned them. Two, Southern Ohio and Eastern Oregon, have promised to pay more than requested.

The following is a summary of the reductions in appropriations for 1929:

	Saving
1. Administration	$ 27,484
2. Cooperating Agencies	10,550
3. American Church Institute for Negroes	10,000
4. Continental Dioceses	24,535
5. Continental Missionary Districts	41,093
6. Foreign-Born Americans Divisions	2,000
7. Extra-Continental, Domestic. Latin-American and Foreign Districts	72,399
8. Taylor Hall, Bishop Tuttle House, Windham House	2,000
9. Conference for Missionaries and Unassigned Items	3,000
	$193,061

$193,061 less than the amount deemed necessary by our Church officials to carry on OUR Church's Mission! Is this to be our response to our blessed Saviour's Commission to His followers: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature?"

Episcopal Church Home Receives Generous Bequest.

The Board of Governors of the Episcopal Church Home, Washington, has announced the receipt of a gift of $51,700 from the estate of the late Mrs. Rose Keeling Hutchins. The bequest was made in accordance with Mrs. Hutchins' will, wherein she devised her entire residuary estate to the trustees, to be distributed in their discretion to organized charities in Washington for the benefit of children and aged women.

By reason of this bequest, the board of Governors of the Home are having plans made for new buildings to serve a greater number of people. The first building in this plan will be a memorial to Mrs. Hutchins. The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., in speaking of this gift to the Home, said:

"I have known but few, if any, institutions that have grown with such remarkable rapidity or that have been administered with greater consecration and more intelligent zeal.

"It was a recognition of this that prompted the trustees of the estate to donate this splendid gift."

S. S. Institute.

The March meeting of the Sunday School Institute was held in the new parish house of St. Paul's Church, Church Road, on Tuesday, March 19, at 8 P. M. At this meeting, a dramatic production was featured, to satisfy in part of the disappointment caused by the unavoidable abandonment of the abandonment of the Christmas play in December. The play presented was entitled "Not God", and was given by a group of people from St. John's Church (Norwood Parish), Bethesda, under the direction of the Rev. Clarence P. Parker, rector.

Rev. Z. B. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Parish, preached at the evening service in his former parish, the Church of the Saviour, Philadelphia, March 10. He was the preacher at the Lenten noonday services at St. Thomas' Church, New York City, March 11-15.

Slides of General Convention Obtainable.

Notes and slides for an illustrated lecture on "The General Convention in the National Capital" have been prepared by the National Cathedral Association and may be obtained from this organization by writing to the Executive Secretary of the Association on Mt. St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

This lecture has been arranged especially for the use of delegates who wish to give to their friends at home some of the inspiration and information gained at the great gathering in October. It will be gladly sent anywhere in the United States, the only charge being for expressage on sending and returning the slides. Included in the slides are scenes in and around Washington, monumental and patriotic shrines, pictures of Convention gatherings and views of Washington Cathedral and several of its associated institutions as they appear today and as they will appear, when completed.

The text, in type written form may be followed as it is written or may be used only as an outline. It gives descriptions of important buildings in Washington, reports of the notable Convention services and a brief outline of the history and purpose of the Cathedral undertaking in the capital.

American Woman Awarded Rare Ecclesiastical Honor.

Miss Claudine Elizabeth Clements, a member of the faculty of the National Cathedral School for Girls on Mount Saint Alban, has been accorded an ecclesiastical honor rarely received by American women. She has been awarded the Lambeth Diploma of Student in Theology, First Class, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The degree, "Student in Theology", is to be formally conferred upon Miss Clements in the near future by the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, in behalf of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

A Devoted Layman Passes On.

Captain Charles L. Johnson, long a devoted layman of the Church and treasurer of the Synod of the Province of the Southwest, died March 9, at his residence at Waco, Texas. Burial service was held at St. Paul's Church, Waco, with interment in Oakwood Cemetery March 12.

Captain Johnson, who was a member of the Louisiana Cavalry Regiment during the War Between the States, moved to Texas in 1865 and located at Waco. He became prominent in the lumber business throughout the Southwest and was looked upon as one of the leading business men of Texas.

He always had a great love for his Church and for forty-four years served as a vestryman, during most of which time he was Senior Warden. He represented the Diocese of Texas at a number of General Conventions, as a lay delegate and was treasurer of St. Paul's Church Sunday School for fifty years.

In addition to his church work, Captain Johnson was a public spirited citizen in an unusual degree. He helped found the United Charities of Waco and was president up to the time of his death, and was a former president of the Waco Y. M. C. A. and was commander of the Pat Cleburne Camp of Confederate Veterans. His loss is a definite loss to the Episcopal Church in the Southwestern territory.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

St. Paul's, Baltimore.

On Passion Sunday Bishop Coadjutor Helfenstein confirmed eighty-three persons in St. Paul's Parish, Baltimore; twenty-six in the church and fifty-seven in St. Paul's Chapel.

Bishop Charles Fiske is the preacher at the midday services this week, and Father Shirley C. Hughson and the rector, Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, Holy Week and Good Friday.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. John I. B. Larned, Suffragan Bishop.

The history of St. George's parish, Flushing, was held recently in connection with the start of an effort to raise $250,000 to build a new parish house in this old parish. First established in 1702, the parish was chartered June 17, 1761, under King George III.

Bishop Larned.

Bishop Larned is taking his place in the diocese and in the community. At some of his first confirmation engagements he has been making stirring addresses, especially valuable to the young people at the time of their admission to full citizenship in the church. At Albee's Theatre he preached the sermon at the first of the sixth annual series of noon-day Lenten services under the auspices of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches. This series covers three weeks, terminating on Good Friday. Everywhere he makes an impression of a man of ability, of earnest devotion, and of a genial and lovable personality.

Field Missionary.

The recent report of the Field Missionary of the Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau, Miss Sidney Smith, is full of interest. Her work lies largely in the public institutions of the two counties. Through contact with the children's court, with the society for the prevention of cruelty to children, the overseers of the poor, and with the cooperation of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, she has reached and ministered to many poor people, and distributed hundreds of useful gifts to unfortunate children. A relation has been established between Sunday Schools and close-by missionary work. Miss Smith has become a familiar figure at the Homes for the Aged in both counties. Her work is a valuable adjunct to the Archdeaconry.

Words by the Bishop.

The choir of St. Luke's Church, Brooklyn, recently sang Macfarlane's "Message From the Cross". It is of interest that the words for this cantata were compiled by Bishop Stires.

Help Build New Parish House.

An exhibit of books, pictures, documents and other properties relating to the history of St. George's Parish, Flushing, was held recently in connection with the start of an effort to raise $250,000 to build a new parish house in this old parish. First established in 1702, the parish was chartered June 17, 1761, under King George III.

Sixtieth Anniversary.

The sixtieth anniversary of St. Stephen's Parish, Brooklyn, occurred February 21. Lent being an unpropitious time for a proper commemoration, the observance of the anniversary has been set for Whitsuntide. It is hoped that some substantial improvement to the church property can be made to mark the anniversary.

The Originator of the Harmon Award.

The many friends in this diocese of Archdeacon Russell, of Lawrenceville, Va., were pleased to hear of the award of the Harmon Gold Medal to him. Surely it was a well-earned recognition. No accounts of the award, so far as I have seen, have mentioned that Mr. Wm. E. Harmon, the originator of the award, and of other fine philanthropies, was himself a Churchman. He was for years a vestryman of Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights, and a member of the Board of Managers of the Church Charity Foundation of Long Island. Few even of his friends were aware of the wide scope of the generous extent of his philanthropic gifts.

St. Luke's, Tokyo.

Bishop Larned made an address about St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, to a select company of members of this diocese at the residence of the Misses Pierrepont, Brooklyn. Interest in this great project is growing in this diocese, and it is ardently hoped that Long Island will do its full part in the completion of the work.

The annual Lenten retreats at St. Paul's, Clinton Street, Brooklyn, will be held this year March 22 for women and girls and March 23 for men. Both will be conducted by the Rev. W. M. V. Hoffman, S. S. J. E.

A notable confirmation class of ninety persons was presented to the Bishop recently at St. Paul's, Flatbush.

Lenten Preachers in New Orleans.

Among the Lenten preachers in New Orleans under the direction of the Church Club have been the Rt. Rev. Dr. Casady of Oklahoma, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Cook of Delaware, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Davenport of Easton and the Rev. Malcolm Lockhart of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge.

Legacy.

Trinity Church, Natchitoches, has recently received a legacy of $2,000 from the estate of the late Mrs. McComb, who was a member of that congregation.

Grace Memorial Church, Hammond.

The yearly congregational meeting of Grace Memorial Church, of Hammond, was held February 8 at the Oaks Hotel, where a dinner was served. The object of the meeting, besides the desire of the rector, Mr. Wharton, to promote good fellowship, was to retire the vestrymen who had served their terms and elect others in their places.

Those elected are: the Messrs. Henry A. Mentz, Hatton Henkel, Richardson Leverich, H. S. Britton, J. F. Saxon and Captain R. J. McBride.

Hon. Percy Saint, Attorney-General, at the close of the meal consented to give an address in his usual eloquent style. He was followed by an expression of interest and encouragement from Mr. Furnam Pearce, whose loyalty and good works are unceasing. Mr. Wharton made a talk. A report was read by the treasurer, Mr. Roy Wilcombe, showing the church to be in a fairly prosperous condition. The past year shows many signs of advancement.

Among these, is the transforming, by anonymous donors, of our little chapel into an attractive place for the holding of the greater part of the Lenten services. On a slightly raised platform, furnished with cushions to represent the communion rail, has been built an altar credence table, lectern, and at the door of exit an alms table.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

St. Augustine's, Savannah.

Church reports dealing with statistics of baptisms, confirmations, marriages, and finances are usually dry, but the following setting forth, among other things the social service activities of St. Augustine's Church, Savannah, is more than interesting.

The closing of Negro banks in Savannah a year ago played havoc with the economic condition of Negroes in that most of their savings of years were deposited with these institutions. Their spirit was broken, and morale almost gone.

The congregation of St. Augustine's, composed of 138 communicants under the leadership of Archdeacon J. Henry Brown, vicar of the Mission, stepped into the breach and the following items show how well they have wrought.

From March, 1928, to February, 1929, 638 meals have been given to residents and transients; thirty-seven pairs of shoes, new and used, furnished Negro children; also 145 pieces of wearing apparel and other garments; thirteen families had their house rents paid for one or two months; 123 baskets of groceries given to as many families; seventy jobs found for men, women, boys and girls; ninety-six tubercular patients treated in sixty-four clinics held in the parish hall; twenty-five sputum examinations made; 400 Alpine lamp treatments given; fifty quarts of milk and 114 free prescriptions for medicine given out.

The congregation is not composed of well-to-do Negroes, but of wage-earners, cooks, porters, washerwomen, day workers and farm laborers. It is hoped that the congregation may continue this work until things return to normal.

QUINCY.

Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Bishop.

Grace Church, Galesburg, Branching Out.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, Galesburg, Ill., held an interesting meeting recently when it invited all of the social workers of the city to come and be their guests for an afternoon. The visitors made the program by telling of their work. There was not time enough to hear all they had to say, so many went away anticipating the meeting next year when others will be heard. An interesting thing discovered was the large number of women of Grace Parish who are serving on boards and committees of the various local institutions. It is the plan of the rector to have a meeting of these women and let them plan the programs for the future.

The parish has taken another forward step and this time in the way of organizing the man power. A Brotherhood Chapter has just been organized with five men in it. N. C. Newlin, formerly of Fort Worth, Texas, is the director. The Bishop has already invited two of the men to go out in the diocese and do some lay reading in the vacant missions.

Gift of a Parish House to St. James, Goshen.

The entire parish of St. James, Goshen, is rejoicing over the gift of a parish house recently received. Mrs. John W. Egbert has purchased the two-story and basement brick building adjoining the church, and after the necessary alterations have been made, will present it to the parish to be used as a parish house.

The vestry and guilds will undertake the furnishing and up-keep of the property. Possession of the property cannot be had until June 1, but it is expected that it will be remodeled and furnished, ready for actual use by the first of September, when the fall activities begin.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Central Committee on Christian Social Service Meets in Harrisburg.

The Central Committee on Christian Social Service of the five dioceses in Pennsylvania recently met at the Penn-Harris Hotel, Harrisburg, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, chairman, presiding. Among those present were Bishop Darlington, Clinton Rogers Woodruff, Esq., of the Diocese of Pennsylvania; the Rev. R. F. Kline, of Wilkes-Barre, representing the Diocese of Bethlehem; Mrs. Harriet Powell and Miss Thompson, of Erie, representing the Diocese of Erie, and Dr. Wm. J. Middleton, of Steelton, representing the Diocese of Harrisburg. Letters of regret were received from the Bishop of Pittsburgh, the Bishop of Erie, and the Rev. Robert Kreitler, of Scranton.

Mr. George Bedinger, of the Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania, was present by request of the chairman. The chairman stated that he had agreed to be the sponsor for a round table discussion at the meeting of the Pennsylvania Conference on Social Welfare on "The Relation of the Church to Private Welfare Agencies". Mrs. Harriet Powell will be sponsor for another, the subject being "The Part That Social Hygiene Plays in a Well-Rounded Community Health Program". Bishop Darlington addressed the meeting relative to the social welfare work of his diocese and its agencies in those state institutions located in the Diocese of Harrisburg.

Dr. Woodruff and Mr. Bedinger addressed the Committee relative to wel-

COLLECT FOR SUNDAY NEXT BEFORE EASTER.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who, of Thy tender love towards mankind, hast sent Thy Son, Our Saviour, Jesus Christ, to take upon Him our flesh, and to suffer death upon the cross, that all mankind shall follow the example of His great humility; Mercifully grant, that we may both follow the example of His patience, and also be made partakers of His resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ANNUNCIATION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

We beseech Thee, O Lord, pour Thy grace into our hearts; that, as we have known the incarnation of Thy son Jesus Christ by the message of an angel, so by His passion we may be brought unto the glory of His resurrection, through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECTS FOR GOOD FRIDAY.

Almighty God, we beseech Thee graciously to behold this Thy family, for which Our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men and to suffer death upon the cross; Who now liveth and reigneth with Thee, and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, by Whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified; Receive our supplications and prayers, which we offer before Thee for all estates of men in Thy Holy Church, that every member of the same in his vocation and ministry, may truly and godly serve Thee; through Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Merciful God, Who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made, nor desireth the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, infidels and heretics; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR EASTER EVEN.

Grant, O Lord, that as we are baptized into the death of Thy Blessed Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ, so by continually mortifying our corrupt affections we may be buried with Him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for His merits, Who died, and was buried, and rose again for us, Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

AND THERE CAME ALSO NICODEMUS—

Edith Mirick.

Ah, Nicodemus,
You whom they call the great,
You are too late,
My fine be-linened gentleman!
You do most crassly err
In bringing now your aloes and your myrrh.
This Body is too proud
For need of shroud.
Once, under night's cover, you sought Him out;
Went to Him troubled and in doubt.
You were too timid, my fine sir,
To seek salvation in the sun. And now—
The door is closed. You can but spice your cup
Of penitence with aloes, wrap your own soul up
In this un-needed linen—in this myrrh.

Holy Week.

The Lenten season is now approaching its culmination in Holy Week, the climax in the life of Jesus. The Christian world is observing it with widening extent and it may again become a universal observance and bond of Christian unity and means of grace in all Christian Churches. Its central importance is emphasized in the New Testament by the fact that one fourth of the four Gospels and one seventh of the entire New Testament is devoted to this week. Four events in it stand out conspicuous and supreme.

The week opened on Palm Sunday with the triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem. His humble followers planned to signalize His entry with a triumphal demonstration, thinking that He was going to His coronation as King in that City. It was a humble procession, and yet it meant more for the world than any imperial pageant or presidential inauguration. When they reached the summit of the Mount of Olives where the city of Jerusalem broke upon the view, Jesus burst into tears. What a strange and incredible interruption of the festivities of the hour! There lay before the eyes of Jesus the chosen city of God, the holiest city on earth, with its marble temple and its golden roof flashing in the foreground. Why did Jesus weep over that city? Let Him go and weep great, hot tears over apostate Samaria and pagan Rome, but should He not beam in benediction over Jerusalem with all its sacred associations and hopes? Yet He broke down and sobbed like a child. He wept over the city because of its sin. How much there is to weep over in any great city! Who can look upon it with open and penetrating eyes and not weep? Holy city though it was, yet Jerusalem was saturated with sin, and it had upon its skirts this deepest guilt of all that it was even at this hour rejecting its own Messiah. The deepest guilt of any city is not its political corruption or its crime and social vice, but its spiritual guilt in its blindness to the eternal values and obligations of the things of the spirit.

Jesus passed on into the city and went up into the temple and there a shocking sight met his eyes. The precincts of that holy place had been turned into a scene of noisy hawking of merchandise and all manner of dishonesty was running rife. May not the business of the city, with all its modern iniquities, not only swirl in a tumultuous torrent around all our churches, but actually invade their worship and infect it with the spirit and methods of the world? Jesus, in righteous indignation, drove these money changers out of the temple and declared that they had made his Father's house a den of thieves. Evening came on and Jesus with His disciples returned to Bethany. What had been accomplished towards crowning Jesus as King? Nothing. The expectations of the disciples were met with tragic disappointment. But Jesus Himself had no such disillusionment, for He knew that the kingdom of God cometh not with observation. We should know this and not think that any outward show of splendid pageantry and ritual or that any worldly means can bring in the reign of Christ on earth. He does not strive nor cry in the marts of men or use their methods of gaining crowns and kingdoms, but He mounts to His throne in human hearts by the quiet indwelling and working of His Holy Spirit.

An epochal event in this week was the final meeting of Jesus with His disciples in an upper room in Jerusalem. Here He drew them close to Himself in those intimate table-talks that are the most precious and wonderful in the literature of the world. He spoke to them of the Father's love and care, of the immotral hope of faith, and especially of His own continued presence with them in the person of the Spirit after His withdrawal. These are the inner shrine of Christian faith and fellowship and are the very bread of life to the believer's soul. The meeting culminated in the transformation of the ordinance of the Passover into the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, the old being transfigured into the new. The symbols are common and universal, illustrating the universality of the Gospel, bread to the soul. They are frail and perishable, and yet how imperishable is their significance. This simple ordinance of bread and wine has come down through the centuries upheaved in a hundred revolutions and convulsions in which no empire or human social fabric has survived, and yet this slender thread remains unbroken and is as fresh and vital in its meaning as ever. It is everywhere throughout Christendom the one Christian bond that all the followers of Jesus observe, and they derive from it strength and comfort to their faith and fellowship. It is as beautiful as it is simple and universal and, like bread and light, ministers alike to rich and poor, peasant and prince, and illiterate and scholar. It is a golden linked chain binding all the Christian generations into mystic unity and stretching from Christ's first to His final coming.

Events moved on through the shadows and sorrows of Gethsemane and the mockery of the trial to Calvary, the place of the skull. What a significant emblem of man's sin and death! The tongue that could speak eloquent words and sing matchless music is now silent in its withered dust. The eyes that once were full of light and love are now two great empty caverns staring blankly around. And the great golden bowl of the brain, once the seat of intelligence and affection and will, that spun the centuries of human history and built all the glorious fabrics of human genius, is now a frightful void. It was appropriate, then, that on this limestone knoll, shaped into the likeness of a skull, should be erected that cross that was to bear the guilt of all human sin and cure its woes. The cross is the distinctive fact of Christianity, the feature that separates it from all other religions and makes it the redemption of the world. It declares how great is the guilt of human sin and yet how much greater is the love of God that poured out the sacrifice that could cleanse it away. It is the unapproachable glory of Christ who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and give Himself for the life of the world. Sacrifice weaves its scarlet thread into the whole web of the universe. The very limestone rock on which the cross stood was composed of the skeletons of myriads of tiny creatures that laid down their lives to compose that ledge that upheld the cross. The animal world is full of affectionate sacrifice, and it comes to its full flower and glory in our human world. But its supreme and final manifestation is in the cross of Christ on which the Prince of Glory died that we might have forgiveness of sin and everlasting life. The Christian world is about to gather and stand around this cross in special reverence and devotion. It makes no mistake in this central faith. Take away the cross and we take away the blood-red heart of Christianity and reduce it to the level of an ethical cult. In the cross of Christ we glory as it towers o'er the wrecks of time and gathers round its head sublime all the light of sacred story.

Crucifixion had its dark shadows dispersed and was lighted up with supernal glory on the resurrection morning. This was the necessary culmination and climax of this Holy Week without which all its promise of light would have been extinguished as a meteor in the night. Christ could not be holden of death any more than the seeds and buds of the springtime can be confined and smothered in eternal sleep when the balmy breath of the returning sun bathes them in its vitalizing warmth. We accept the fact of the resurrection, not only because of the many infallible proofs in which Scripture story has invested it, but because it is the only fact that is big enough to explain Christ, His unique and supreme personality, and His power in the world. There He stands as solidly based as any mountain range, and some extraordinary upheaval is necessary to account for Him. The resurrection is sufficient for this, and nothing else is. It completes and crowns all the facts and doctrines and hope of the Christian life. It shines as the one clear and masterful light in this dark world of sin and death. It is the green mountain top of a far new world. In its light we triumphantly sing, O glorious cross, O resurrection day, and cast our crowns down at the feet of our risen Lord.

Let us prepare for and enter Holy Week in faith and devotion and visit anew and linger around these outstanding events in common with the Christian world, that we may receive new vitality and vigor in our Christian life and service and take up our cross and follow Christ.—Presbyterian Banner.

Ye Shall Be Witnesses.

Palm Sunday and Easter, with their intense appeal for your grateful and absorbing loyalty to Him who gave Himself on the cross for our salvation, draw near. You will not forget that Jesus stood before the multitudes in those last terrible days. "Surely this was a righteous man." was said by a centurion while pacing between the crowds who jeered at the Christ on Calvary.

The Christian has an obligation to bear witness before men concerning his faith in Jesus. Contrary to frequent rumors, it is not so much hatred of God as hunger for divine grace that is just beneath the surface of our times. Everywhere there are folks, young, middle-aged and old, who are in need of only a bit of guidance, a firm declaration, a modest warning against evil. Your example and influence may be the instrument of divine love in turning the scale toward spiritual satisfaction and peace with God.

To your interest in individuals you can justly add a renew and greater appreciation of your Church. Can you think of any institution or society in the whole world that seeks the betterment of men and women with so little selfishness as characterizes the average Christian congregation. In its fellowship men find companions; in its program are revealed the highest duties to God. In its services all receive the grace of God. You will, therefore, not only give the Church the best and most of yourself, but you will bear witness to its value when you meet folk indifferent to its power.—Selected.

GETHSEMANE.

Eleanor Glenn Wallis.

And it was night. The quiet garden kept
Its counsel till the coming of the moon:
And sleep demanded tribute of us. Soon
We knew no longer that the Master wept.
Though we had marked the bloody sweat that leapt
(As if He wrestled in the heat of noon)
While Spirit strove with heaven for the boon
Of strength not long denied Him—yet we slept.

He must have needed human love, although
He could foretell its failure. Twice He came,
To find us sleeping. Thrice before cock-crow
I had forsworn Him—to my grief and shame!
I think that He was lonely to the end—
Without the comfort of one fearless friend.

The Message of Palm Sunday.

They who are interested in the study of mass psychology will find most illuminating material in what took place at the gates of Jerusalem nineteen centuries ago. Much light is shed by St. John on what was the moving cause of that outburst of enthusiasm which compelled the rulers of the Church to say in bitter envy and disgust, "What do we? The world is gone after Him". He states that the miracles of raising Lazarus from the dead impressed the multitude with the conviction that in Him the prophecies of old concerning the coming Messiah had now found their fulfillment. That called for the shouts and hosannas, and He who formerly avoided such demonstrations now permitted Himself to be hailed as Messiah and King.

But how soon the miracle of raising Lazarus from the dead was forgotten by all except the few who had learned to know the Christ more intimately! How quickly that fickle multitude yielded to the influence of the rulers in Church and State! How quickly the hosannas faded and changed to "Crucify Him!" It is for the ignorant in that mass who were swayed from their devotion to Christ to yield to the demand of the rulers to consent to His death that the crucified Lord prayed when He said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do". They were the ignorant and blind who were led by their blind rulers and teachers, and it was for them that the Lord prayed. Can there be any doubt that they were among the 3,000 whom Peter brought back again to their hosanna allegiance when he charged them with the Saviour's death? This was Christ's prayer answered in their case as it was when He prayed for Peter.

The message of Palm Sunday may be briefly expressed in Paul's words, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall". Even so great a miracle as the raising of Lazarus did not suffice to hold that multitude true to their allegiance to Jesus. Something more than a sign from heaven is needed to hold the Christian true to his Lord. There is a world of meaning in Abraham's answer to Dives, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead". Christ must become known to the Christian not by outward signs but by an intimate and inner fellowship with Him. They who are moved to accept Him because of some mass enthusiasm are the first to lose Him and reject Him when the excitement is over and a new and different excitement takes its place. Signs and wonders that appeal to the emotions only are easily forgotten.

The thing that counts, the thing that has staying power, the thing that binds the soul to Christ by cords that cannot be broken, is to know Him as the disciples learned to know Him. The miracles He did in their presence seemed to make no lasting impression. But when the test came and Jesus asked them the question, "Will ye also go away?" how quickly came back the spokesman's answer, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." They had learned to know their Lord by intimate intercourse and fellowship, and when the thought of leaving Him was suggested, they awoke to the realization that they had found in Him what they could by no means find anywhere else. Paul knew Christ and the power of His resurrection, and no power on earth could have separated him from his Lord. "For me to live is Christ" tells the story of his devotion and allegiance. That is the kind of knowledge which Christians need today who are so easily swayed from one allegiance to another. They need to know Him whom to know aright is life eternal. The message of Palm Sunday is, "Learn to know Christ and what His cross means to you, and your soul will never tire saying "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest!"—Selected.

GOOD FRIDAY.

Peter and James and John
The sad tale runneth on—
All slept and Thee forgot;
One said he knew Thee not.
Peter and James and John,
The sad tale runneth on—
I am that one, that Three;
Thus have I done to Thee.

Under a garden wall
I lay at even fall;
I waked. Thou calledst me;
I had not watched with Thee.

Peter and James and John,
The sad tale runneth on—
By the priest's fagot hot,
I said I knew Thee not.

The little maid spake out:
"With Him thou wentest about."
"This Man I never met,"
I hear the cock crow yet.

Meditation.

The season of Lent and especially Holy Week draw us in quiet meditation near to the Saviour in His last days when He was pouring out His life for us and was about to pay the last full measure of His devotion. More and more widely and deeply this time is causing the Christian world to pause in its hurry and think upon the great things of our Christian faith.

We are in danger of losing the art of meditation in our rushing modern world. Many people are always craving a crowd and itching for a new thrill. They seek excitement and society and shun solitude. They have meager inner resources and little contenment and comfort in themselves. We are losing acquaintance with ourselves and may become such strangers to our own souls that we would hardly recognize them on the street. In such a distracting outer life we are losing much that is valuable and fine out of our inner life, and our sense of the spiritual life is being swept away in the worldly flood.

Meditation is the fixing of our minds on a subject and brooding over it until we work our way into its depths and get hold of its roots and relations. It is only by this process that we can digest and assimilate truth into our own thought. The raw materials of knowledge pour into our minds through our senses, but these materials can be shaped into our own knowledge only as we lay hold of them by our mental faculties and mold them into form and meaning. As long as our knowledge is a mere repetition and memory of what others have taught us, we do not know anything by our own perception and grasp of understanding. One may commit to memory a proposition in geometry and not have a glimmer of an idea of what it means; only as one comprehends the mathematical principles involved does he perceive the truth and beauty of the proposition.

Meditation goes deeper than this perception of truth and penetrates into its roots by fibres by the process of mental association. Any idea or object in the mind is a growing thing and begins to sink rootlets and throw out branches and filaments through the mind and thus relates itself to the entire contents of consciousness. One thought suggests another, until the whole world of the thinker is organized around the original fact or idea. All the scattered rays of knowledge and experience are focused in this center until it blazes with light and heat. Then the subject is seen and felt in all its nature and relations and it masters and moves the will.—Exchange.

How Sonny Got His Name.

"What makes them call you 'Sonny'?" Freddy asked one winter day, as the two boys built a snowman together.

Sonny looked a little shy and did not answer.

"Aw g'wan, tell me. I won't tell the other boys."

"If you're sure you won't, go ask my mother. She likes telling the story. I don't."

Freddy was off toward the house at a run, in spite of his two heavy sweaters and his chubby legs. He found Sonny's mother sitting in front of a big wood fire. Quick as wink she had his snow shoes and stockings off, and had him safely huddled in a big armchair beside her.

"Perhaps you didn't know," began the sweet-faced lady, "that until Sonny was three years old, he had the nicest daddy that any little boy could have."

Sonny's mother stopped a moment and gazed into the fire. "Well, to make a long story short, Sonny's father came home very ill one day, and in less than a week he had left us altogether for a better world."

Freddy swallowed a lump in his throat. He had lost a little brother once in this same way.

After a pause, the sweet voice went on:

"I was very ill after that for a time, and little Austin was just beginning to talk. He is a year and a half younger than Sonny or Billy as we called him at that time. The baby was very cross and Billy was the only brightness in a very lonely house.

"For weeks and weeks I thought the sun would never shine again. The days were just as cold as this, but the sun was far behind a cloud. It was too cold and stormy for Billy to go out to play, but he went to the window every little while for fear he would miss his morning greeting to the sun. But the sun did not come, and he would go back to play with his blocks and to get along as well as possible without a daddy's home-coming to look forward to."

Freddy was listening spell-bound.

"It was the stormiest day of all that winter. Old Sol, you know who that is, was buried deep in dark grey clouds. Billy as usual had gone to the window with "Good-morning merry sunshine" on the tip of his tongue. For he was always hopeful. But he didn't say it. There was no sun there to greet. He gazed and gazed. Then he finally came back to his blocks. I thought his cheerfulness was at last wiped out. But in a moment, this is what I heard:

"'Now, p'tend you are the sun.' He placed his biggest block right in the middle of the rug. 'You,' he said to a smaller block, 'shall be mummy.' Then, to the tiniest one of all, 'You'll do for baby.'

"The little voice went on: 'You must shine hard, hard, sun, so my mummy will smile again. Then harder, harder, so baby will stop crying.' Then, 'Oh, look mummy,' he called to me, 'the sun is dancing, and so are you and so is baby.' And as I looked, I saw the blocks jump up and down four or five times.

"The next morning the papers said there had been an earthquake, quite severe, five hundred miles away, but only slight for a half minute here. Billy didn't need this explanation for the dancing blocks.

"'It was the sun fairies dancing, and they made you and Billy dance, too,' he still declared.

"It didn't matter after that, the sun not shining. Billy had his sun game now. And when the earthquake didn't come again to make the blocks dance up and down, he made them dance by moving them and was quite satisfied.

"See the sun dance," he would call with a silvery laugh. Sad as my heart was, I would smile, and one day baby cooed and lisped out, 'Sunny'.

"From that day to this we have called our Billy, 'Sunny'. It was Sunny and that game of his that helped to make us well and happy once again. Now, you know the meaning of his name and how it should be spelled. He is shy, and you're the only boy who knows it, so you had better spell it 'Sonny' like the rest, and keep the secret, too."

When Freddy, in warm stockings and dry shoes, ran out to join his chum, all he could say was: "Gee, I'd like to be a hero!"

And Sunny's face shone something like his namesake's in the sky.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Gerald and the Soap Boys.

There were two of them—a pink soap boy made of rose-scented soap and a black soap baby that smelled like tar. They lay side by side under a wash-rag quilt in the box Aunt Jane had sent Gerald.

Gerald thought they were delightful. He took them out and walked them up and down the playroom and let them ride in his toy wagon and in his electric train. He played with them all afternoon.

"Wash your hands for supper, Gerald," mother called to him. "You can use one of your new soap boys to make yourself clean."

But Gerald didn't want to do that. He played a minute longer and then dashed into the bathroom and ran the water over the tips of his fingers and then wiped them on his towel. There were several black marks there already so the new ones hardly showed.

After supper mother said: "Brush your teeth, Gerald, and wash your neck and ears before you go to bed."

But Gerald never liked to take much time to his washing and anyway, mother gave him a hot bath twice a week and that was often enough for neck and ears, he thought.

He took the soap boys into the bathroom with him but he didn't use them to wash with. There was plenty of soap in the rack, but Gerald didn't use much of that either. It was too much trouble.

He set the soap boys on the window-sill beside his bed and slid in between the covers and tucked his head down into the pillow. For a few minutes everything was very still. Gerald was asleep.

Then Gerald thought he heard a squeaky little voice saying, "You are wrong, as usual. He's much more like me. He's the same color of pink. It shows through quite plainly."

"Nothing of the sort," another voice squealed. "He's like me! He's a black boy! Just look behind his right ear.

And look at his fingernails. They're blacker than I am. Gerald is certainly a black child."

Gerald saw that the soap boys were quarreling in their box.

"There's a perfectly pink patch on his right cheek," the pink soap boy insisted angrily. "That shows that if he were washed, he'd come out that color all over."

"It's just some pink stuff that's stuck there. He's much more black. Look at his hands and his neck," the black soap child sputtered. "He's my twin."

"Oh, dear!" Gerald cried, sitting up in bed, "I knew I looked a little dirty, but I never thought anybody would think I was really as dirty as that."

"You aren't!" squealed the pink soap boy.

"But you are!" the black one laughed.

"I must look in the mirror!" Gerald cried in a fright.

He jumped out of the bed and ran across the room. He noticed that it was morning light now, so he could see quite well. Very carefully he studied his face and hands in the glass.

"I—I'm afraid I do look sort of dark," he admitted. "But I'm going to wash right now until I'm as pink as the pink soap boy."

He turned to explain to the soap boys, but, somehow they had lost their liveliness. They were only pieces of soap again.

"Maybe I just dreamed they talked about me," Gerald decided, "but maybe I'd better wash anyhow so no one else will make a mistake. It wouldn't be much fun, if mother didn't know me in the morning."—Selected.

THE CHALLENGE OF YOUTH.

Oh! youth is the springtime of life and love,
The promise of great things to be,
The time when we build for the Master above,
A life that will please Him to see.

And what shall we put in this life that we build
And plan for the Master in Youth?
Oh! let us put faith in this life that we make
And patience and virtue and truth.

Let us yield all our will to the Master divine
And earnestly strive every day
To make of our lives what our Jesus would wish
And follow His Steps all the way.

True Story of a Little Wilderness Pet.

Devere told me this story of the Mackinaw woods. He was a baby about three years old when it happened. The family were living in a log cabin on timber land owned by Devere's father. His father was "lumbering" at the time, which means that he was cutting down his big trees and hauling them to the saw mill to be made into boards.

Devere says that one lovely spring day he and his mother and sister went walking in the woods. Some one must have lifted the latch and walked in their house while they were away. If it were Goldilocks who did this, she forgot to close the door when she left, because the door was standing wide open when the three returned.

Finding the door thus open, somebody on four feet had walked in before the family returned. Devere found him in the bedroom sound asleep in a corner. He was a soft, pretty little fellow. Devere called his mother and his sister to come and see who was sleeping in the bedroom.

"Why, it is a fawn!" said Devere's mother, "and a fawn is a deer's baby."

Devere petted the pretty animal on his velvety head, and the fawn opened his beautiful eyes. Strange to say, he didn't act afraid. He trusted the baby, too. When he was wide awake he walked around the bedroom and the living room. He allowed the children to pet him and behaved as if he felt perfectly at home.

After a little while the wee fawn walked out of the house and bounded away into the deep woods. Devere almost cried, because he wanted that fawn for a pet.

Next day the fawn came back. He walked to the cabin door, and when it was opened in he came as if he were an old friend.

"The flies are bothering him," said Devere's mother. "That is why he wishes to come into the house."

The children brushed the flies off the fawn's coat and then played with him as if he were a kitten.

Ever after the fawn came every day to see the children. Every day before they invited him into the house they brushed off the flies that troubled him. In a few weeks the little fawn grew so tame that he came from the woods when the children called him. Devere says they didn't give him a name, but called him the "Little Deer", and when they wished him to come to play they would sing out, "Come on, come on, come on!" and the fawn would come leaping from the evergreen thickets.

The little fellow was gentle and liked to be petted. Most of all he liked to have the flies brushed from his velvety body. All sorts of flies troubled the little fawn, and that was doubtless the true reason why he liked to stay in the house when he came visiting, rather than play outdoors.

During the hunting season in the autumn the baby boy's pet stayed close by the house all the time, and other big deer came with him to hide from the hunters.

Next spring back came the little fawn to play with the children again, only of course he was no longer a tiny animal.

Three years the little boy lived in the log cabin in the Mackinaw woods with his family, and all that time the deer came often to be petted and to play with the children.

Devere is a young man now; he says he often wonders if his pet is going to the log cabin expecting to see friends, about what became of his wildwood playmate; and he says that long ago it used to make him feel sad when he thought and finding no one at home to welcome him then or ever after.—Frances Fox, in Exchange.

The Bird That Sold Its Wings.

A little boy named Robert once came home from Sunday school looking very glum.

"I wish I had a fortune," he said. "I'd give anything for a fortune." Just then his mother came in and overheard what he said.

"Bobby, my boy," she said, "would you give anything for a fortune? Ah, Bobby," said his mother, "I don't think you could ever have heard the story of how the skylark sold his wings."

"Oh, Mother, do tell me;" said Bobby. And his mother began:

"Once there lived a skylark who was the finest of his race. One day as he flew over a wood he looked down, and there, traveling over the wide road that ran through it, was the strangest little coach ever seen. It was painted black with yellow stripes, and was drawn by six horses as black as pitch. But what interested him most was the fact that he saw sticking out of the windows of the coach the tails of some worms, and so he flew down to see what this thing might be, and as he drew nearer he heard the coachman calling out: 'Three fine, fat, juicy worms for two feathers. Who'll buy?'

"'That's cheap enough,' the skylark thought. 'I'd give anything for worms, especially big ones.' So he nibbled first at one wing and then at the other, and pulled a feather out of each, bought the worms and hurried away into a dark corner to eat them all by himself.

"Next day he saw the coach again and had another feast. And the next day, too, and the day after that, and the day after that. In fact, he grew fonder and fonder of worms. But, oh! his wings. Soon he lost a sunward race in which he had always been first. Then he was only able to fly just above the trees, then not even as high as that. At last he could not fly at all, but could only hop about in the undergrowth and he could sing no more because of the darkness and chilliness of the wood from which he could not escape.

"When things got as bad as this, he thought upon a good plan for making them better. He worked hard hunting worms and got a large heap of them by the roadside, and when the coach came along he cried to the coachman: 'Please, sir, I have here a lot of worms; how many feathers will you give me for them? And, would you believe it, that hard-hearted coachman simply answered 'My business is worms for feathers, not feathers for worms', and he whipped up his horses and drove away. The poor, foolish little skylark rolled over and died of broken wings and a broken heart.

"When he was found, and the other skylarks saw what had happened they buried him in the wood by the roadside, and over his grave they placed a warning to all other birds, never, never, never to sell one feather of their wings for worms, or for anything else.

"And, Bobby," his mother continued, "Jesus said, What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

Bobby had been following his mother's words carefully. He looked at her when she ceased speaking.

"Mother," he said earnestly, "I think after all I would not give anything for a fortune."—A. D. Belden, in "Stories of the King".

He Told the Truth.

Long ago and far away lived a boy with his mother. His father was dead, and his mother had become very poor. His name was Selim, and he lived in Persia.

At last his mother could keep him no longer and sent him to his uncle in the city of Shiraz, far away over mountains and deserts.

He traveled with a caravan of merchants and helped the servant to care for the camels when they camped at night.

One day they went through a ravine in the mountains. The rocks were high on each side, and the road wound so that one could see only a little way ahead.

They were still in the mountains camped by the side of the little stream, when the night came on, and they and all lay down to sleep.

But in the night robbers came. When Selim woke, he found the merchants and servants bound, and the robbers building a little fire for light and warmth.

They brought the merchants and servants one by one to the chief of the robbers, who tried to make them tell what they had with them.

At last Selim was brought. Selim was so small that the chief wished to waste no time on him.

"My boy," he said, "what money have you?"

"I have three gold pieces sewed up in the corner of my coat," said Selim.

"Three gold pieces!" said the chief. "If that is true, why did you tell me?"

"Because," said Selim, "my mother made me promise three things when I left her. The first was to be kind to any one whom I could help; the second, to pray to God every day; the third always to tell the truth. So I told you the truth."

"Let me see your coat," said the robber chief.

He took it, cut open the corner and took out three gold coins, as they had said.

Then he took from his girdle three more gold coins and gave the six to Selim.

"Sew these all up in your coat," he said, "and always do as your mother said. Had I had such a mother I should not have been a robber.

Then he called the chief of the merchants and said to him, "See that this boy gets to his journey's end without harm, and I will protect you when you come back through the mountains. Persia news boys trained to be kind, to pray, and to tell the truth."—The Book of Life.

Little creatures of the wood,
For some purpose kind and good:
God hath put you there to dwell.
For He doeth all things well.

Little creatures of the wood,
We will treat you as we should;
God hath given both a share
Of His bounty and His care.

He has made the birds and bees,
Are we not much more than these?
As He notes the sparrow's fall—
Hath He not enough for all?

CHRIST CHURCH PARISH

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VIRGINIA

AN APPEAL.

Old Christchurch Parish is renewing her life and beginning to fulfill her true mission in ministering to the social as well as to the religious needs of the people of Middlesex County.

Plans are well under way to begin, immediately, to restore Christ Church, to build a Rectory and Community House on property recently donated and adjoining the Church.

Located as Christ Church is, in the very heart of the country, there is no question but that, through the Community House, the social needs of the people may, to a very great degree, be met. It is planned to make this Community House the social centre of the county. By means of moving pictures, frequent lectures on vital subjects, library and reading rooms, it is believed that such an institution will be of incalculable value to present and future generations.

If this great work appeals to you, as surely it must, will you not send a contribution to help it forward?

Contributions may be sent to:

MRS. WM. C. SEGAR
Stormont, Va.,
or
THE BANK OF MIDDLESEX
Saluda, Va.

"The plans for restoring Christ Church and building a rectory and community house on property adjoining the church, have been carefully examined by me, and I most cordially commend the above appeal. The need for carrying out these improvements is urgent, and I trust that the appeal will enlist your interest and secure a generous contribution."

Mr. Williams:

Dear Sir: As one of the vestrymen, we fully appreciate what you are doing for our work at Christ Church.

I was glad to see in your last week's issue of The Southern Churchman an appeal for funds for the benefit of Christ Church. The Ladies' Guild has struggled for many years to pay off this debt, which could not have been done without outside help.

Mrs. Segar has been working for Christ Church for many years, and, without her help, this church would have been closed years ago.

I fully endorse any appeal she may make in the matter.

Yours truly,
T. Y. LAWSON.

DR. CHARLES L. MINOR.

In Memoriam.

In the death of DR. CHARLES L. MINOR, who died at his home, in Asheville, December 26, 1928, the South lost not only one of its most outstanding physicians, but also one of its foremost churchmen.

Educated as he was at the Episcopal High School in the shadow of, and under the influence of The Virginia Theological Seminary; at an early age Dr. Minor began to take a vital interest in religious matters. This interest increased with the years.

After making his home in Asheville, he allied himself with Trinity Episcopal Church and was a member of that church for thirty-five years—to the day of his death. He served on its vestry for more than twenty-five years and was one of its outstanding members, contributing most liberally to its support and to the support of the general church fund and to the Mission fund.

He was a constant attendant at services and according to the Virginia custom, saw that all members of his family attended also.

The qualities which made him an outstanding figure in National and International Medical affairs, caused him to be one of the foremost religious figures in the South. His religion was part of his daily life and was an ever present help to his patients and to his friends.

His life was an inspiration to all who knew him and he has left an example for those who follow.

W. P. HERBERT.

MRS. BETTIE MORRIS WILLIAMSON.

On Friday morning, March 15, 1929, MRS. BETTIE MORRIS WILLIAMSON, widow of Captain William Garnett Williamson, a gallant officer of the Confederate Army, passed to the Life Eternal. She was a daughter of Bettie Morris and Richard Kenna Cralle.

She is survived by four daughters, Misses Mercer, Elizabeth Morris, Louisa Fenton and Olympia Williamson, all of Richmond, and by three sons, Richard Morris and Charles Minor Williamson, of Deming, New Mexico, and Thomas Hoomes Williamson, of Phoenix, Arizona.

Funeral services were held from the home in Richmond Friday evening. Interment was in Lexington, Virginia, Saturday morning, the Rev. Joseph Dun, D. D., of Richmond, officiating at both services.

Descended from a distinguished ancestry recognized through generations for their charm of manner and gifts in art of speech, she personified the best to which she was heir.

Her early youth, as well as her mature womanhood, were at a time when her State and Southern country were passing through the throes of Reconstruction, with its consequent hardships, deprivations and poverty, all of which with her served to bring the answer to the hymn prophecy that their intent was "Thy dross to consume, and Thy gold to refine".

She lived the complete life, the full grown flower of which is willing and uncomplaining self-sacrifice on the altar of home and family. Her children call her blessed, their call is echoed and re-echoed by innumerable relatives and friends whose lives are the richer and fuller for the torch she has thrown to them.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

R. M. N.

MRS. JENNIE MEADE.

Though not unexpected, the death of MRS. JENNIE MEADE, of East Chicago, Ind., comes as a shock to her many friends throughout Northern Indiana. Mrs. Meade passed from this life to eternal rest Tuesday evening, February 26th, at 10:30 o'clock.

Born in Canada in May, 1870, Mrs. Meade resided there until her marriage to the late William Meade, one time Senior Warden of the Church of the Good Shepherd, at which time, in company with her husband, she came to take up her residence in East Chicago. Always a devout Church woman, it was through her untiring efforts that the Parish in East Chicago was started.

Mrs. Meade was a delegate to the National Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary in Washington last October. Shortly after her return from there she was taken ill and was operated on at St. Catherine's Hospital. Mrs. Meade was Chairman of the Corporate Gift for the Diocese of Northern Indiana, and it was through her efforts that this Diocese was placed on the Corporate Gift honor list at the Triennial. Mrs. Meade served as Secretary-Treasurer of the Woman's Guild of the Church of the Good Shepherd.

Mrs. Meade is survived by her son, William, a sister in California, a sister and brother in Canada.

The funeral was held from the Church of the Good Shepherd Friday morning at 10:30. The Mass was sung by Fr. Hoffenbacher, assisted by Fr. Lemert. Burial was in Ridgelawn Cemetery, Hammond.

"Rest Eternal grant unto her, O Lord."

MARGARET DOWNING WILCOX.

In the death of MRS. MARGARET D. WILCOX not only her church, but the city in which she lived suffered the loss of a great and good woman.

Living through three wars, reared in the old regime of culture and piety, her life extending well into this new day of revolution in life and thought, she finished her course with matured goodness and nobleness of Christian womanhood. Truly she had "fought a good fight, she had finished her course, she had kept the faith".

Compelled to grapple with stern realities of life, "to scorn delights and live laborious days", out of time's crucible of suffering and disappointment came the pure gold of a character perfected in Christian grace and crowned with a consuming influence.

There was evident in her a poise that comes from a well balanced mind—a calm self-restraint that made others in trouble turn to her for advice and counsel. Her power of adaptation was marked. Strong in her religious convictions she nevertheless manifested an originality and independence of thought. Living simply and unostentatiously she went about her tasks "as ever in her great Taskmaster's eye" with diligence and exactness. Amid times of sordidness and changeful affections such devotion as Mrs. Wilcox showed her sister is like an epic—that illumines the dreary darkness. With unsullied integrity and transparent sincerity, she commanded absolute confidence and in her kindness and breadth of compassion she reached out the hand of help to the lowliest. And through all the gigantic changes of these days of unrest and flux she was unmoved in her devotion to her Saviour. Always in Church, she was regarded as the most revered communicant of Trinity Church and her last act was to read a paper before the Woman' Auxiliary. Busy for the Master until the last, she went to her rest with an unfaltering trust "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams".

"The lights have gone out in the Mansion of Clay,
The curtains are drawn, for the dweller's away;
She silently slipped o'er the threshold by night
To make her abode in the City of Light."

the five dioceses of the State to study and use their influence in the forwarding of the same. These measures include the need for at least $18,000,000 during the next biennium, for development and construction work on State institutions for the feeble-minded, the male defective delinquents, the colony for Epileptics, State mental hospitals, construction of a State psychopathic hospital, and other correctional and penal institutions. It was also agreed to urge larger appropriations for the Mothers' Assistance Fund, and to approve the amendments to the marriage laws, and improved probation laws for juvenile delinquents.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

The Budget issued for the year 1929 for expenditures in the Diocese of Michigan, totals $186,860. Among the main expenditures for the year 1929 are the following: For Diocesan Missions, $39,000; for Religious Education, including adult education, normal school, summer conferences, week-day religious education, etc., $9,400; for social service, $15,600; for work among college students, $1,760.

Michigan Churchman Becomes a Quarterly.

The Michigan Churchman will hereafter be published quarterly March 15, May 15, October 15 and December 15, and will be sent to every church family in the diocese. The future Michigan

Churchman will take the form of a religious journal rather than a diocesan newspaper, as it has been published during the past thirty years. The Department of Publicity plans to present not only the work of the diocese and the General Church, outstanding features of parish life and activity, and announcements of meetings and events which are of general interest, but also articles dealing with many phases of religious life and thought. It is now in touch with outstanding leaders of the church with the view to securing special articles of educational value which will appeal to earnest thinking Churchmen.

Campaign Inaugurated.

St. Luke's, Ferndale, one of the younger missions of the diocese, has inaugurated a campaign for $17,000 to erect the first unit of its permanent plant and enlarge its present parish house so as to increase its equipment for Church School and parish activities. The mission was organized in 1921, and held its first service in the public school at Woodward and Nine Mile Road. Recognizing the fine spirit that has been evidenced in the mission under the leadership of the Rev. Gilbert Appelhof, Jr., the Executive Council has made an appropriation of $5,000 from the Centennial Fund Equipment Account on condition that the mission raise the balance necessary, about $12,000. Alabama's Interesting Seminites.

Mr. Hamilton West, of Birmingham, who some months ago did missionary work under Bishop Barnwell, in the Missionary District of Idaho, and Mr. Benjamin I. Harrington and Mr. Hodge Alves, are attending the Theological Seminary in Virginia. Bishop Barnwell was formerly of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, and Mr. West's rector. At Philadelphia Divinity School are also two students from this diocese: Messrs. Robert C. Fletcher and Wm. A. Thompson. Mr. Fletcher has the distinction of being the only deaf mute in any Episcopal seminary in this country. Mr. Harrison has been for several years professor of English in the State University at Tuscaloosa, and is a graduate of Yale University. He served Christ Church, Tuscaloosa, most acceptably, until the coming of their present rector, the Rev. Theodore H. Evans.

Mr. Edgar Scott, who for one year has been doing missionary work in Idaho as lay reader, is now conducting lay services at St. Wilfreds, Marion, Alabama, while pursuing his studies at the State University. St. Winifreds rejoices in an excellent boys' choir, composed of students of the Marion Military Academy, where there is an unusually large number of Episcopalians this session.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Bernard Campbell, of St. Peter's, Westfield, N. Y., has accepted the call to St. Mark's, Buffalo, Diocese of Western New York. He will be in residence at 41 Mayer Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., after St. Mark's day next.

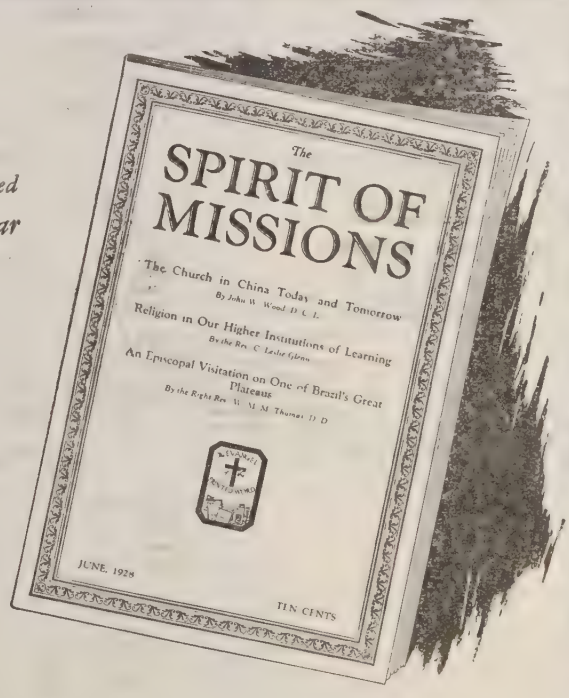
The Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector of St. John's Parish, Savannah, Ga., has accepted a call to St. Paul's Parish, Manhattan, Kansas.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Lyle Saxon Barnett was ordained priest by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop of Texas, on Wednesday, February 20, at St. Mary's Church, Lampasas, Texas. The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. P. Love, of Cameron, Texas, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, Texas. Mr. Barnett, who is a graduate of the University of the South and the Theological Seminary in Virginia, has been since June in charge of the work in Belton and Lampasas with residence in the latter town. He will continue in his present work.

John Arthur Klein was ordained deacon by Bishop McElwain on Saturday, March 2, in Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis. The Rev. D. F. Fenn preached the sermon, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. H. G. Wrinch. The Rev. Mr. Klein will do missionary work under the direction of Archdeacon Couper.

The Rev. Elvrage Ashley McIntosh was ordained to the Diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, D. D., Bishop of Alaska, in St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Wash., on Sunday, March 10. The candidate was presented by the Rev. John Maclauchlan, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church. The sermon was preached by Bishop Rowe.



Mr. MacIntosh, confirmed some years ago in Alaska, was until recently a Methodist minister. He will serve as deacon-in-charge at St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, Alaska.

DEATHS.

The Rev. John Mitchel Page, sixty years old, Secretary of the College of Preachers of Washington Cathedral since December 1 of last year, died Friday afternoon, March 15, at the Emergency Hospital in Washington, from injuries sustained when struck by an automobile truck on Wisconsin Avenue in front of the Cathedral Close earlier in the day.

Funeral services were conducted by Bishop Rhinelander in the Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral on Monday morning, with interment in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City. The clergy of the Diocese of Washington attended the services at the Cathedral in a group.

Health can be earned

Says one of the healthiest men in the world

EVEN a perfect physical specimen like Gene Tunney doesn't just take health for granted. He has worked hard, unceasingly, to build himself up and keep in condition. Realizing the importance of regular habits, he takes no chances.

"I started taking Nujol internally seven years ago. The first month Nujol brought remarkable changes in my physical condition. My elimination became active and normal. My appetite increased and a desire for intensive training was created. Since that time I have taken Nujol about five nights a week. I have regulated myself to the amount necessary to keep my elimination normal. If I discover that I have taken an excess I stop its use for a couple of days, when I renew my daily practice of taking a swallow from the bottle before retiring.

"I have found during my seven years' experience with Nujol that it is not habit-forming, or in any way unpleasant or harmful."

Gene Tunney

Nujol contains no medicine or drugs. It is simply a pure natural substance perfected by the Nujol Laboratories (26 Broadway, New York). It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them) but aids in their removal.

You, too can earn better health with Nujol. Buy a bottle from your druggist on your way home today. Sold only in sealed packages.

A STATEMENT.

About two years ago we began making special appeal for funds with which to purchase a desirable property for a Mission Home adjoining our Mission Chapel. The response was as gratifying as it was unexpected, considering the many worthy objects for which appeals flooded the country.

We have moved into this property where our workers are housed and which serves as a meeting place for the different classes and various activities of our growing mission work.

There is still due upon the property and equipment nearly $3,260.00, which will be due early in April, and we wish to wipe out this indebtedness as soon as possible. We hate to keep begging, but somehow—from somewhere—we must secure funds to clear our Mission Home of edbt. Who will help?

The late Bishop Brown, on two occasions, said, that he considered the work being done at St. Andrew's one of the very best social service works anywhere in the diocese.

The Right Rev. St. George Tucker, present Bishop, endorses th's appeal.

I agree to subscribe to the above fund the sum of $..... , to be paid in cash or istalments as follows.....

Please make checks payable to Rev. W. B. Everett, III, Marshall, Va., or Mr. John T. Ramey, Parish Treasurer, Marshall, Va.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Only those who have a love for souls know how to win them."

"Every good man is a light that God is using to show some sinner the way to heaven."

"The breath of slander may hurt a man's reputation, but can never affect his character."

Easter is the promise of the Lord that all the best and noblest in man shall be renewed, even as growth and bloom and ripening shall not cease.—Helen Keller.

Christ has left behind Him wonderful evidences of His resurrection power. His transformed disciples, upon whom He breathed the Holy Spirit, going about as men who had themselves risen from the dead, and proclaiming the living Christ as the only name under heaven given among men whereby they must be saved—they were in themselves a wonderful proof of His resurrection. Then followed Paul, the apostle of the Resurrection.

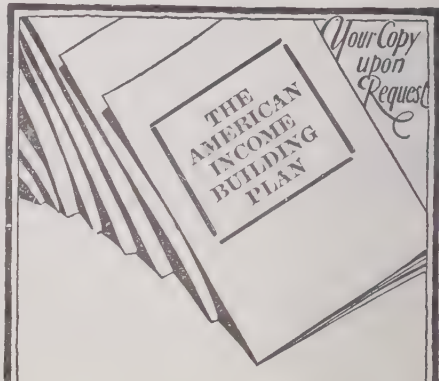
These are critical times of danger. After the great services, honors and consolations, we should stand upon our guard. Noah, Lot, David and Solomon, fell in these circumstances.

"One reason why we must not pull up the tares with the wheat is, that we have not skill for the work."

Be a faithful Christian yourself and you will make it that much easier for somebody else to be one.—Selected.

The word Temperance in the New Testament signifies self-possession; it is a disposition suitable to one who has a race to run, and therefore will not load his pockets with lead."

When the dollar, given to the Lord, looks bigger to the giver than the same amount spent in pleasure or luxury, then his spiritual eyesight is very much impaired.—Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D.



"One day spent with Christ made Andrew want to work for Him all the rest of his life."

The Rev. Dr. J. G. H. Barry is quoted in the paper of one of his former parishes as saying that "not doing wrong, in the sense of merely not breaking the commandments, no more makes a man a Christian than not breaking the piano makes him a musician".

Care is essential in every life; but Jesus warns against the temptation to the anxiety that destroys health, steals away comfort, shortens life, and turns into gall the blessings God gives.

When Easter to the earth returns
Nature exalts and sings,
And on her woodland altar burns
Incense of budding things.

When Easter comes into the heart
It blossoms like a flower,
And kindly deeds like perfume start
To show Christ's quickening power.
—Mary Tarver Carroll.

Triumph

In almost every country neighborhood are trees suggesting especially at this time of the year thought and emulation. One has been struck by lightning some past summer, its trunk torn and scarred with wounds unhealed, much of it blasted and scorched and barren. Another has been torn cruelly by cyclone or the fierce, unrelenting winds of Winter, stripped of its strongest and once most beautiful boughs, perhaps overthrown and lying prostrate. Yet another, standing through many years tall and towering and stately on the bank of creek or river, has fallen because unprecedented flood swept away much of the soil in which it grew. Each of these, smitten, denuded and fallen as may be, if any part of its roots remains in the earth, begins now faithfully to put forth buds and leaves, cheerfully and bravely doing as it can to make the Spring lovelier and offer shelter and food to the swarming multitudes of humble, obscure creatures that must live in and on the trees.

We human beings are smitten, blasted, blighted, by disasters. We are torn and rent by pitiless storms. Foundations on which we trusted to build our lives and establish growth and happiness melt beneath us. As our years increase we leave behind us lengthening lines of graves in which lie buried hopes and dreams, loves and friendships, times and associations which brought us peace and happiness. None of us can be exempt from calamity. We do not know why the calamities come. The ways of God are as much beyond our understanding as the space and eternity in which we live, the beginning of all things and the purposes and processes of creation. Endeavor to comprehend the incomprehensible is waste of time and effort. Minds perverted, sordid, inflated by vanity and vain ambitions, give birth to monstrous or fantastic conclusions leading to confusion and vacuity. Truths the weakest of us can understand, practical duties and obligations and opportunities all of us can see are before us clearly. The stricken trees tell us that however we may be stricken it is for us to do and live and fight and strive as the life left in us may allow, to triumph over all adversity.

The events commemorated by Easter, the awakening and activities of nature at this season, teach us our part, our duty, our privilege, assure us of triumph if we will accept our inheritance of divinity. The mercy and love of the Almighty knows no seasons. In their realm is kindly sunshine and tranquil serenity always. With divine guidance and help we can lift ourselves to that changeless atmosphere from all the turbulance of tempests and the terrors and crashing thunderbolts of this life. With that guidance and help, surely given us if we seek and follow them faithfully, we may call from the lengthening line of graves new loves, new hopes, new happiness.

We may not know why troubles befall us. We do know that they are tests of our fitness to be soldiers of the Cross. The Spartans and our own Indians, strong peoples by nature, glimpsed the profound philosophy of the use and value of pain and suffering when they subjected their young men to physical tortures that they might prove by patient endurance worthy warriors. In Europe, in the days of chivalry, candidates for knighthood were required to prove themselves by vigils and fasting and menial service. We know, because we read in history and most of us have seen in our own experience, that no smooth, untroubled life ever has developed greatness; that defeats and losses and bitter stings have made character and yet make them in all stations and avocations. We know, reading and seeing, that sorrows may yield richer and sweeter fruit for ourselves and others than our most welcomed and abundant blessings.

Responsibility for gathering beauty and glory from tearing storm and crashing stroke and failure and vanishing foundations is on us. We are given minds and souls and freedom of choice. We can, if we will, take into our souls from Omnipotence strength and courage, purity from the Immaculate, from the All Seeing and All Knowing light invisible to the eyes to shine within us glorious amid the surrounding darkness; knowledge not to be told in words, but to be felt vividly and absolutely.

Let us absorb into our souls and minds, for this day and all the days and years that may be given us, the lessons and promises of Easter and the Spring—the lessons of faith never doubting nor faltering, of ceaseless striving; the unalterable promises of triumph over the temptations and tribulations here, over death and fear. The Saviour, quoting the words of Isaiah regarding the Messiah, renewed the comforting assurance of unfailing mercy—"A bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall He not quench." Going through the deep waters safely, through the fire unscathed and walking unafraid through the Valley of the Shadow are triumphs not restricted to Israel, nor to any people or persons. They are universal and to the end of time.

Christ, our Lord and Leader and Master, betrayed, deserted, smitten, crowned with derisive thorns, mocked by the same multitudes that had sung hosannahs in His honor, crucified between thieves and buried, achieved the most tremendous triumph this world ever has known. From Cross and Sepulchre He rose to sit at the right hand of God and His Name and Life have ruled the human race and impelled it upward—slowly, as we measure time, but surely—through nineteen centuries. We may measure the vastness of that triumph by measuring the Christian peoples with all others, comparing progress, advancement in every direction of endeavor, the improvement in the freedom and happiness of the individual. In the name of Christ and Christianity hideous crime has been done, folly equally hideous fostered. At times Christianity has seemed and been proclaimed by its foes to be dead with spiritual darkness and death everywhere. Always triumphant resurrection and new and stronger and more beautiful life have come. Christianity has survived triumphantly persecutions, rack and faggot and stripes, at one extreme, unrestricted dominance and unlimited wealth at the other; internal strifes, and sins and blunders of trusted guides.

Decade by decade, century by century, the teaching and spirit of the Christ have spread and prevailed more and more. They are the ultimate, final power in the world now. As nations and the human race have moved forward by decades and generations and centuries, each of us—stricken, blasted, prostrate, as we may be—can put forth, day by day, week by week, evidences of a vital spirit and undying faith, doing as we can, however feebly. The spirit of Christ lives and will prevail because it supplies the intense need, answers the longing and yearning and divine instinct in the souls of the masses of the people. It will live and gather strength and power to the promised and destined triumph when righteousness and mercy and purity and peace and love shall rule universally, when His Kingdom shall come, His will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

Alfred B. Williams.

The Newest Mission Field

By the Reverend C. Leslie Glenn

Secretary for College Work.

IF I were to name the chief defect of contemporary education, it would not be that it turns out people who believe and behave as their fathers did—it does not—but that it produces so many stunted wills, wills prematurely gray and incapable of greatness, not because of lack of endowment, but because they have never been exposed to what is noble, generous and faith-provoking."—Human Nature and Its Remaking, by W. E. Hocking, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard.

A new mission field is opened to the Church of Christ whenever a new country is discovered. The field is the world.

There is enough work in the mission fields already known for the Church not to be over-anxious about discovering new ones, and yet within the last thirty years, a new one has been created and its discovery forced upon the Church.

That mission field is the American college. Not on the geographical outskirts of the world, but in the very heart of the most enlightened Christendom, a missionary problem has arisen. Its presence is forced upon the Church by the double fact of the acute scarcity of college-trained candidates for the ministry, and the heathenism of the Younger Generation. (The word "heathen" here is not used rhetorically.)

The American college is not a mission field in the general sense that every church is a mission field in which the spiritual life of the people ought to be deepened, but a mission field in the sense that it is geographically removed from effective Christian ministrations; not far, geographically; in some cases, only a few miles, but far enough to call forth observation of one of America's foremost educators that the students "have never been searchingly exposed to what is noble, generous, and faith-provoking".

This geographical separation is due to a sudden shift of a section of the population. During the last thirty years, while the population increased seventy-eight per cent. the number of students going to college increased 445 per cent. There are four times as many students, in proportion to population, as there are in England or France. Not only has there been a vast increase in numbers, but the students are coming from social and economic strata which have rarely been tapped before.

This means that a whole section of the communicants of the parish churches has moved out from under the ministrations of the parish rector. There are few people between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two in the same town as their home church.

It is an emergency comparable only to that of the World War, when all of our young men moved away to training camps.

As an agency for reaching or keeping in touch with students, the home parish has broken down. The students simply don't live there. The rector may see them at Christmas and again for a few Sundays in the spring and fall, but for the greater part of the year, except in rare instances, he is out of touch with them.

No one is alarmed over this, because it is taken for granted that there is effective Christian leadership at the colleges. This faith in college education probably comes from the fact that from the earliest times in England, there were only two Universities, Oxford and Cambridge, and to these the Church did minister. The small proportion of the population that attended college was taken care of by clerical dons, clerical vice-chancellors, clerical tutors and fellows. The student of the early English Universities was sounded by clergymen and chapels. In Oxford alone there are about fifty chapels. Whatever effect this had upon the religious tone of the Universities, at any rate the Church was there.

And the Church was present in the early days of our American colleges, most of which were founded to educate men for the ministry. Because of this early tradition of English and American education, the fallacy still persists that every educated man is a Christian; that to go to college is necessarily to be nourished in virtue and godly living. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The modern college does not know the early tradition. Education is neutral as far as any religious influence is concerned.

While the Church carries on parochial work with steadily increasing success, a mission field exists, composed of members of parishes, a mission field which was unforeseen when the parochial system was being developed in England.

The college student is geographically removed from effective Christian leadership. To refute this, it might be said that there are churches in every college town, to which the answer is simply that students do not attend them. It might also be said that the "Living Church Annual" gives a list of 300 clergymen ministering to college students. In answer to this, it should be said that, as a matter of fact, less than twelve of these clergymen are able to give full time to the work, and less than 100 are able to give even one day a week. And this for over 30,000 Church students!

Thus the college of today, grown to five times its size of thirty years ago, and practically without the Church, is a missionary field. It is a missionary field, too, because the means of supplying effective ministrations must come from the outside. Students are proverbially and practically "broke" and cannot be expected to support their own spiritual advisors.

It is the newest missionary field, because it was only ten years ago that any general movement arose in the Church to explore this field and present its challenge.

Some day, recognition will be given to the pioneering work of the men who first pointed out the Church's responsibility for the rapidly growing student population. The Church is not fully awake yet, although rapid strides were made by the Rev. Paul Micou and the Student Inquiry, and by such men as the Rev. Malcolm Taylor in New England and Professor L. H. Pammel in the Middle West.

The Church cannot say that students won't respond; the fact is, they have never been challenged. The Church has failed to provide effective Christian leadership. Very few men have actually been sent to minister to the colleges or adequately supported when there. There have been men who happened to have parishes near colleges, and some of these have done heroic work as individuals, but the time they have given to the work has been taken from their parish duties. Missionary-minded parishes have been willing to give the time of their rectors to work among students from other parishes, but the task of serving both a large parish and a missionary field is almost an impossible one. There must be help from the outside, diocesan, provincial or national, depending upon the geographical distribution of students, help given to the local parish or to a student chaplain appointed by the Bishop.

Students will respond to leadership. The great danger is not that they are indifferent but that the Church is not challenging enough. There are groups of students working for world peace, industrial democracy, better race relations, and many of them do not see what the Church has to do with it all. They want a prophetic note, and they do not hear it from the Church.

Students are irresponsible, and this must always be a drawback to their idealism. Because college life is unreal, the suffering and duties of real life do not make religion a necessity. It can be ignored better in college than later. And some feel that students can be left alone in their fool's paradise, knowing that, as soon as they come face to face with the problems of life, they will return to the Church. They may, after they have been out of college ten or fifteen years. But does the Church need to wait until men are driven to it by the disappointments and failures of life? Is its only ministry one of comfort? "I write to you, young men, because you are strong." Has the Church nothing to say to men because they are strong?

Most of the boastful agnosticism of this student generation is a reaction against the mild, uninteresting demands of orthodoxy. For many students, atheism is an adventure of faith, a lot more stimulating than the colorless demands of the religion presented to them.

Students are hungry for a message of utter consecration. The most appealing figure, after that of Jesus, is St. Francis of Assisi. It is said that students want something human. On the contrary, they want something wholly divine. They want what Christ alone can give them; they will answer to His claims, if men can be sent to carry them.

"The chief defect of contemporary education is that it turns out people who have never been searchingly exposed to what is noble, generous and faith-provoking."

"How shall they believe in Him, of Whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?"

The Message of the Resurrection

By Arnold N. Hoath

EXCEPT I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." The disciple who heard Thomas' agnostic declaration, and the writer who recorded it, felt that comment on it was superfluous. It was a natural outburst of astonishment such as they themselves would have made had not their experience of renewed comradeship with Jesus convinced them of the reality of the stupendous event which Thomas could not believe. To fasten the epithet "doubting" upon Thomas is hardly fair. Thomas was not even unreasonably cautious. He was suddenly told an unexpected event had happened which cut straight across all the despair and unhappiness he had been suffering. To have all his convictions upset in this startling fashion was confusing and perplexing. Besides, the event itself seemed incredible. Is it not natural, therefore, that it was only after he had had a reasonable time for thinking about this marvellous occurrence, and only after he himself had seen the risen Lord, that he was able to bring his faith into harmony with the facts, and say, "My Lord and my God".

We may be glad that Thomas and the other disciples were not predisposed to believe in our Lord's resurrection, but were astounded when they first heard the news. For this shows that the conclusion they came to was based upon evidence which convinced the alert critical judgment of men who were in a position to judge.

Many profound thoughts must have come to Thomas and his friends as they pondered over the significance of the resurrection. They had seen in Jesus a love which rose above all self-interest or self-concern, a kind, generous, enduring love which could not be turned aside by misunderstanding or abuse, but which seemed to mount to greater heights of magnanimity when it was scorned or trampled on. It was a patient love which refused to be wearied or discouraged by his disappointing experiences with those who knew him best. It was a love which longed for friendship and yet did not shrink from the risk of losing friendship rather than be silent when the moment's need was for plain outspoken speech. This strong, intelligent, generous-hearted and self-sacrificing love which Jesus revealed in His own life was declared by Him to be the principle which should actuate every man. To be like Him in this respect was to be His disciple.

But when Jesus was crucified, it appeared that while the love which He taught and lived was beautiful, even magnificent, instead of overcoming life it was overcome by it. The Cross seemed to say that however excellent it may be, love is not the secret of power. But the Resurrection taught the disciples, and teaches us, that Jesus was right. Love is the prevailing power. Not resentment or anger or hatred or force or the devastating machines of war, but generous love and steadfast righteousness are might and omnipotence. It is a truth we are slow to put into practice; but it is proclaimed by the Resurrection of Him who for His love of man endured the thorns and the gibes and the Cross.

Thomas and the disciple must have realized also as they thought about our Lord's resurrection that a serene faith in God is always finally justified. Jesus had such an undisturbed faith in His Father. No one was more sensitive to the pain and tragedy in life than Jesus, no one spent more exhausting hours in relieving the distress which crowded upon Him on every side, and yet no one has ever been more conscious of the radiant love of God everywhere manifested, in birds, in flowers, in sunrise and sunset, and in the nobler impulses of man. Jesus, kindest, gentlest, and most sympathetic of men, who felt to the utmost the keen woes which bend men low, was nevertheless happy in His profound faith in the love and goodness of God. Nothing could disturb His serene faith that God is ever ready to listen to the voice of prayer and that He will supply all our need.

Even the agony of the Cross could not destroy this faith. Sometimes we hear it said that our Lord's cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" was a cry of doubt. Rather it was a cry of faith. A study of the Greek original shows that our Lord's faith was seeking illumination. "For what purpose," He cries, "for I know thou hast a purpose, for what purpose hast Thou forsaken me?" These are sound words of Dr. Donald McFayden: "In asking for light as to the purpose of God in thus abandoning Him, He showed the unshakableness of His conviction that God always has a wise purpose in His dealings. It meant that Christ met the supreme trial of mankind, the temptation to disbelieve in God which comes to all of us when confronted with the undeserved calamities of life; met it and was unshaken by it."

To the disciples who looked on, however, it must have seemed that their Master's faith was futile and unavailing. But after His resurrection and ascension they perceived that faith in God is always vindicated. With us also, if we take long views of life and if we regard all our problems and all human suffering in the light of the teaching of the Resurrection, it will be possible to maintain in the face of the gravest anxieties an absolute faith in God and His love for us.

As Thomas and the other disciples thought about our Lord's resurrection they must have perceived also that when a man has committed his life to God it is impossible for that life to fail of accomplishing God's will for it. On Good Friday Jesus' life seemed to be a disappointing failure, and there were none who thinking of Him did not shake their heads sadly. His efforts to ameliorate the lot of man had been tragically frustrated. His aims and purposes in life were thwarted, so it seemed. But now we know that only through this apparent frustration of our Lord's work could that work be brought to completion. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." That the Cross was not frustration but accomplishment is clearly revealed by our Lord's resurrection.

So is it with us. When we commit our life into God's keeping, His purpose for us will be achieved through all the limitations of our situation and all the apparent frustrations that seem to baffle us.

THE SOLDIER'S CHOICE.

I was seeking to lead a young soldier to accept the Lord Jesus Christ, but like most men he tried to evade the straight issue with the promise, "I'll think it over". "Harry," said I, "let me illustrate. You are out with the boys some night raiding the enemy's trenches and on the way back you get hard hit. Bill Smith stops long enough to pick you up and carry you back to our trenches and for his trouble gets two bullets in the back. You are both taken to hospital and by tender care you are won back from the jaws of death. Two months later the Doctor comes along helping a poor fellow who limps badly and moves with evident difficulty. They stop at your bedside and the Doctor says, 'Harry, I want to introduce you to Mr. Smith, the man who risked his life to save you', and you fold your arms and say, 'I'll think it over, I don't know whether I want to make his acquaintance today or not'. You wouldn't say that, Harry, would you? You would grip him by the hand and try to tell him something of the gratitude you felt. I want to introduce you tonight to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Man from the Glory, who not only risked His life, but sacrificed it to save you, and you propose to turn your back on Him and say you'll think it over." "No," he said, "I'll accept Him"; and together we knelt while he told the Lord that he here and then accepted Him as his personal Saviour.

Reader, are you "thinking it over" or have you faced the issue squarely and decided right like my soldier friend?

Man and the Living World

By Professor Austin H. Clark of the Smithsonian Institute

NO question is of greater importance at the present day than that of the relation of science to religion. We in the United States are now definitely embarked on what in the years to come will be regarded as a type of culture new in the history of man, a culture chiefly characterized by the increasingly broad application of the correlated facts of science to our daily lives.

Many regard this type of culture, now rapidly developing, as wholly materialistic in its nature and as a growing menace to the non-material side of human life—as inimical to the more serious cultural and spiritual phases of human understanding.

Some there are, indeed, who look forward to the day when the world will be expressed entirely in terms of scientific laws and formulae. But these are few; every thinking man knows that such a world would be an impossible place in which to live. Humanity requires something in addition to the cold logic of ascertained facts and proven theories. Both religion and philosophy are essential factors when it comes to human welfare.

Science is engaged in striving to discover and to correlate the facts which will enable us to understand the ultimate order upon which the universe, in the broadest application of that term, is based, and in addition science is endeavoring to find the means of applying such elements of this order as are determined to human activities, with a view to the betterment of human welfare.

Through religion all of the very numerous factors, material and non-material, which in any way bear upon human existence, both individual and social, are coordinated. Religion contemplates order in all things, whether touching human affairs or not. But when subjected to analysis, everything is found to have a bearing more or less direct upon human activities and human welfare.

Science, therefore, is engaged in building up a structure which should serve to strengthen the foundations of religion, not to weaken them. Approaching the same end by different paths, the one material and the other spiritual, there would seem to be no reason why science and religion should not go hand in hand and, working together, hasten the mutual progress toward the common end.

Progress in any branch of science is measured not by the number of facts accumulated, but by the increase in the correlation and coordination of the determined facts into broad principles of general application. Detached and isolated facts have little value. Coordinated series of facts are of vast importance.

A proper and adequate understanding and appreciation of the living world is quite impossible without the admission that it is not chaotic, but on the contrary an orderly assemblage of plants and animals.

Every living thing is the child of some other living thing. This is an established fact. Therefore all life existing at the present day is a continuation of the life which existed in past ages. From its very first appearance life has been continuous from parent to child down to the present day. In the light of what we know today no one can conceive of life arising spontaneously.

If this be so, man must have descended from some previous living being. No one with any knowledge of biology pretends to deny the truth of this. But this does not necessitate the assumption that man descended from, or ever was, a monkey. None of the leading evolutionists ever have claimed this. Professor T. H. Huxley, who was the leading exponent of Darwinism, and Professor H. F. Osborn, who is the ablest and best known of the evolutionists of the present day, both specifically denied it. It is an idea that has been promulgated and fostered by the camp followers of great leaders, but not by the leaders themselves.

Let us briefly review the known facts concerning man. Structurally and anatomically man is very close to the man-like or anthropoid apes. This is beyond dispute. But it is equally beyond dispute that there is a sharp, clean-cut, and very marked difference between man and the apes. Every bone in the body of a man is at once distinguishable from the corresponding bone in the body of any of the apes.

Furthermore, man differs very widely from the apes in the possession of articulate speech, enabling him to accumulate knowledge in successive generations. He also differs in his use of fire and in his use of tools, which as shown by palaeontology, were human attributes from the very first. Besides this, so far as history and the study of modern races enables us to judge, he differs in his use of clothing and of ornaments.

The most important difference, however, is correlated with the fact that in man the ministrations of both parents are necessary in the raising of a family. A woman cannot raise a family unaided. Interdependent with this, we find in man a socially effective sentiment of love which creates and makes a unit of the family. All monkeys, on the contrary, live together in promiscuous hordes in which each female raises her own young unaided. Family attachments are not necessary and do not, so far as we know, occur.

While man is obviously similar to the apes and belongs to the same division of the mammals, yet the differences between man and the apes seem to be too great ever to have been bridged by intermediates, and of all the fossils that have been found not one represents indubitably a "missing link". Man represents a collateral line parallel to the apes, but he was never one of them. He appeared suddenly in essentially the same form as that in which we know him now.

If every living thing is the child of some other living thing, how can man have suddenly appeared in essentially his present form? Unbroken continuity of descent does not by any means imply continuity of body form or of mental attributes. To illustrate continuity of life coupled with abrupt discontinuity of form and mental traits, let us consider the dogs.

All dogs are descended from a single type of ancestor, a wolf, closely resembling our native wolf but with slightly different teeth. There are nearly two hundred different breeds of domesticated dogs. Many of these differ only slightly from wolves and may be arranged in a continuous series leading by almost imperceptible gradations to a typical wolf.

Other types of dogs, as greyhounds, hounds, bull-dogs and pugs, are entirely different both in form and in mentality from wolves, and also from each other. There are no intergrades between these different types, or between any one of them and wolves, and there never have been any.

The greyhounds, or "gaze-hounds", have deficient powers of scent, and so hunt entirely by sight. The lop-eared hounds have poor sight and extremely well developed scent. Bull-dogs are deficient both in sight and scent and are stupid and ferocious, displaying little affection. Pugs, which are much like bull-dogs and equally stupid, differ markedly from them in being timid and affectionate.

So very widely do they differ in bodily form and in mental attributes from wolves that it seems almost impossible to believe greyhounds, lop-eared hounds, bull-dogs and pugs all were descended from the same wolf ancestor. And if we knew these breeds of dogs only as wild animals we never would suspect any close affinity between them. Here we have perfect continuity of descent coupled with abrupt change in form and in mental attributes.

In some such fashion did man appear as man; but what his predecessor was we do not know.

We cannot doubt the unbroken continuity of life from its first beginnings to the present day. In the light of present knowledge any other assumption is quite unthinkable. But the recognition of this fact does not necessitate assuming that man was ever essentially different from man as he is today.

True evolution, based on established facts, teaches that man acquired the broad features of his bodily structure from some ancestor which is unknown, but which was not a monkey or an ape as we understand those terms.

The details of Man's bodily structure and his mental attributes are his alone.

"Example" or "Substitute"

At the close of a service in Germantown, Pa., some time ago, a stranger accosted the late Dr. D. M. Stearns as follows: "I don't like your preaching. I do not care for the cross. I think that instead of preaching the death of Christ on the cross, it would be far better to preach Jesus, the teacher and example." "Would you then be willing to follow Him if I preach Christ, the Example?" replied Dr. Stearns. "I would," said the stranger, "I will follow in His steps." "Then," said Dr. Stearns, "let us take the first step. 'Who did no sin.' Can you take this step?" The stranger looked confused. "No," he said, "I do sin, and I acknowledge it." "Well, then," said Dr. Stearns, "your first need of Christ is not as an example, but as a Saviour." And this is every man's need. (See Rom. 3: 23-26.)—J. J. D. H.

The Surprise of Easter

An Easter Message by the Reverend Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada

ONCE more Easter with its dynamic evangel is breaking on a life-needing world. Like the flowers and leaves that burst from winter's grasp, new life and gladness, the leaves of the Tree of Life, break forth with the Easter triumph. Hope springs eternal in the Christian breast with the thought of the risen Christ. Let there be light, and there was light, was God's great word at creation. Let there be life, and there was life, was God's great word at the new creation, the rising of Jesus from the dead. Life transcendent; life transforming; life miraculously new, superhumanly divine; life present, personal, potent; life invincible by doubt, despair or death; life now and life forever; this is the Easter Evangel. It is not a pious fancy, nor a pulpit theory, a mere doctrine of theology, or a mythical ideal. It's a fact.

I read once that a man of ninety had the surprise of his life on his ninety-first birthday. The old fellow had lived a Christless life for ninety years. But it happened that his ninety-first birthday fell on an Easter Sunday, and somehow, strangely and suddenly, with a flashlight of glory the meaning of Easter, for the first time, flashed upon him. And then, to their amazement, his people heard him give a joyful cry: "Christ is risen! He died for me, and now He's risen!" And with that, by the mystic potency of God's Holy Spirit, he entered then and there into the life eternal, as a new-found reality. Theologians may say that Christ is Christianity; not morality, not theology, not philosophy, not poetry. But to this man Christianity was Christ. The miracle of the resurrection was renewed, and as when Christ rose victorious from the dead, a glory light flooded this darkened world, so once again fear vanished, faith revived, and, like a rainbow, love, joy and peace spanned the microcosm of a human heart. A sceptic once said to a Christian, "How do you know Christ is alive?" The answer was splendid, "I know He is alive because I had an hour with Him this morning." An hour with Him! Yes, Christ is our life, for, as a Christian worker said, who was asked the secret of his sunny life: "Here it is. I do not know of any secret of joy like this: I am alive in the risen victorious life of my risen Lord. The glory of the Easter morning is mine."

It is said that on the Moor of Culloden, that battlefield of tragedy, an old Highland chief fell mortally wounded. The clan wavered. But the dying man, seeing what had happened, raised himself on an elbow and cried: "I am not dead, my children. I am watching you to see you do your duty!" His words revived the drooping courage of his clansmen. They fought as men with new energy of heart, through the consciousness that they were fighting under the eye of their living chief. And so to hearts today that droop because the strife is fierce, the warfare long, there comes the message of the Lord of Life: I am not dead. I am alive for evermore. I have won the victory. I am watching to see you triumph also. Remember my words: "Because I live ye shall live also. Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Be of good cheer. I have overcome the world." Standing once more in Easter life, irradiated with Easter light, what shall we render to God for all His benefits. Awake my soul! Sing unto the Lord a new song! Awake psaltery, harp and organ. Awake ye choirs, yea awake right early, and sing to our glorious Lord: Be Thou exalted, O Christ, above the heavens. Be Thou exalted, O Christ, among the nations, Thy glory proclaimed to earth's uttermost parts. Preach the risen Christ, ye evangelists. Burst into song, you believers of every church and name. Tell it out among the nations, you missionary allies. Go forth in the power of an endless life all ye who profess and call yourselves Christians with the haunting and joy-creative conviction that Jesus is really alive; that He has the keys of death and hell; that He has won the victory over death; that He ever liveth; and because He lives we too shall live for evermore.

He lives, He lives, Who once was dead;
He lives, my everlasting Head.
He lives, and while He lives I'll sing,
Jesus, my Prophet, Priest, and King.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

JOB.

THE book of Job, the first in the Poetical group in our Bible, gives us the experience of a real man who met a real devil, was maligned by real men who were not well acquainted with God, humbled himself before the true and living God in a real ash pile, with his body covered with real boils, and God gave him twice as much spiritual and material blessing as he had ever known (Ch. 42:10-16; Ezek. 14:14, 20).

Subject.

The theme of which the Holy Spirit writes in this wonderful book is the trial of Job and the end of the Lord (James 5:11).

1. Chs. 1, 2. The trial of Job by Satan. God permitted Job to be tried by Satan that his perfection and uprightness might be manifest.

Job's perfection was his fear, or reverence of God, his attitude of trust in and obedience to God. His uprightness was his turning away from evil, his ability to say "no" to the devil.

The "hedge" about Job was God's permissive will, limiting and hindering Satan (Chs. 1:10, 12; 2:6).

2. Chs. 3-31. The trial of Job by his three friends, who did not understand God's ways. They believed and said that the cause of Job's trial was his wickedness (Ch. 15:20; 18:5; 22:5). But Job's answer was the proof of his trust in God; "He knoweth the way I take; when He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold " (Ch. 23:10).

3. Chs. 32-37. The trial of Job by Elihu, who understood God's ways. He was filled with indignation because Job was righteous in his own eyes and justified himself rather than God (Ch. 32:1, 2). He condemned Job's self-righteousness and witnessed of God's righteousness in all His ways with man (Ch. 34:1-12).

4. Chs. 38-42:6. The trial of Job by the Lord. The revelation of God's eternal power and Godhead, His omnipotence and omniscience, as the Creator and Judge of all the earth, caused Job to abhor himself and to repent in dust and ashes (Ch. 38:12-20; 40:6-14; 42, 5, 6; Gen. 18:25).

5. Chs. 42:7-14. The exaltation of Job after he humbled himself and prayer for his friends (Ch. 42:10).

The end, or purpose, of the Lord in the trial of Job was to give him twice as much of blessing as he had ever received (Ch. 42:10, 12).

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by P. G. L. G., of New Orleans, Louisiana:

> "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.
> Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them."—Rev. 7:14, 15.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

COLLECT.

Almighty God, who, through Thine only begotten Son, hast overcome death and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life, we humbly beseech Thee that, as by Thy special grace preventing us Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

THIS "collects" no words from either the Epistle or Gospel for this Day; but the thought of the ascription is taken from the Gospel, which tells of St. John's belief in the Resurrection of Jesus; for that "other disciple" which "did out-run Peter, and came first to the sepulchre, and finding it empty, "saw and believed", was the disciple "whom Jesus loved", St. John, and was the first of all to accept his risen Lord; even before he had seen Him, for Mary Magdalene's impression, on seeing the stone taken away and the sepulchre empty, was that, "they have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid Him". Christ's Resurrection completed the work of redemption (or, perhaps, we should say gave us full assurance of it); not till then was death overcome, and the gate of everlasting life opened to all believers, to all who had died in this faith since Adam's fall, and all who from that first Easter Day, like St. John, should see and believe, and be able by God's grace to join in the anthem, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept".

THE Epistle for Easter Day is Col. 3:1-7. To this writer this Epistle seems to have been selected by the Church to warn us against one of the commonest faults of the Christian life, viz.: the tendency to fall back after Lenten observance into the old round of worldliness, which occupied our attention ere Lent began. To lay down any strict rules for observance of Lent is difficult and unwise; for the manner of spending this season profitably must differ with difference of nature and disposition and loyalty, and especially of age; but it is safe to assert that any way of spending the forty-six days that intervene between Ash Wednesday and Easter Day, however strict and austere, will be disappointing to any one professing to lead the new life, who finds himself (or herself) glad to be done with it, with a keener relish for the pleasures of this world, however innocent in themselves they may be. Such feelings indicate that Lenten observance has not led to a higher plane of Christian living; that our affection is set too much on things on the earth, too little on things above. Each Lent, if well spent, should leave us nearer to Him, more like Him, who spent all His life in His Father's business, and found His chief joy therein. If we attend to our Heavenly Father's business unwillingly, we cannot please Him, nor find any pleasure ourselves in such service. As children we found that the only true happiness was in cheerful and willing obedience to those in lawful authority. Where are true joys to be found? I have no wish or intention to undervalue the innocent joys that this beautiful world can bestow. We know it was made by Him, the Word of God, the Son of God, as St. John says: "All things were made by Him and without Him was not anything made that was made." And all its good things were for our use and happiness; but upon one condition, a full and faithful and cheerful obedience to His will. We must love the Giver more than the gift; otherwise we are but mercenaries, and sooner or later such transient pleasures lose their power to please. This is the universal testimony of all those who have tasted to the full of the sweetness of earth, without recognizing with grateful love and obedience the "Giver of every good and perfect gift". And if we find in self-examination at Easter that we are not risen with Christ, and are not earnestly seeking those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God the Father; that we are on no higher plane of holy living than before, after our manner of keeping Lent, let us not be satisfied to go on so, hoping that we may be more successful in another Lent season, which may not be ours. Let us rather turn unto the Lord our God for assistance and guidance in leading the new life. He knows, if we do not, why our Lent-keeping failed of the desired effect; why prayer is often a task and a burden, Bible-reading profitless, the good works we try to do evidently not those prepared by Him "for us to walk in" (Eph. 2:10), since we find little pleasure in them. At any time of the year a "dear Feast of Lent" may be ours with His assistance.

THE Gospel for Easter Day is St. John 20:1-10. The five Gospels, two for Easter Day, and for Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, and First Sunday after Easter, are all selected to tell the story of the Resurrection. The first two give proofs of the Resurrection, but not any appearance of Jesus. These are given in the last three. Easter Day is surely a proper time for the great foundation fact of the Resurrection to be brought clearly before our eyes; for all depends on this. Paul's logical mind saw this clearly, and he shows the Corinthian Church the futility of a Christianity without the Resurrection (1 Cor. 15:12-19): "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen"; and by a hypothetical syllogism shows the fundamental importance of that event in the life of Jesus. "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching sin, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that He raised up Christ; whom He raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." And then comes that beautiful passage taken into our burial service in which these and hypothesis are totally done away: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Let us then briefly consider the evidence of Christ's Resurrection, as set forth in the Four Gospels, and in the Acts, and in the Revelation of St. John.

Of the ten appearances, as recorded in the Gospels, five were on Easter Day: first, to Mary Magdalene (Mark 16:9); second, to the other women (Matt. 28:8), who had come with Mary Magdalene to the tomb, viz.: Mary (the widow) of Clopas; Salome, the mother of Zebedee's children; Joanna, wife of Chuza; Herod's steward (Antipas). These two appearances were so near together in the early morning of the Resurrection Day, that there is some doubt as which is prior in time; but there is no doubt whatever of the fact that Jesus' first two appearances were to women, a preference given them doubtless because of their greater faith, and love, and devotion to Him. "Last at the cross, and first at the tomb," is their great glory. Only one man of our Lord's followers, St. John, appears to have been brave enough to face that awful scene on Calvary. The third appearance was to Peter (Luke 24:34). His fourth was to the two disciples at Emmaus, Cleophas and another, probably Luke himself, who recorded it (Luke 24:32), as also St. Mark 16.12. His fifth appearance and last on that first Easter Day, was to the ten, Thomas being absent, recorded by four, viz.: St. Mark 16:14, St. Luke 24:36, St. John 20:19, and St. Paul, 1 Cor. 15:5. These five are all that are recorded of this first Easter Day. The sixth appearance was to the eleven, Thomas being with them, recorded by St. John 20:24-29. The seventh was to seven at the Sea of Tiberius (Galilee); of whom were Philip and Thomas and Nathanael and the sons of Zebedee; the names of the other two not being given, recorded by St. John (John 21:1). The eighth appearance was to "above five hundred at once", recorded by St. Paul (1 Cor. 15:6). The ninth was to James (the Less"), recorded by St. Paul (1 Cor. 15:17). The tenth (and last of the forty days), to the eleven at the Ascension.

After this there are five appearances of Jesus recorded, viz.: First to the dying martyr, St. Stephen (Acts 7:56); second, to Saul near Damascus (Acts 9:5); third, to Paul at Corinth (Acts 18:9); fourth, to Paul at Jerusalem (Acts 22:18; fifth (and last), to St. John in Patmos (Rev. 2:17).

What a "cloud of witnesses" are here set forth before our eyes, so that all but the spiritually blind must see and believe. Many of these witnesses were martyrs to this truth—gave their lives rather than give up this faith It has been truly said by great jurists that no fact of history has anything like the vast body and weight of evidence that is marshalled for the truth of the Resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth. If a miracle can be proved by human testimony, surely the Resurrection of Jesus is proved beyond the possibility of a doubt. Of unbelievers there are two classes; those who cannot believe, except they perceive by their own senses; like Thomas, who refused to believe, except he should "see in His hands the print of the nails . . ."—and those who will not believe, who will not accept the testimony even of their own senses, such as those Jews, who saw Lazarus raised from the dead, yet "went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus has done" (St. John 11:46), evidently with evil intent. To the former kind is our Lord! Who gives Thomas the evidence he desires, but with a gentle rebuke, in a blessing on those who "have not seen and yet have believed" (John 20:29). The second class would seem hopeless but for the power of the Holy Ghost, who can "make the blind to see". "Pass me not, O mighty Spirit, Thou canst make the blind to see; Witnesser of Jesus' merit, Speak the word of power to me, Even me."

American Minister to China Confirms Horrible Famine Conditions

The terrible famine which the Chinese Government and foreign observers have estimated will bring destitution to a total of 20,000,000 men, women and children by spring, and which has already caused thousands of deaths, is the subject of an official cablegram to the Department of State from the American Minister to China, the Hon. John Van A. MacMurray.

This inforamtion has just been received from the State Department by China Famine Relief, U. S. A., with national headquarters at 20 East Forty-second Street, New York City.

Minister MacMurray, according to Stanley K. Hornbeck, chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs, describes the famine area regarded as immediately accessible for relief workers and supplies as "somewhat larger" than he had previously anticipated. Mr. MacMurray then gives as "a preliminary estimate" that 4,000,000 of the famine victims can be relieved at this time.

In this estimate, the State Department points out, the minister concurs with the recent estimate of the Peking American Advisory Committee of China Famine Relief, U. S. A. This committee estimated, after a preliminary survey, that 4,000,000 out of the 20,000,000 famine victims in nine provinces of China can be reached and saved, but that it is apprehended that "other groups will later come into the urgent category, necessitating a revision upward of our figures."

The same committee, because of the inaccessibility of remote portions of some of the afflicted provinces, felt that at this time relief could not practically be applied in all sections, but for those now relievable it estimated that $4,000,000 would be needed.

These estimates are those now "accepted without hesitancy" by the American Minister to China.

This is the first estimate regarding famine conditions to come from an official of the American government since that made by President Hoover, who, when Secretary of Commerce, on May 29, 1928, issued a statement reading:

"The reports of the Department of Commerce indicate a very real famine in China from which several million people are suffering greatly. The American people have never failed to respond to a call for charity in time of need.

"I wish to commend the effort of the China Famine Relief Fund in its attempt to bring this aid to a most unfortunate people, and I trust it will meet with generous support."

Recent cables from the China International Famine Relief Commission in Peking, from missionaries and press correspondents are to the effect that several million people are doomed to death because of the inaccessibility of their homes. Already cannibalism has been reported. In some sections the famine victims are said to be dying in such numbers that it has proved impossible for the survivors to bury all of the bodies.

NEWS OF THE CHINA MISSIONS.

The January issues of the Newsletters from the Districts of Shanghai, Hankow and Anking bring first-hand reports and articles about the work in their respective fields. In Shanghai, the Chinese librarian at St. John's University was baptized at Christmas time; also two children. Ten adults and one child were baptized at the chapel at Tsaokiatu, a suburb. Six girls at St. Mary's hall have applied for baptism. Two nurses at St. Elizabeth's Hospital were baptized, both coming from non-Christian homes. At Kiangwan, ten adults and six children were baptized. In Soochow Academy, three students were received as catechumens, and one boy baptized, encouraging in an off year when the school is small. Ten adults and six children were baptized at Zangzok, and seven were received as catechumens. Several children were baptized at Holy Trinity Chapel, Yangchow; two at Emmanuel Church; seven children and five adults at Hsiakwan, one of the last being a Cantonese educated in a Chinese University and Columbia who was formerly a consul and a government official in Peking.

At Hsiakwan, after an interval of about two years, street preaching has been started again. The evangelist reports that there has never been so cordial a welcome from the street crowds, and there is a great demand for tracts and Gospels provided by the Bible Societies. More Scriptures have been sold during a few recent weeks than were probably sold in a year before. Other missions also report an unprecedented demand for these Gospels.

During recent years an organization called the Yellow Flags has grown up in the country near Kao Li Tien, where we have a country chapel. Originally it was a local volunteer organization for self-protection against bandits, but when they succeeded in procuring arms they became bandits themselves, which things are an allegory.

In the Anking Newsletter Bishop Huntington reports the confirmation of twenty-three men and eleven women, in November, at Sanshan, Fanchang, and St. Lioba's and St. James, Wuhu. There are reports of trips made by him and also by the diocesan secretary, the Rev. Lindel Tsen, who has since been elected assistant bishop for Honan, the district in which the Church in Canada is particularly interested. Mr. Tsen closes the account of his trip with the words, "It has reconfirmed my belief that the religion of Christ has taken deep root in China and that the fruit of our continued effort will be without limit." Bishop Tsen was consecrated on February 24.

The Hankow Newsletter describes the tributes paid to the Rev. Robert E. Wood on the thirtieth anniversary of his coming to China. Among many lovely remarks in the many speeches was this, from the representative of St. Michael's Parish: "Behind his great religious life is his great capacity for friendship among the community. That which gives tone and depth and an unfailing impression of strength to all these qualities is his religious faith. In this faith one feels that he can do still more for the people and the Church in the future years."

There were confirmations in January, five girls at St. Hilda's School, six women at Grace Church, Hanyang; nine men at Boone.

Bishop Gilman has conducted an informal questionnaire among 219 Boone students, some of the results being as follows:

Is your family Christian? Yes, 114. No, 105.

Have you been baptized? Yes, 110. No, 109.

Do you in your heart recognize yourself as a Christian? Yes, 140. No, 79.

Have you determined to attend daily chapel? Yes, 148. No, 71.

Do you constantly attend chapel? Yes, 134. No, 85.

Are you kept away by laziness? Yes, 40. No, 179.

Are you kept away trying to make up work? Yes, 37. No, 182.

The families of ninety-six had had two generations of Christian influence; forty-four, three generations.

Book Reviews

THE GOSPEL OF THE LIVING JESUS: By T. H. Davies, M. A. The Macmillan Company. Price, $2.25.

The author seeks to make the Living Jesus a present reality. He clearly distinguishes the "Facts-of-Jesus" from the "Facts about Jesus". He gives emphasis to the truth that the "Facts-of-Jesus" are vital to salvation and Eternal Life. Too often in the discussion of the Facts about Jesus men fail entirely to grasp the "Facts-of-Jesus", or the truth of Jesus Himself.

The Glad Tidings are that God-is-with-us. "God is not like teachings; God is like Jesus . . . . Jesus brought the Kingdom in bringing Himself." The nature of this kingdom is revealed only in the personal life and religion of Jesus. The properties of the Kingdom are reflections of His own personal character. "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." The genius of Jesus and of the Kingdom is Love. In some teachers we can accept their teaching and reject their example. But Jesus is both precept and example, teacher and Lord. "He lived the Gospel; He is the Gospel." It is the dynamic witness of His spiritual character that convinces. God was in Him reconciling the world unto Himself.

Without faith one cannot enter into an understanding of Jesus. He may know all the "facts about Jesus" and yet never touch Him. His divinity is not to be founded on the stories of His birth. But it is His spiritual nature, His sublime personality, His Life climaxed by His sacrificial death that assures us that He is Divine Lord and Saviour. It is not that God came and dwelt in a man; but that in man was developed and lived and revealed the spiritual nature, the beauty, the righteousness, the love and the life of God.

The author makes one realize indeed that the Truth as it is in Jesus, or rather that Jesus Himself is so magnificent and supreme and wonderful, and so outstanding as the One Thing to be desired, that the facts about Jesus are quite secondary; and as I take it, may be accepted as a matter of course. R. A HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN CHINA: By Kenneth Scott Latourette, Professor of Missions and Oriental History in Yale University. Cloth. Pp. 843, with Bibliography, Index and Map. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York. Price, $5.

Having spent fifteen years himself in a pioneer mission field in mid-China, the reviewer welcomes with delight this masterly and authoritative historical survey of Christianity in China from its remote origin down to the year 1926. The fulness and completeness of the history is suggested by the extent of the Bibliography—more than fifty pages, to which there are throughout the body of the work more than 3,500 foot note references to aid the reader in further research along every line of study. The thirty pages of index also evidences the painstaking completeness of this encyclopedic historical work.

While the book is thus a remarkably complete reference work on the history of China in background and of Western intercourse with China this past 150 years in foreground, and for a generation is likely to be the standard work on Christian Missions in China, it is written without a dull page, and will prove of convincing value in answering the score of questions that thoughtful persons are apt to ask themselves about this great world problem of today.

"The presence and the labors of the missionary," the impartial historian concludes, "were most fortunate for China. Defects the missionary enterprise undoubtedly had. Sometimes it did evil. On the whole, however, it was the one great agency whose primary function was to bring China into contact with the best in the Occident and to make the expansion of the West a means to the great welfare of the Chinese people. If, when the Chinese have finally adjusted themselves and their culture to the new age, the revolution through which they shall have passed proves to have been more beneficial than harmful, it will be in no small degree because of the thousands of Christian apostles who counted not their own lives dear that to the Chinese might come the more abundant life." W.

CHRISTIANITY AND SUCCESS: By Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, D. D., The Cole Lectures of 1928 before Vanderbilt University. Cloth. Pp. 182. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.50.

An admirable answer to the challenge put forth by the hawkers of success along psychological lines. On all hands our eyes light upon alluring advertisements, which guarantee wealth and power by the adaptation of the individual to such systems of thinking and daring as shall be advanced in the schemes announced. We may not for a moment deny the benefits of these schools. Many men fail for want of self-poise, confidence in their ability. Many are afflicted with the prevailing ailment called "inferiority complex". And to deliver such from their bondage is a worthy endeavor. But the test is this: Shall we regard success in itself as the only worthy aim?

Our author, with the right perspective of true success, seeks to disclose that the only commendable end is getting into God's way. And Christianity is fully qualified to equip us with this aim and potency. The whole problem lies not in getting, but in finding God through our getting. Unless a man can trace the hand of his Heavenly Father in his achievements, he misses the only goal worth attaining. Herein lies the distinction between our well-advertised schemes of success and that which the Christian religion endorses and commends. The men who could say, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content" can also declare: "He giveth us richly all things to enjoy." We may boldly say that nothing is too good for the child of God; and we may add that God will see that His child gets as much as he is able to receive and use well. Certainly we do admit that many of God's most beautiful characters have been cultured in poverty and suffering. But they have had as a goal that "better part" which should be to them more cherishable. As the Apostle says, "Our light affliction . . worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory".

When William James in his "Varieties of Religious Experience", slightingly refers to the faith of George Muller as only "taking God into partnership" when he was used to supply thousands of orphans with food, shelter, clothing and education, he failed to see that George Muller had for his high aim the demonstration that God will hear and answer prayer; that the getting of things from God was not an end in itself. The spiritual springs that bubbled all around George Muller's life proved the exalted plane on which he lived with God.

We agree then in all Bishop Hughes' contentions that God waits to link us up with Himself in a blessed service for humanity by crowning us with such blessings as we are capable of administering. Mr. Hickson's dictum bears an important relation to the discussion: "God will meet you where He is able to find you; and He will give you as much as you are able to receive." Therefore, we do well to accept the stimulus to faith and achievement. There is no question in our life too hard for God to answer; no want so great that He cannot supply; no longing so dearly cherished as to be very life and blood to us, that He will not take into cognizance and kindly effect in His own way and time.

We have before us the two paths: The one which, independent of God, claims and reaches out for the best that life can afford to be selfishly enjoyed with no thought of gratitude to Him; the other which weaves Him into the very fabric of life, esteeming the verity of our Lord's teaching, "If ye being evil know how to give . . how much more will your Heavenly Father give good things to them that ask Him". There is no life more rich than that which can truthfully testify, "All that I have He has given me; all that I am He has made me; just where I am He has placed me; all that I hope for is wrapped in the bundle of His care for me".

CONSULT PRELATES OF THE GREEK ORTHODOX CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:

We learn with pleasure of the increasing number of clergy of the Greek Orthodox Church requesting the use of church buildings for occasional or regular services. May we suggest, however, that clergy entertaining such requests might avoid embarrassing mistakes by consulting the recognized prelates of the Greek Orthodox Church:

The Most Rev. Archbishop Alexander, 253 Elm Street, Astoria, Long Island, N. Y.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Alexopoulos, 47 Winchester Street, Brookline, Mass.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Philaretos, 733 South Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

PROTESTANTISM WITHIN THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:

Enclosed please find check for three dollars for my subscription to The Southern Churchman, due March 2. Sorry I overlooked it so long.

I want to tell you how much my husband and I enjoy every issue of the paper and we rejoice in the stand the paper is taking for the Gospel truth and Protestantism within the Church. A rallying cry was sorely needed and we feel that it was a merciful guidance of providence when you and your associates were led to take over the beloved old Southern Churchman.

With earnest prayers for your continuance and success, I am,

Most sincerely yours,

"MESSAGE FROM GOD TO THE HUMAN HEART."

Mr. Editor:

It is somewhat of a perplexity as to how far it is worth while to pay attention to some critics. "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone!" The main thing is, as you say, to practice what we believe. I discovered years ago that the Bible is to be lived as well as upheld and that it is possible for a person to champion it and come short of the salvation the Bible reveals. No one who is in earnest about salvation should be contented till he knows that he has that salvation—all sins forgiven and in possession of eternal life and cleansed from the inner defilement of native sin—which is the worst "heart disease" humanity has! Salvation is a present matter—have passed from death unto life," John says. Many put it all in the future. An error. "Christ in you, the hope of glory." The present indwelling is the basis of a true hope as to the coming glory.

Old age has its problems and trials, and I am proving the truth of the old hymn:

"E'en down to old age my people shall prove My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love."

The great God who rules the universe does not ever forget the humblest of His children! The Book is far more to God's pilgrims than a book for preachers to get texts from or for its champions to contend for. It is truly a message from God to the human heart—an appeal to faith and trust and not to man's intellect. Approach it rightly and it is throbbing with living truth; approach it wrongly and it is lifeless. "Minister."

WE REJOICE.

Mr. Editor:

We rejoice in the uncompromising stand taken by The Southern Churchman, and may the Lord bless you in all your efforts to proclaim the truth.

Sincerely,
William Norton.

Plea for Theological Seminary in Haiti.

Bishop Carson, of Haiti, in his annual report for the past year says: "Although still in temporary quarters, I feel that the care and expense of a theological seminary are justified by the quality of its work. It is indispensable and I earnestly hope that funds may be secured without too great delay towards permanent quarters. I have not permitted men to pass easily into the priesthood. More applications have been rejected than have been accepted. Two deacons will probably be advanced to the priesthood in March; they have been preparing themselves very largely under my personal direction for upwards of six years. I am insisting upon and requiring a classical training at the national Lycee before admitting any as candidates. From the beginning of my episcopate, I have emphasized the spiritual and intellectual fitness. An illiterate ministry can be little other than futile, in Haiti as elsewhere, whatever the zeal and personal godliness.

"Again I press earnestly the need of money with which to build a theological seminary, on property already owned by the Church, about four miles from Port au Prince, a seminary that the Bible are invited to join this free correspondence course and full information as to enrollment will be given to all who write to the Rev. Canon Joseph Fletcher, Librarian, Washington Cathedral Library, Mt. St. Alban, Washington, D. C., or to the Rev. Dr. William S. Bishop, D. D., 1912 Belmont Road, N. W., Washington, D. C., who is the director of the course.

The Society for the Home Study of Holy Scriptures and Church History was founded by Miss Sarah F. Smiley about forty years ago. The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander is President of its Board of Trustees; the Rev. Dr. William L. DeVries is director, and the Rev. Canon Joseph Fletcher is its Librarian and Secretary. The Society's valuable library is now housed in Washington Cathedral Library in close proximity to the valuable collection of books belonging to the Cathedral Library proper of which Canon Fletcher is also the Librarian.

The subject of the course for this year is "Studies in the Gospel of St. John", and the work will be carried on under the direction of the Rev. Dr. William S. Bishop, of the Diocese of Washington. The plan is for a course of some thirty or thirty-five lessons, covering the entire Gospel of St. John. A series of papers will be issued to students containing subject-matter for detailed study, together with questions on the same.

An examination, leading, if successful, to a certificate will be held at the close of the course.

It is said that the method employed will be a direct study of the Gospel itself rather than of books about the Gospel. The spirit in which the work will be carried on will be practical and devotional, rather than that of mere intellectual research.

The papers outlining the successive Lessons will be issued week by week. The students are required to send their notes monthly to the Director of the Course, at which time questions touching matters connected with the course may be submitted to the Director.

No More Bazaars.

In a parish which used always to have annual bazaars the people were asked, one spring a few years ago, to indicate whether they wished to hold a bazaar as usual or pledge an amount, to be paid in the fall, equivalent to what the bazaar usually brought in, and in addition to their regular pledges. They quickly over-pledged the amount and when the time came, paid it promptly. No more bazaars in that parish.

Reassuring China Bulletins.

The Department of Missions has sent out the two following bulletins to the relatives and friends of missionaries in Hankow, and China Missionaries in the United States:

March 21, 1929.—In case any of you should be at all troubled by the cable dispatches in the daily papers of March 20, we are sending this line to say that in all probability the conditions are not so unfavorable as the dispatches suggest.

You will notice that they are sent from Peking or Shanghai rather than from Hankow, the chief city of the region which is showing a tendency to break openly with the Nanking government.

Many indications point to such a break. Even if it comes, it does not necessarily follow that Americans resident in the Yangtse Valley will be in any unusual danger. The difficulty will be entirely between certain Chinese factions—not between Chinese and foreigners.

No message has come today from Bishop Roots.

We have cabled the Bishop, letting him know that we count upon him to use the utmost caution in securing the safety of the women and children.

The only Americans outside of Wuhan (Wuchang, Hankow, and Hanyang) are the Rev. Claude L. Pickens, Mrs. Pickens and two children, and Deaconess Elsie Riebe, all at Ichang, four hundred miles west of Hankow.

We have asked the Bishop to keep us fully informed.

Sincerely yours,
John W. Wood.

March 22, 1929.—You will be happy to know that we have received today the following reassuring cable from Bishop Gilman:

"Steamer traffic quite usual. There is good protection. There is no anti-foreign attitude. There is no apprehension."

Sincerely yours,
John W. Wood

Conference of International Association of Agricultural Missions.

The spring Conference of the International Association of Agricultural Missions is to take place in Hartford, Conn., April 18 to 20, with the general theme of rural missions in the light of the Jerusalem Conference.

Professor William D. Barnes, Chairman of the local committee, writes that the School of Missions is setting aside its regular course that students in the Seminary may attend the Conference.

The purpose is to concentrate definitely on the problems of the foreigners in New England, and in the development of a program for agricultural and rural missions in the foreign field.

Among the speakers are: Dr. Warren H. Wilson, Mr. Galen Fisher, Dr. Thos. Jesse Jones, Prof. Luther Weigle, Hartford students, foreign students, if possible, and, says the program, "at least one woman."

Bishop Helfenstein Expresses His Views.

Atlantic City, N. J.—"Marrying parsons" do not meet with the approval of Bishop Edward Helfenstein, coadjutor of the Episcopal Church of Maryland. The bishop traces much of the divorce evil to this practice.

"I have made it a practice never to marry young people when they come to me hurriedly," the Bishop asserted, when in Atlantic City recently. "I never marry people whom I do not know unless they have letters of introduction."

The Bishop is of the opinion that the recent movement of various denominations to join forces will not be successful. He does not feel that the tendency toward a universal religion is practicable. "In the beginning there were only slight differences which caused the separation between the various religions," he said. The gap has grown with the passing of time.

"I feel that if there is any joining of forces, it would only be a temporary arrangement. A separation would no doubt ensue. In this event there would be bitterness which is not felt at the present time.

"It seems most wise to continue as we are, each respecting the difference of opinion of the other religious sects."

The Bishop did not seem to entirely approve of the "blue laws" observed on Sunday in Maryland.

"I feel that if people attend church services, they should be free to spend the remainder of the day as they choose and I do not object to recreation," he opined.

Legislation in Maryland aimed toward revising the present marriage law was mentioned by Bishop Helfenstein. "Maryland still operates under the old British law which states only clergymen may perform a marriage ceremony," he concluded.

"Baptismal and Confirmation Campaigns."

A special appeal is being made direct to each member of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, by President H. Lawrence Choate, urging active cooperation with their rector in bringing men and boys to Confirmation Classes and in endeavoring to enlist newly-confirmed persons in definite personal service for Christ either through Brotherhood membership or otherwise.

A letter on this subject has been sent out from the National Office, together with literature on personal evangelism. From reports of many parishes in past years, it has been found that such work on the part of Brotherhood members results in largely increased Confirmation Classes and in more active church work on the part of newly confirmed persons. Pamphlets on "Baptismal and Confirmation Campaigns" and on "What An Ordinary Man Can Do For Christ" are published by the Brotherhood, and may be secured free on request by addressing Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

Come and See—Go and Tell.

Resolution.

Adopted by Conference of Laymen meeting at Washington Cathedral March 8 to 10, under the leadership of the Bishop of East Carolina:

The conference of laymen held in Washington, D. C., March 8 to 10, 1929, under the joint auspices of the College of Preachers of Washington Cathedral and the National Commission on Evangelism desires to express the profound belief that evangelism represents the most important phase of the Church's activity at the present time. Under the stimulus of this conviction, the members present stand pledged first, to rededicate themselves individually to personal evangelism in their respective communities; and secondly, to make every possible effort by prayer, service and gifts to promote similar conferences in the future.

Further, believing that this phase of activity should be firmly established as the policy of the whole Church, this conference would respectfully request the National Commission on Evangelism to commend to the immediate and serious consideration of the National Council the advisability of suggesting and planning some definite means whereby these conferences may be adequately and continuously promoted and financed.

A Conference of Laymen was held at Washington Cathedral, March 8-10, 1929, under the joint auspices of the College of Preachers and the National Commission on Evangelism and under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. Thomas Campbell Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina.

There were representatives from Washington, D. C., South Carolina, Ohio, Rhode Island, Georgia, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, Maryland and Tennessee.

The first session was devoted to a presentation by Bishop Darst and Bishop Rhinelander, Warden of the College of Preachers, on conditions in the world, in the nation and in the Church today which make it imperative that the Church be more keenly conscious of the need for personal evangelism. The facts on worldwide conditions were squarely stated. The challenge was clear cut.

At the Saturday Morning Session Bishop Darst said that personal evangelism can become a dynamic force in the Church only as the individual becomes overwhelmingly conscious of a sense of sin.

The first step in getting rid of sin is to admit that sin is anything that keeps us from being the kind of man God wants us to be. Sin is always present in a life which is self-centered instead of Christ-centered. The way to expel sin is to let Him in.

The purpose of the Christian life, Bishop Darst continued, is "knowing Christ and making Christ known". The early disciples found that the only way to keep the power that they had received was to pass it on. You can divide the whole membership of the Church into those who are pools and those who are channels. In the first Easter message to the disciples we find all of Church history summarized in six words, "Come and see—go and tell".

Dr. Sturgis told a story that had to do with an insurance executive in a middle western city who, while Dr. Sturgis was sitting in an ante-room, turned down over the telephone an important business interview so that he could attend a Lenten preaching service for which he was responsible. This man's secretary later told Dr. Sturgis that the insurance executive might have lost an opportunity to write a three million dollar policy by not keeping the engagement with the man on the other end of the telephone wire. He had a prior duty to his Church and his God and he discharged that duty regardless of what effect it would have upon his business.

At the Saturday evening session, Bishop Darst testified that Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, one of the leading laymen in the Diocese of Washington, is making a remarkable contribution to the Church as field representative of the National Commission on Evangelism. The file of letters in Bishop Darst's office shows that the Commission was providentially guided in asking Dr. Glazebrook to give up his profession in the Capital City in order to go out as a lay evangelist. During recent months, he has visited some eighty parishes in dioceses from Florida to Maine and as far west as Ohio, leaving behind in each one three key laymen whom he designates as Peter, James and John. These three men are expected to enlist the services of nine others, thus giving them twelve laymen, in accordance with the apostolic plan, who report to their rector and ask for some definite work to do in the extension of Christ's Kingdom. In Bishop Darst's home city of Wilmington, N. C., these twelve men go out two by two, one reading the service and one making the address. Of the six who deliver the addresses, three are lawyers of prominence and one is the President of a railroad corporation. They have rendered very effective service; their visitations have been good for many missions in the Diocese of East Carolina; and what is always true, their service has been most beneficial to these men themselves.

Mr. Miller, Chancellor of the Diocese of Georgia, gave a splendid informal talk on his experiences in doing personal evangelistic work throughout communities in his state. Mr. Miller said that although he had been a Churchman for many years, it never occurred to him that he had any personal responsibility in witnessing for Christ until he became interested in preparing for a visit of Gypsy Smith, Junior, to Augusta. Later he was asked to visit various Episcopal churches throughout Georgia to help prepare the way for the Bishops' Crusade. Out of these two experiences came his conviction that testifying personally to the love of God and the power of the risen Christ is the most joyful and soul-satisfying work which any man can undertake. It is the first obligation of any man or woman who professes to be a member of the Church.

Mr. Gibberd of Glendale, O., brought out the suggestion that the Christian Church in general and personal evangelism in particular have much to gain by appropriating and adapting certain principles recently evolved in such modern phases of social service as mental hygiene, industrial psychology and psychiatry. He emphasized that the aims of all these sciences are not identified with the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but nevertheless the men who are working out problems in mental hygiene often make findings which could be applied with real helpfulness to the approach to an individual in personal evangelism.

One of the things taken up at the Sunday morning session was the personal equipment which the individual must have to be an effective channel for evangelistic effort. In the main, all our troubles will be found to center in one word, "self". "Let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." We often yearn for power but we are not willing to pay the cost of having that power in our life. Perhaps an oversentimental theology and a cushioned religion in the past have had something to do with this lack of emphasis on self-denial. Religion ought not to be made too easy. Harking back to the days of the early Church when it took a sense of the heroic to follow the Master, we can see many reasons why religion should be made hard.

Mr. George Smith, of Providence spoke for more than twenty minutes unfolding with a quiet sincerity and a compelling realism which gripped the hearts and minds of every man present the story of his own transformation during the last eighteen months from a self-centered man to a Christian-centered husband and father now enjoying happiness and serenity in the center of his Christ-centered family.

He concluded by emphasizing his gratitude to Dr. Frank Buchman and his associates in "A Christian Fellowship of the First Century" for the influence they had had upon Mrs. Smith and himself in bringing them into their new and wonderfully vital relationship with Jesus Christ.

The main theme of the final session of the conference was "what impressions are we going to take back to our home communities and what are we going to do about them". Each man present was asked to speak briefly on this theme.

The conference was brought to a close when Bishop Rhinelander dismissed the members with his blessing. E. L.

Famous English Clergyman Passes On.

The Rev. Geoffrey Anketell Studdert-Kennedy, famous war chaplain, died on March 8, at Liverpool, after a short illness of influenza. He was a forceful character. The soldiers affectionately called him "Woodbine Willie", Woodbine being the name of a cigarette, which stuck to him until his death.

He was born in 1883. Mr. Kennedy was ordained in 1908 and became vicar of St. Paul's, Worcester in 1914. He had been rector at St. Edmunds since 1922.

He was appointed honorary chaplain to the Court and occasionally preached at Buckingham Palace, the King making it a point to hear him at least once a year.

A Practical Plan.

A practical plan for developing habits of regular attendance at the Church School and Church services has been developed by the Junior Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and, after approval by the Presiding Bishop as Honorary President and by the National Executive Committee of the Brotherhood is now being given to the field.

Each Junior Brotherhood member will be marked each week on three points—attendance at Chapter meeting, at Church School, and at Church service—a total of three points per week or thirty-nine per quarter. Allowing for necessary absences due to sickness or other causes, thirty points per quarter is accepted as a reasonable standard, and each boy attaining this standard or above will be given a quarterly certificate. Those receiving four quarterly certificates will be given a diploma with spaces for annual seals for eight successive years. This diploma will bear the signature of the Presiding Bishop of the Church as Honorary President of the Brotherhood, with that of the President and of the General Secretary; and will be countersigned by the rector, Church School Superintendent, and Chapter Director. Public recognition will be given through the columns of "St. Andrew's Cross" and diocesan papers to chapters or individuals making particularly good records.

Additional information and supplies can be secured from Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia.

It Is Enough.

Elizabeth M. Bruen.

It is enough, dear Lord,
I need not flaming sword,
Nor Cherubim,
Nor miracle
To tell me of Thy resurrection morn;
It is enough, dear Lord,
From bulb to sod—
A few green leaves
Have from the cold, brown earth been born;
It is enough, dear Lord,
Yea, Lord, it is enough.

It is enough, dear Lord,
I need not flowering bush,
Nor leaves to spring
From branches bare—
Nor need I see my green leaves come to bloom;
It is enough, dear Lord
For me to see
The first green leaves,
To know that Thou dist leave an empty tomb;
It is enough, dear Lord.
Yea, Lord, it is enough.

BISHOP BRENT DEAD.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, beloved Bishop of the Diocese of Western New York, died at Lausanne, Switzerland, on March 27. He had long been in ill health.

He became internationally known through his long fight against the opium traffic while missionary bishop of the Philippine Islands. His accomplishments as Chief of Chaplains of the American Expeditionary Forces during the World War brought him high honor, including the Distinguished Service Medal.

Palm Sunday and Holy Week Services in a Protestant Episcopal Church.

A dramatic representation of the entry of Christ into Jerusalem was a feature of the eleven o'clock service on Palm Sunday morning at the Little Church Around the Corner, a Protestant Episcopal Church. The clergy and choir bearing palms proceeded in solemn procession through the church. Part of the choir was stationed outside the closed doors of the church and the hymn, "All Glory, Laud and Honor", was sung antiphonally by the singers within and without, as the Passover pilgrims sang outside the city walls of Jerusalem with response from their friends within. Blessed palms were distributed at all services on Sunday.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York, preached at the four o'clock Vespers service at the Little Church and administered the sacrament of confirmation at that service.

The flower-laden altar of repose on Maundy Thursday will be a striking observance of Holy Week, where the Blessed Sacrament carried in procession from the high altar will be especially honored throughout the day by appointed watchers.

The Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, Superior, Order of the Holy Cross, will be the preacher at the Three Hours' service on Good Friday. He also preached on Palm Sunday morning and at the noonday service during Holy Week.

Holy Week Services to be Held at Broadhurst Theatre by Episcopal Actors' Guild.

Holy Week services are being held at 12:15 P. M. daily at the Broadhurst Theatre under the auspices of the Episcopal Actors' Guild, it has been announced by Percy Moore, executive secretary of the Guild and himself a well-known actor.

Last year the Guild inaugurated the custom of holding services during Holy Week at a Broadway theatre with such successful response from both the theatrical profession and from laymen that the program is being carried out again this Lent. Prominent clergymen are preaching briefly each day, and a special musical program rendered by well-known artists of the opera and concert stage.

The Holy Week services began Monday (March 25) with the Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, D. D., rector of Old Trinity, as the preacher. Mr. Matt Webber, tenor, sang. The Rt. Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, preached on Tuesday, and Grant Kimbell, tenor, was the singer. The Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, preached Wednesday, and Frank Croxton, popular tenor and a member of The Lambs, gave a musical program. On Thursday, the Rev. W. Harold Weigle, Jr., Chaplain of the Episcopal Actors' Guild, will preach, and the soloist will be Mme. Louise Homer Stires. The Good Friday preacher will be the Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York; and the soloist will be Grace Divine, soprano of the Metropolitan Company.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Bishop of Central New York, is the preacher for the Lenten afternoon services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of Holy Week, at St. James' Episcopal Church, and is also the Old Trinity preacher in Holy Week.

Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of the Washington Cathedral will be the preacher at the Three Hours' service on Good Friday at St. James' Episcopal Church. A special choir of women's voices will lead in the hymns which will be the only music. On the evening of Good Friday, the Rev. Dr. Frank W. Crowder, the rector, will preach at a special "Preparatory Service" as preparation for communicants on Easter Day.

Principal Appointed for National Cathedral School.

Miss Mabel M. Turner, of New York City, has been appointed to the position of principal of the National Cathedral School for Girls, to succeed the late Jessie Claire McDonald, who died in Canada last summer during the vacation period. Miss Turner is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College and obtained her Master's degree at Columbia University in 1910. Miss Turner's teaching positions have been at Barnard School for Girls, New York, National Board of Young Women's Christian Association at Prague and head of the High School Department at the Birch Mather School in New York, the last named being her present position. Miss Turner will assume her new post June 1.

Placed in Cathedral Crypt.

A distinguished gathering of national and international figures, including the President and Mrs. Hoover, Justices Stone and Butler of the Supreme Court, Vice-President Curtis, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior and Labor, the Postmaster General and Attorney General and members of the Senate and House, Ambassadors and Ministers and other representatives of nearly a score of nations, witnessed the solemn rites of committing to the crypt of Washington Cathedral the remains of Melville E. Stone on Saturday morning March 23. The family group included Miss Elizabeth Stone, only daughter of the journalist, two grandchildren, and Arthur S. Thompson, Mr. Stone's secretary. Mrs. Stone was unable, on account of illness to leave her New York home. Seated with the family group were Frank B. Noyes, president; Kent Cooper, general manager, and members of the Board of Directors of the Associated Press.

Mr. Stone's death occurred February 15 in New York City.

Laymen's Conferences.

The final conference of a series for laymen which has been held during Lent by the College of Preachers of Washington Cathedral, took place Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Mt. St. Alban. Dr. William C. Sturgis, formerly Educational Secretary of the Department of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was the leader. Thirteen laymen from Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania and Illinois were in attendance.

The sessions took place in the Memorial Wing of the Cathedral Library with devotional exercises in the Bethlehem Chapel.

Tablet Unveiled at Bruton Parish Church.

On Palm Sunday, at the eleven o'clock service in Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, was unveiled a beautiful marble tablet given by Mr. T. Catesby Jones, of New York, in memory of his ancestors, Thomas Jones and Mark Catesby.

Mr. Jones was present to make the formal presentation.

The tablet was especially designed for Bruton Church by the studios of J. and R. Lamb of New York City.

The tablet inscription follows:

"This tablet has been placed to the glory of God and in connection with an endowment gift to the Altar Guild of Bruton Parish Church, in memory of Thomas Jones, born in London, England; died May 21, 1757. Vestryman of Bruton Parish. Member of the House of Burgesses for the College of William and Mary, 1720-22. Member of the first Board of Aldermen, City of Williamsburg; and Mark Catesby, F. R. S., born in Sudbury, England; died December 23, 1749. An English Naturalist resident in Virginia 1712-17, and in Carolina, Georgia, and the Bahamas, 1722-1726. Author of 'The Natural History of Carolina, Florida, and the Bahama Island" 1731-1748, being the first scientific description of wild life in North America. The first naturalist to describe most of our common birds, to introduce to cultivation the effect of altitude upon geographic distribution. A pioneer in American science whose energy and enthusiasm preserved for posterity the fruits of his labor. Thomas Catesby Jones, A. D. 1928."

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. John I. B. Larned, Suffragan Bishop.

Campaign for G. T. S.

The clergy of this diocese are organizing to help in the campaign for the General Theological Seminary. Bishop Stires, a trustee though not an alumnus of that school, at a meeting of the Long Island G. T. S. alumni gave his cordial endorsement to a proposal that they enlist actively in the effort now under way to increase the endowment. The Bishop was very generous in his tribute to the Seminary and to the men from there who are at work in his diocese. The Rev. St. Clair Hester, D. D., presided at the meeting, and the Rev. Professor Batten, D. D., acting dean of the Seminary, presented very clearly and forcefully the needs of the institution. It was unanimously voted that Long Island alumni would attempt to raise $120,000 to endow the chair of Christian Ethics, which as yet has no endowment. A sub-committee was appointed for each section of the diocese, Bishop Stires to be Honorary Chairman of the whole: in Brooklyn, the Rev. Drs. Lacey and Gardner and the Rev. Mr. Webb; in Kueens, the Rev. Messrs. C. A. Brown and R. T. Homans; in Nassau County, the Rev. C. W. Hinton and Archdeacon Duffield; in Suffolk, the Rev. Messrs Spencer-Mounsey, Watson and Fish.

Bishop Larned on Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Bishop Larned was the principal speaker at an interdenominational meeting in the interests of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, held at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, recently. He called attention to the increase of juvenile crime which always occurs just after the schools close for the summer, and advocated the Vacation Bible Schools as an occupational preventive of juvenile delinquency. He dwelt also upon the dangers of the city streets as playgrounds, the lack of other play space, and the Vacation Schools as an opportunity to keep some of the children off the streets. He spoke of the chance to teach religion every day for five weeks, reaching some who are not reached at any other time; and of the notable effect such effort had had upon teachers, some of whom had even been attracted by this experience into the ministry as a vocation.

Epiphany Opens Chapel.

The new Church of the Epiphany, Brooklyn, having been completed, the former church is to be turned into a parish hall. It has been decided, however, to keep the chancel of the old church as a chapel. This will both prevent the seeming desecration of the former sanctuary, and also provide a very useful adjunct to the new building. The two buildings are so situated in relation to each other that the chancel of the older building is conveniently accessible from the porch of the new. The chapel will seat about twenty-five people.

Dr. Melish to Jews on Palestine.

The Rev. Dr. Melish recently spoke to the congregation of Temple Shaari Zedek of impressions he received in Palestine, and made an earnest appeal for better understanding and friendship between people of different races and beliefs.

Other News.

The Woman's Missionary Union of Flushing, representing various communions in that old town, met recently in the old Quaker Meeting House there. This building was erected in 1695, and was offered for the first services of the Church of England in Flushing, and so used until 1702, when the congregation secured the use of the "Guard House, West of the Pond".

The Rev. Spence Burton, S. S. J. E., will preach the Three Hours at St. Paul's Church, Clinton Street, Brooklyn.

COLLECTS FOR EASTER DAY.

Almighty God, Who through Thine only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, hast overcome death, and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; we humbly beseech Thee that, as by Thy special grace preventing us, Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect, through Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.

O God, who for our redemption didst give Thine only begotten Son to the death of the Cross, and by His glorious resurrection hast delivered us from the power of our enemy; Grant us so to die daily from sin, that we may evermore live with Him in the joy of His resurrection, through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE TRUTH OF SPRING.

If He, the Christ, went down into the dust of death,
Then is this fragrant first sweet breath
Of Spring a lie,
And all this golden world a trust betrayed.
If He could die, then all must die;
Love only flames to fade.
There is no promise in the primrose,
No hope in budding trees,
Life is a senseless stream that flows
Into the silent seas of nothingness at last.
There is no Whence, no Whither, and no Why,
Thought is the final mockery;
A chance by-product of the brain.
As blank, as purposeless and vain,
As all the rest of this mad scheme of things.
Its shining wings bear mortals to their death,
As, after witless wandering flight,
The moth is burned up in the light,
That through the darkness lured him to his doom.
If Christ be dead.
Nought but the winter and the gloom Remain,
But Jesus lives!
Then all creation swell the strain,
Shout and sing ye golden flowers.
Principalities and powers
Resurrexit! Resurrexit!
God's green Spring is true again.
Thunder out the glad refrain.

The Purpose of the Resurrection.

A business man who sometimes attends my Church in Brighton, but who like so many others remains somewhat detached from Christian faith and observance, said to me quite recently: "The principal difficulty of which sensible men are conscious today in regard to believing in the Christian religion is the fact that it is associated with so much that is frankly incredible. Take the empty tomb, for instance. Can you or any rational being sincerely believe that a person who had been maltreated as Jesus was on Good Friday could have risen from the dead a day and a half later and shown Himself to His friends unscathed?"

My reply was that not only did I believe it just because I was a fairly rational being, but that I would undertake to show that there was a sense in which my questioner himself was compelled to believe it also. Nay more, there is no escape from such a conclusion unless we are prepared to repudiate all that deserves to be called historical evidence. I think we often begin at the wrong end when discussing this great subject. We analyze the various gospel accounts of the marvel of the empty tomb, the mysterious intermittent comings and goings of the risen Saviour, the testimonies of eye witnesses, and so on; but do we sufficiently realize what these successive experiences meant to the men and women who formed the first Christian society and proceeded to evangelize the world with the glad news of salvation through One who had overcome death and opened to mankind the gates of everlasting life?

Briefly and plainly put, the purpose of the resurrection of Christ was not primarily that of comforting and reassuring those who mourned His loss; it was not that of proving to them that He was still alive. Of course, this was included in the effect produced upon their minds by the stupendous event we celebrate at the principal festival of the Christian year, but the witness of the New Testament is that it was not looked upon by the apostolic church as of first importance. Nowhere within the pages of the New Testament do we come upon the statement that the original followers of Jesus were not sure of the reality of life beyond the grave until the fact was demonstrated to them by their Master's temporary return in the visible form in which they had hitherto known Him. We are not told that they had ever doubted the existence of the spiritual world and the survival of the soul after death. They may have done so, or some of them may, but if so the fact is not stressed.

What really needed to be done and was done when Christ was "declared to be the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead" was to convince the dismayed and mourning disciples of the invincibility of the spiritual values they had come to discern and worship in Him. They now saw that these were indestructible because inherently divine and eternal. These constitute the background of all life, the chief reason for human existence, the goal of all high aspiration, the end of all moral effort. More came out of the tomb of Christ on the first Easter Day than had gone into it on Good Friday. There arose a new hope for the world, a new confidence in the imperishableness of goodness and love, human or superhuman. No one can read the letters of St. Paul without seeing how clearly the Christians of the apostolic age had grasped this truth. They were not looking forward to mere survival after death, but to the full possession of the kind of life they had seen in their Master, and they believed that in union with Him, and as sharers in His triumph over evil, they would attain to participation in that which is from everlasting to everlasting and world without end, the unshadowed blessedness and glory of God.

Can any one deny that this was the faith which so mightily reinforced by the resurrection of Christ? One might use a stronger term and say the experience which was born of the resurrection of Christ. As a factor in the shaping of history none can gainsay the reality of this experience, none can belittle its importance in the life of today.

That something overwhelming must have happened on the first Christian Easter day goes without saying, or, humanly speaking, the new life of faith in the living Christ, Christ not after the flesh but after the spirit, could not have come into being. All attempts to explain away or minimize the unique character of the resurrection as an historical event fail to do justice to the wondrous change it produced in the minds of those who loved and followed Jesus. These attempts are usually due to a conscious or unconscious bias against believing in the possibility of the reanimation of a dead body or that the said body could behave as the body of the risen Lord is reported to have done afterwards. This is the bias behind the question quoted in my opening paragraph. But it no longer has the force it possessed half a century ago. We are not so sure as we used to be of what is a priori impossible in the interrelation of matter and spirit; indeed we are coming rapidly to the point of view of the men who wrote the New Testament, namely, that it is impossible to draw a hard and fast dividing line between what is material and what is spiritual. Science is now telling us that things which are seen are not made out of things that do appear, that there is an invisible universe which is far more real than that which is revealed to sense perception, and it is ever and indispensably active in the creation and re-creation of the most familiar material forms amid which we dwell. It is entirely in the fitness of things that the festival of Easter should have come to be associated with the season of spring, for in the wondrous miracle of the re-birth of life and beauty in the natural world which is taking place at this special period we have a parallel to what took place on the spiritual plane when our Lord appeared to a forlorn little group of Galileans in an upper room at Jerusalem after the tragedy of Calvary. None who had seen Him die on the cross or been aware of the manner in which His body had been lacerated by the dreadful Roman scourge could have been easily brought to believe that He stood before them again unharmed, and not only unharmed but with the mien of a conqueror. There was no need for Him to heap confusion and dismay upon His foes; it was quite sufficient that those who loved and believed in Him should know that heaven, not hell, was victor in the strife through which He had passed, that good, not evil, was enthroned in God's wide universe.

It matters little how that conviction was brought home to these sorrowing hearts. If there be those who find it easier to believe that what the apostles saw was merely an apparition let them do so, but they are making a difficulty where none exists. For though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now and henceforth know we Him so no more.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, D. D., in Church of England Newspaper.

This Great Hope.

The significant truth about man is that he of all God's creatures has the power to reckon time. Stored up in his mind is a memory of the past, consciousness of the present, and hope and faith in the future. He takes the measure of life by history, by experience, and by intuition; he makes his judgments by things which he has known in the past, and he takes thought of the future on the basis of this knowledge. Life cannot be understood by any one of us without a comprehension of these three elements in time. The more understanding we have of the Divine and human events which have taken place in the course of history, the better we will be able to interpret the present and foretell the probable future. The great prophets have been those whose mental and spiritual eyes were open to see the whole of life in its significant relationships. The processes of education, enlightenment, and inspiration come to us for the sole purpose of unfolding the tangled skein of living, and giving it significance.

The fact of Easter is a revelation in Divine and human experience. It explains all things if only we can grasp its meaning. Jesus was born in order to reveal what God was like and what man might become through faith in Him and the power of His resurrection. Life only becomes abundant when we see its triumph over sin, pain, and death. There is no real assurance of a continuing personality, of the persistence of the better elements of man's character, without this authoritative statement of the Son of God, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die". Easter solves the supreme questions for mankind, "Who am I, and where do I belong?" We cannot see how they can be solved in any other fashion. We cannot tell either our character or our destiny, except by a Divine Word from the Creator and Father of all. There is no final proof of immortality except through faith in the assurance that Christ, Himself, rose from the dead and came to bring the abundant life to all who received Him and accepted His message and the evidence of His resurrection by faith.

It is perfectly possible to see what happens to humanity when they lose faith in the hope of Easter, beauty, truth, love, purity, in fact all the ideals of life are dragged into the mud and welter of animal existence. Man only of all creatures reaches out to eternity. He does so because he has a consciousness of time, he lives in history and experience and he knows how imperfect are the actualities of existence without the hope of betterment, and the continuance of experience into the realm of perfection. What is happening to the great majority of human beings about us is only too evident. There are thousands upon thousands who are still living according to the flesh. They have not yet been born into Jesus' spiritual Kingdom of God. We cannot believe that their evolution or progress ceases with the death of the physical body. In some other life, we somehow hope that they will be quickened, will be born again. With others of us the maze of living has caused us to lose our way, and we turn the microscope upon our own thought, and when we can find neither God nor soul there, we say they do not exist. Because of these two large groups in modern life, our thinking has become thoroughly pessimistic. It does not take much of a seer to discover this.

But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, there are still those who have this great hope in them, which was of the very essence of early Christianity. "Christ is risen," and because He rose from the dead, all life has new significance. Love is eternal, peace is abiding, and hope is immortal.—Bishop Remington, in Oregon Trail Churchman.

BECAUSE OF PETER.

Rebekah Crouse Costanzo.

He tried to ease the load upon His back,
Struggling hard for breath,
Heavily set upon the road to death,
The cross galled where the thong had cut.
Those jeering men (still by His side!)—
Playing their game of Blindman's Bluff;
"Prophesy!
Who is he that struck mee "
They had cried.

He had felt no pain (not then),
Because of Peter.
Having shortly before turned, and looked at Peter,
Blindfolded, He had seen Him weeping bitterly.

Later, the pain had come—
The fire now charring the cross upon His back,
Burning Him deeper, in lashes,
Letting Him down, spineless, as ashes.
"Prophesy!
Who is he that struck thee?"
They had cried—
Those hating men (still by His side)!
Having felt no blow,
He did not know—
Strange that He did not know!
Blindfolded, He had seen only Peter—
Peter weeping bitterly—
(Stroke upon stroke).
Then, wondering if it might have been Either James or John,
He could not go on.

An Easter Meditation.

H. H. Smith.

At this season when our thoughts turn to the glorious life beyond the grave, let us recall the words of the seer of Patmos: "And I heard a great voice out of the throne saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His peoples, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God: and God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more; for the first things are passed away. And He that sitteth on the throne said, Behold I make all things new. And He saith, Write: for these words are faithful and true. And He said unto me, They are come to pass. I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto Him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit these things; and I will be his God, and He shall be my son." The Authorized Version reads: "He that overcometh shall inherit 'all things'," instead of "these things," but the sense is the same, for to inherit "these things" means to inherit all the blessings just named, and these include everything that is necessary for the happiness of a human soul.

The Christian thinks of heaven, reads of heaven, dreams of heaven, but God in His wisdom has not seen fit to reveal to us fully just what that life is. Perhaps it would be impossible for Him to do so while we still dwell in the flesh. But we may comfort and cheer ourselves with this thought: heaven will mean the full satisfaction of all our desire: "we shall inherit all things." Some long to be released from physical infirmity, and they shall be: "there shall be no more pain." When Robert Hall, whose body was continually racked with pain was asked his idea of heaven, he replied: "My idea of heaven is rest, rest." We all long to be delivered from sin, and to serve God perfectly, and we shall have this yearning satisfied, for no sin can mar that life or separate us from our Lord. We long to draw nigh to the blessed Saviour and look upon Him who has redeemed us and saved us, and so we shall, for "we shall see Him as He is." We cannot look beyond the veil and see what God has prepared for those who love and serve Him, but we can comfort ourselves with this Scriptural thought: heaven will mean that nothing will be lacking for our complete happiness. Here we can anchor our hopes with peace and joy, and with perfect trust and contentment await that hour when "this mortal shall put on immortality". A few lines from one of Horatius Bonar's poems is impressively appropriate:

"When I shall awake in that fair morn of morns,
After whose dawning never night returns,
And with whose glory day eternal burns,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall meet with those whom
I have loved,
Clasp in my eager arms the long removed,
And find how faithful Thou to me has proved,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall gaze upon the face of Him
Who for me died, with eye no longer
dim,
And praise Him with the everlasting hymn,
I shall be satisfied."

ON THE WAY TO EMMAUS.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

Discouraged, hungry, foot-sore, weary, two fishermen, quiet sought:
Sad within them were their hearts, disconsolate, soul-sick, that day;
Sore travailing in mind, with feet like clods of iron, and their skies grey;
The cup of fruition had been theirs they thought;
But in the act of drinking had been dashed away:
Three days the Friend they had loved and followed had lain in the grave;
Full of doubts and fears sadly they talked and walked along the road:
Another walked and talked with them;
new hope and fresh courage to them gave;
They brake and shared their bread with Him; His friendship and guidance eagerly did crave;
A roadside acquaintance; and yet! He lifted their heart-breaking load!
And then! Fullness of joy! The way He touched the bread so familiar was that they Soon did recognize their Lord and Master walked with them the Emmaus way.

"WHERE THEY LAID HIM."

Anna Swan Reynolds.

The mist of darkness slowly crept away
As dawned the glorious light of Easter Day:
A pathway led along the misty trail
Through fields of ripening grain: on every side
White lilies bloom, and bird-songs sweet attune.
And yet upon yon dreadful spot there rests
Of all the world its blackest blot.
What bird
Could build its little nest within the arms
Of that black cross? A Miserere sounds
Their song—a chant of sorrow and of loss.
Not many leagues away but yesterday
Was laid with tender care the Son of God—
The Christ—the Crucified—and closed the tomb
With one great stone to rest in mercy's sleep
Until His Father's call—when, lo, behold!
On Easter Day the stone was rolled away!

"Peace Be Unto You."

On the dawn of the First Easter morning a weeping woman stood beside a grave. And on the evening of that day, within closed doors, a band of sorrowful men met together with fear in their hearts, "fear of the Jews". The woman was weeping, and the men were sad, because they had lost Jesus. And their hearts were sore, and their hopes were dead. But "Jesus came". Out of the awful silence into which men thought they had put Him forever, He came. Came into the garden and said, "Mary"; and a wild joy filled her heart: "I have seen the Lord." Came again at the close of the day to the forlorn and terrified band, and said: "Peace be unto you." Spoken to men who had met in fear, and who looked forward to troubled days, it had a wondrous power to soothe, coming from the lips of the Lord, fresh from His victory over death. "The disciples, therefore, were glad when they saw the Lord." Jesus is strangely earnest about this peace. Those worn, hunted men need it; and He will not leave them till He has made them sure of it. "Jesus, therefore, said unto them again, 'Peace be unto you'."

The vision of the risen Christ, with a message of peace upon His lips, turned the disciples' terror into gladness, and still today are that vision and that message mighty to save from any grief or fear that frets us. To all who face sorrow, defeat, bereavement, death, the Easter voice says, "Peace be unto you"—a voice from a world wherein these things have all been swallowed up in victory.—J. E. McFayden.

Jim's Easter Lily.

Jim had been "one of the boys" and a favorite, because he was always so cheery and on the lookout to "help a fellow". Every newsboy in the crowd would swear by Jim. Many times when he had sold his papers he would help one of the "midgets" as he called the smaller boys, by crying his papers for him, and being bright, quick and pleasant trade usually came his way.

There were many sides to Jim's character. He was a hard worker, a good fighter if it was necessary, a fine story teller between working hours, and in his soul was a great love for flowers.

When he was missed from the usual corner some one would say: "Jim? Oh, he's likely lookin' at the posies in the flower store," and every Saturday night would find him with a blossom of some sort in his buttonhole. He longed to see the country with its stretch of hills and fields, its clear sky and the woods where the violets grew.

"Just think," he said to his little friend Bob, "you can pick 'em right off the ground without payin' or even askin'. Mother said so."

Jim had no anticipation of seeing the outside of the busy city streets, but he did, and it all came about in this way:

There was a large fire and the boys were rushing headlong after the engines, when a little fellow stumbled and fell in front of a moving car. Jim saw the danger and made a hurried leap to his rescue, fairly throwing the child from the track, but he had no time to save himself, and when he opened his eyes again it was in the hospital word.

The weeks went by and Jim was sadly missed. He said to one of the boys: "Seems to me if I could get to the country I'd be well again," and then his voice grew husky; "but I couldn't sell papers there, could I?"

Easter was very near and Jim began to ask the boys how the flower stores looked.

"Lots of fine lilies, ain't there? I'd have one this year, all my own; been saving up for it for a long time, but now I'll forget it."

There was a special meeting of the boys that night, and it was decided that Jim was to go to the country, but how?

The boys had planned to buy an Easter lily for him, but it had not entered their minds that they could do more, but when the heart is in the work it usually wins, and it did this time. They decided to tell Jim's story to his old customers. They knew many of them by sight, and were sure they would listen, for they had often asked for him. One old gentleman was especially interested in him, and after asking many questions, he said if one of the boys would go with him he would go to the hospital to see Jim.

Bob was chosen to go, as he had been there the oftenest, living not far from the hospital. When Jim saw Bob and the old gentleman his face brightened with pleasure.

"It's very kind of you, sir, to come to see me."

"I have missed you, my boy: you have sold me my evening paper for a long time."

He then talked of many things, drawing out the story of Jim's life. He promised to come again soon, and when he and Bob were alone he said earnestly: "Jim is a worthy fellow, and I will help you to get him into the country but you must do your best first."

The boys did their best, and their fund grew steadily, nickel by nickel, and sometimes a dime found a home in the box. The day before Easter they again counted their money, and the old man stopped on the corner.

"Well, boys, what have you by this time?"

"Five dollars. Will that pay his fare, do you think, sir? We could send him more after a while."

"You're a plucky lot of boys, but what about the lily you were going to buy? That will cost you something."

"Oh, we've bought it."

Inquiry told that the boys had gone without their dinners many days to buy Jim's lily.

"Well, boys, tomorrow morning, if you will all come to my house and bring the lily along, I will contribute my share to the fund."

The boys were puzzled, and yet they believed in the old gentleman, and Easter morning, with as clean hands and faces as they could muster, they wended their way to the beautiful house on Lowell Street.

A colored servant opened the door and treated them as politely "as if we were real gents," Bob said afterward. He led them upstairs and through a long hall and opened a door into a beautiful sunny room.

Come right in, boys," the old gentleman called cheerily, but they stood motionless in the doorway. There sat Jim in a big wheel chair.

Bob nearly dropped the lily, but Jim put out his hand and said: "Oh, boys, did you bring it to me? How good of you!" And then such a visit as they had!

The old gentleman slipped out of the room, and then Jim told them how he had been to see him each day and finally had brought him here.

"He lives here alone, boys, and hasn't a child in the world," and here Jim broke down, but the old gentleman was there to finish the story.

"Yes, Jim is to be my boy now, and he has you, his true, staunch friends, to thank for what has come to him in the time of his misfortune, and the sacrifice you have made for him will some day be rewarded."

The boys' faces were radiant, and no jealousy found a place in their hearts, for, as I said before, they would swear by Jim.

He shook their hands warmly and some color stole into his face. "You're bricks, boys, every one of you, and I thank you for the lily and all the rest."

With lighter hearts the boys went out into the world again.

Jim's lily nodded and the Easter bells rang on.—Selected.

The Easter Lily Twins.

"Isn't it lovely that our new white dresses are alike?" smiled Carol, as she and Betty walked home from school with their arms around each other.

"Yes, and our pink hair bows are just alike!" giggled Betty happily. "Why, if our hair was the same color, folks couldn't tell us apart on Easter."

"And our Easter lilies are twins, too," laughed Carol. "Oh, I'm so glad both our lilies have two blossoms!"

Betty and Carol lived next door to each other. Since they were old enough to talk, they had wanted everything alike. To be sure, Carol's things always lasted longer. Betty's were very often lost or left out in the rain to spoil.

Months before, the teacher of Betty and Carol's class in Sunday school had given each of her twelve pupils a lily bulb. These were to be grown and cared for so that they would be ready to carry to church on Easter Sunday. Carol had watched hers anxiously. Betty, too, had done well, even though she often had to be reminded. Now the two plants both showed beautiful blossoms, and Easter was only two days away.

Saturday morning was warm and spring-like; so Betty took her lily out on the back porch to water it. She meant to carry it right back into the house, but she played with the kitten a moment; then Carol called to her, and she ran over to see what was wanted.

Carol had an Easter gift, a new story book, and when Betty returned it was almost noon. Suddenly she thought of the lily on the porch. Quickly she ran to the place where she had set it. The Easter lily was gone!

Mother was sorry, but she had not seen it since Betty put it there. Bobby, Betty's brother, who was two years old, just grinned and said she ought to take better care of things.

What was she to do? All the other girls would have theirs. She was to sing, too, with the lily in her arms.

Betty ran to tell Carol, and Carol tried to comfort her. But Carol's lily on the table made Betty feel worse, and she soon went home.

So Betty was very unhappy as she dressed and walked downstairs on Sunday morning. After breakfast she went to look out of the window. Why, what was that? Betty looked twice before she could believe it. There on the porch where her own had been, stood an Easter lily!

Betty went out to make sure it was real. Then she dashed across the lawn to tell Carol.

"I'm so glad," said Carol sweetly.

"She didn't seem so very surprised," thought Betty, as she hurried back to get ready for Sunday school. Then, as she buttoned her pretty dress and tied her ribbon, she said, "Bobby must have hid my lily and then brought it back".

Then Betty went down to the garage to get into the car. When she came to the door she gave a little start. There, on the bench beside the lawn mower and the gardening tools, was another lily exactly like the one in her arms!

"Why!" began Betty; then she saw that Bobby was grinning. "Oh, Bobby, you played a trick!"

"I didn't mean to make you feel bad. Honest, Betty," replied her brother. "That one on the bench is yours. I brought it in out of the wind yesterday. Then I thought I'd wait 'til this morning to tell you. I don't know anything about the other flower, though."

"Then it's Carol's," said Betty. "Her lily is the twin to mine, and she was going without because mine was lost. Let's hurry, father, and call for her. I'm going to try to remember things after this, like Carol does."

"Then you two'll be so much alike we'll get you mixed, like the lilies," teased Bobby.—Little Learners' Paper.

THE MISSION HOME.

St. Andrew's Mountain Mission

PIEDMONT PARISH, MARSHALL, VA.
Rev. W. B. Everett, III, Rector.
A STATEMENT.

About two years ago we began making special appeal for funds with which to purchase a desirable property for a Mission Home adjoining our Mission Chapel. The response was as gratifying as it was unexpected, considering the many worthy objects for which appeals flooded the country.

We have moved into this property where our workers are housed and which serves as a meeting place for the different classes and various activities of our growing mission work.

There is still due upon the property and equipment nearly $3,260.00, which will be due early in April, and we wish to wipe out this indebtedness as soon as possible. We hate to keep begging, but somehow—from somewhere—we must secure funds to clear our Mission Home of edbt. Who will help?

The late Bishop Brown, on two occasions, said, that he considered the work being done at St. Andrew's one of the very best social service works anywhere in the diocese.

The Right Rev. St. George Tucker, present Bishop, endorses th's appeal.

I agree to subscribe to the above fund the sum of $..... , to be paid in cash or istalments as follows.....

Please make checks payable to Rev. W. B. Everett, III, Marshall, Va., or Mr. John T. Ramey, Parish Treasurer, Marshall, Va.

CHRIST CHURCH PARISH

MIDDLESEX COUNTY, VIRGINIA

AN APPEAL.

Old Christchurch Parish is renewing her life and beginning to fulfill her true mission in ministering to the social as well as to the religious needs of the people of Middlesex County.

Plans are well under way to begin, immediately, to restore Christ Church, to build a Rectory and Community House on property recently donated and adjoining the Church.

Located as Christ Church is, in the very heart of the country, there is no question but that, through the Community House, the social needs of the people may, to a very great degree, be met. It is planned to make this Community House the social centre of the county. By means of moving pictures, frequent lectures on vital subjects, library and reading rooms, it is believed that such an institution will be of incalculable value to present and future generations.

If this great work appeals to you, as surely it must, will you not send a contribution to help it forward?

Contributions may be sent to:

MRS. WM. C. SEGAR
Stormont, Va.,
or
THE BANK OF MIDDLESEX
Saluda, Va.

"The plans for restoring Christ Church and building a rectory and community house on property adjoining the church, have been carefully examined by me, and I most cordially commend the above appeal. The need for carrying out these improvements is urgent, and I trust that the appeal will enlist your interest and secure a generous contribution."

Mr. Williams:

Dear Sir: As one of the vestrymen, we fully appreciate what you are doing for our work at Christ Church.

I was glad to see in your last week's issue of The Southern Churchman an appeal for funds for the benefit of Christ Church. The Ladies' Guild has struggled for many years to pay off this debt, which could not have been done without outside help.

Mrs. Segar has been working for Christ Church for many years, and, without her help, this church would have been closed years ago.

I fully endorse any appeal she may make in the matter.

Yours truly,
T. Y. LAWSON.

Deaths

JULIA PRICE WILLIAMSON.

MRS. THOM WILLIAMSON, SR., died in Washington, D. C., on the morning of Friday, March 15, 1929, aged eighty-six.

Services were from St. John's Episcopal Church, Washington, in charge of the Revs. Robert Johnston, rector of St. John's, and W. F. Carpenter, rector of St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, Virginia. Interment was at the Arlington Cemetery, beside her husband, the late Rear Admiral Thom Williamson, E. C., U. S. Navy, and near her son, the late Lieutenant-Commander William Price Williamson, U. S. Navy.

Surviving her are the following son and daughters: the Rev. Thom Williamson Jr., Virginia Theological Seminary, '21, late of the U. S. Navy, and now rector of Trinity Parish, Pawtucket Rhode Island; Miss Lulie Williamson, Washington Club, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Herbert M. Wilson, of Orange, New Jersey; and Mrs. W. Carvel Hall and Miss Anne Walke Williamson, of "Shirley", between Gainesville and Haymarket, Virginia.

Mrs. Williamson had been a great sufferer for many months, but passed quietly and beautifully to her Rest in Paradise.

MARY NELSON MEADE.

On the death of MISS MARY NELSON MEADE, on February 3, 1929, the Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church, Charlottesville, Va., has sustained a grievous loss; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in her death this organization, of which she was a charter member, has lost a competent and zealous worker, one whose brilliant mind and tremendous energy were used unsparingly in His service.

For many years she served as secretary of this Auxiliary and though other duties forced her to resign this office, it is still a joy to look back to those perfectly kept minutes.

Her work on the box committee with her sisters continued to the end; and was so well known that in our hearts we cry who can take her place.

In all Virginia there was no better posted Church woman. In the Church School she taught the old and the young. Nor was her teaching merely from a book. She taught them to make the cross of Easter flowers. She taught them to sing. She taught them duty and she taught them to love the Lord.

Resolved, Further, that thees resolutions be spread on the minutes of this organization and published in The Southern Churchman, and that a copy be sent to the family of our loved co-worker.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop.

Goes to Historic Parish.

The Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, of Helena, Arkansas, has accepted the call given him by the vestry of St. Michael's Church, Charleston, one of the oldest and most historic churches in the United States. He will preach the first sermon of his rectorship on April 14.

Mr. Goodwin succeeds the Rev. A. S. Thomas, who resigned from St. Michael's in November to become Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina. Mr. Goodwin, who is a Virginian and in his early forties, acted as supply rector for the venerable church in February and the congregation was so deeply impressed by his qualities, ability and zeal that the call to him was approved unanimously.

Happy Surprise For a Rector.

Sunday morning, March 17, the Rev. Maynard Marshall, rector of St. Helena Church, near Beaufort, S. C., had conducted early morning service at Parris Island and, therefore, was somewhat late arriving at his own Sunday school. As he entered the parish house, where all classes were assembled, he was bewildered by the suggestion, from Mr. A. R. Sams, that all go to the steps. There the attention of Mr. Marshall was directed to a beautiful large new automobile and he was informed that it was his, given by the Brotherhood Bible Class to replace the faithful old Ford sedan in which he has traveled ten years.

The surprise was as complete as delightful and Mr. Marshall literally was overwhelmed. It was a little while before he recovered sufficiently to express his earnest thanks and appreciation, which he did with unquestionable fervor, his evident embarrassment adding to the enjoyment of the school and congregation.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

New General Secretary for Children's Home Society.

The arrival of Mr. Frank Davis Preston to become General Secretary of the Children's Home Society of Virginia was announced yesterday by Mr. E. Randolph Williams, president of the organization. Mr. Preston comes to Virginia from Pittsburgh, Pa., where for the last two and a half years he has been western representative, in charge of the Pittsburgh Office of Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Williams in speaking of the appointment of Mr. Preston made the following statement:

"Mr. Preston's appointment as General Secretary of the Children's Home Society of Virginia comes as the fulfillment of one part of the general plan of reorganization in the Society which the Board of Directors plan to make in the interest of economy, efficiency and greatest possible service to the homeless and needy children of Virginia. Mr. Preston began his career in social work in 1911 as assistant superintendent at the Glenwood Manual Training School in Chicago. The time spent since his graduation from Law School has been in social work continuously."

The Children's Home Society was chartered in 1900 and receives dependent or homeless children from any county in the state and places them in carefully selected homes.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Unusual Record.

The Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, at the annual meeting in January reported a total increase of 134 new members, all bills paid, and the largest congregations and Church School in the history of the parish.

This is considered as an unusual record, because the parish had been without a rector for several months prior to the coming of the new rector, the Rev. G. W. Gasque, the first of September, 1927, when the parish was quite disorganized and discouraged, and hundreds of dollars in debt.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Institution Service at St. Michael and All Angels.

On Passion Sunday the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray instituted the Rev. Charles E. McAllister as seventh rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore. The institution service was held on the twenty-sixth anniversary of the date on which Bishop Murray himself undertook the rectorship of this great parish. The sermon for the occasion was preached by the Rev. Elwyn Henry Spear, Ph. D., of the Diocese of Newark. Assisting in the service were the Rev. William Dallam Morgan, the Rev. George R. Hewlett of Trinity Church, West Pittston, Pa., the Rev. J. Moulton Thomas and the Rev. Charles R. Brocklebank of the Theological Seminary of Virginia. Dr. Spear in his sermon stressed the rapid strides made in the fields of economics and science and the importance of the Church measuring up and furnishing a living dynamic which will keep pace with development along material lines. He pointed out the existence of considerable Christianity outside the churches and the need for the Church measuring up to its responsibility more effectively. "The Faith once delivered to the Saints" was pointed out as not merely an inherited body of doctrine, but as a living devotion which affects every activity of life.

The Church of St. Michael and All Angels is the largest parish of the Episcopal Church south of Philadelphia and numbers over 2,000 communicants. It lists among its previous rectors Bishop Murray of Maryland, Bishop Fiske of Central New York, and Bishop Cook of Delaware. Mr. McAllister's immediate predecessor was the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., who is now rector of St. Paul's Church, Buffalo, N. Y. Over 10,000 persons made their communions in the parish last year.

The Rev. Mr. McAllister is a graduate of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., and of the General Theological Seminary, where he was appointed to a Fellowship. His first parish was St. Matthew's, Hyattsville, Md., in the Diocese of Washington, and he went from there to St. John's Church, Hampton, Va., the oldest continuous parish in the American Church. During his rectorship at Hampton he was granted a furlough by his vestry to do field work for the National Council. For the past three years he has been Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Newark. The Rev. Mr. McAllister is an Associate-Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council and one of the Seventy appointed for National Council on Evangelism. He is the author of two texts published by the National Council, "The Every Member Canvass, Before, During and After" and "Speakers' Manual, Suggested Outlines and Addresses".

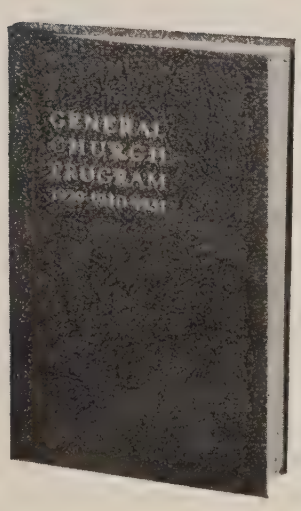
Personal Notes

The Rev. Robert Tomlinson, formerly of Buckingham, West Virginia, has received and accepted the call to St. John's Church, Havre de Grace, Maryland. Mr. Tomlinson will take up his new duties on Easter Day.

The Rev. Eric Bloy, Deacon, and member of the Senior Class at the Virginia Theological Seminary, has received and accepted a call to All Saints' Parish, Reistertown, Md. Mr. Bloy will take up the Sunday work in the parish immediately and will be in residence at his graduation in June.

The Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, rector of St. John's Church, Helena, Arkansas, has accepted a call to St. Michael's Church, Charleston, S. C., the change to be effective April 14.

LITTLE JENNY WREN.



Such warbling and such singing,
I know not how or when;
The Father gave such sweetness
To little Jenny Wren!

I listen for your coming,
I know you soon will wend
Your way back to my garden,
My little feathered friend!

And sing outside my window,
From early dawn till dark;
I would not change your coming
For nightingale or lark!

—Maude Mumma.

HAVE YOU ORDERED THIS BOOK

The General Church Program for 1929-1930-1931 is already in its third edition

It is the "best seller" of Church literature, for certain excellent reasons—It gives concisely, interestingly, a picture of the whole work of the Church at home and abroad.

It gives understandable figures of costs, and shows how and where missionary money is expended.

It enables any Churchman to be well informed on the Church's Program, without the necessity of long and exhaustive reading and study.

It is small and compact, convenient for the desk, table or pocket.

It is not a book to be read once and discarded. It is down-to-date for the whole Triennium, and useful right up to the next General Convention.

ON CHURCH GIVING

By THE REV. DYSON HAGUE, Toronto, Canada

The other day a prominent layman of my Church met me and said: "I wish parsons would talk more about the privilege and the pleasure of giving, rather than preach what might be called "dunning" sermons, always at the people to give more." And I thought, as I left him, that he was right. When our Blessed Lord and Saviour said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," what He meant was, it is a happier thing. Giving gives more real happiness than receiving. And St. Paul, in that wonderful plea of his in 2 Cor. 8:9, speaks about God loving a cheerful giver. The Greek word is hilarious—the man who gives with a smile, a laugh and a joyful sensation of pleasure.

I would like to tell you good people down in the South one or two stories of generous giving in my own experience. The first was a very striking incident. A young fellow in our Church who had been very hard hit by the war found it necessary to discontinue his weekly church envelope. It was a year or more before he got on to his feet again, but as soon as he did he at once began taking his envelopes again and, not content with that, he sent in a check to cover one whole year's arrears of envelopes, with six per cent added ($115.00 in all), with the promise that as soon as he was able he would pay the arrearage of anorher whole year! Dear fellow, he only lived for two or three years afterwards, but up to the time of his death he was a most generous and cheerful giver.

I remember, too, another case. One of our soldier boys at the front had a very deep and personal sense of God's love in saving his soul and preserving his life. As a soldier he was only getting $1.10 a day and that was all he had, for he had given up his job, but he still continued to give $1.00 a Sunday to our Church through the weekly envelope as a sign of his gratitude to God and his love for his parish church. Dear fellow, he is back now, married, with three children, and is a faithful Sunday School teacher and gives to the limit of his means.

I shall never forget, too, another thing that touched us all very deeply. During the war, and nearly every able young man in my congregation left Toronto to go to the front, a number of them wrote back that they wanted to keep up week by week their weekly and missionary envelopes, which they did, to our great comfort, as a sign of their personal interest and continuing fellowship with us in the Church. One of the dear fellows, in order that he might take no chances of his obligation to his Heavenly Father and his duty to God, paid the whole year in advance!

I well remember another case. It was really very striking and a thing that we never forgot in our church, the Church of the Epiphany. It took place some time ago, but we all remember it very well. One Sunday a very ordinary-looking envelope was received on the offertory plate. It had in the place for the name the words, "O. Grateful." Inside was a piece of paper with the words, "To apply against mortgage. This is given on account of answer to prayer. Would like to hear the rector preach a sermon on the basis of the hymn which runs in part, 'Just take it to the Lord in Prayer.' " When the church wardens opened it they found inside a bank note folded up with the paper. It was a Canadian bank note for $500.00! From that day to this we have never been able to find who gave it. His name, like that of the Good Samaritan and of the woman who broke her alabaster box and poured its precious content on her Saviour, will remain unknown. But God knows it, and I suppose that was all he wanted. I am sure that after all the problem of financing every church lies not in the hands of a dozen or twenty of the more generous, but in all the members of the church who for the sake of Christ and the glory of His name regularly, conscientiously, systematically laying aside a portion of their money for the Lord, and giving it Sunday by Sunday in His church and, if absent, sending it by post or through a member of the family or a friend.

DOMINUS FLUSTRA ISIN 1835

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 6, 1929. No. 14.

"I SHINE IN THE LIGHT OF GOD."

I shine in the light of God,
His Likeness stamps my brow,
Through the shadow of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now.
No breaking heart is here,
No keen and thrilling pain,
No wasted cheek, where the frequent tear
Hath rolled, and left its stain.

I have found the joy of Heaven,
I am one of the Angel band,
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand.
I have learned the song they sing
Whom Jesus hath made free,
And the glorious walls of Heaven still ring
With my new-born melody.

No sin, no grief, no pain,
Safe in my happy home,
My fears all fled, my doubts all slain,
My hour of triumph come!
O friends of my mortal years
The trusted and the true!
You are walking still in the vail of tears,
But I want to welcome you.

Do I forget? O! No!
For memory's golden chain
Shall bind my heart to the hearts below,
Till they meet and touch again.
Each link is strong and bright,
And Love's electric flame
Flows freely down like a river of light,
To the world from whence it came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glittering sky?
Do you weep when the noise of war,
And the rage of conflict die?
Then why should your tears roll down
And your heart with grief be riven?
For another gem in the Saviour's crown
And another soul in Heaven?

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The openings of the streets of heaven are on earth."

"There is no duty that comes to hand that does not bring with it the possibility of kingly service."

When the minister declares what he has heard from God, his message goes to the heart.

"Love and fear are like the sun and moon, seldom seen together."

"We never really pray for anything that we are not willing to work and suffer for."

Great things tend to make us great and the Kingdom of God can lift us towards the stature of Christ.

"God often brings our plans to naught, in order to deliver us from harm and danger; and very often what we look upon as our greatest misfortune, is really the means of greater good."

"The righteous shall hold on his way,
And he that hath clean hands shall Wax stronger and stronger."
—John 17:9.

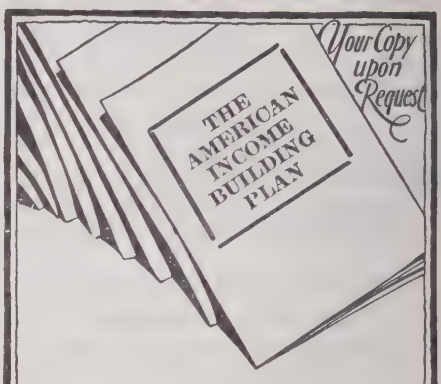
"Character is the stamp on our souls of the free choice of good or evil we have made through life."

If we cannot, with confidence, invite others to follow us, then it is conclusive evidence we are not walking life's higher way.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

"These rugged paths that wound my feet,
These tribulations that I meet,
Are stepping stones by which I climb
To glories endless and sublime."

Bushnell remarks: "He dies not as a man, but rather as some one might, who is mysteriously more and higher. So thought aloud the hard-faced soldier—'Truly this was the Son of God.' As if he had said, 'I have seen men die—this is not a man. They call Him the Son of God—He cannot be less.' Can He be less to us?"

The Milky Way makes all human history look like a tiny path which ants have made through a jungle. Yet, because of the light Christ shed upon human value, man is not dwarfed by the Milky Way.—Dr. E. Y. Mullins.



"Soldiers of the Cross, stop apologizing for your obedience to the command, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature'. Do not even argue the matter. Take your place along the picket line of the Church Militant."

TRIUMPHS?

Easter Sunday commemorated the climax of the one perfect triumph of the world's history. The grandeur and glory and beauty of that triumph have increased and become clearer through nineteen centuries and will continue to increase to the end of time, sorrowing doubt that attended death vanished with the resurrection. Faith that faltered at the sepulchre revived with the ascension, to be transmitted through martyrdoms and holy zeal and swift upheavals and the rising and falling of many powers and nations and to live forever.

Just after Easter it is timely to consider the triumphs of philosophies, theories and teachings intended and used to unsettle faith in God and the Bible and Christianity.

Aldous Huxley, grandson of Thomas Huxley, English philosopher, exponent, defender and apostle of Darwin and Darwin's theory of evolution, has written a novel in which he records his predictions of the future of humanity, presumably basing his conclusions on the philosophy represented so ably by his grandfather and Darwin seventy years ago. The outlook of this younger Huxley is dismal. In his view America is hastening the degradation of our race and the destruction of civilization and society. Speaking through his principal character, he laments thus of what is coming—"Worldwide Americanization, with culture crucified by mass production and finally all nations, including America, arrived at a state of psychological and social collapse . . . . The machinery to take us to hell; the rich or the official to drive it."

This illustrates the curious confusions and contradictions in which wander these people who delude themselves to thinking that they really think, who busily construct little gim-crack contrivances or sputters of words; believing that they have produced earth moving levers or intellectual volcanoes. The Darwinian, Huxley and kindred theories, hypotheses, deductions, are materialistic, regarding us humans as mere animals, but the ultimate and supreme excellence, no existence higher than our's possible, no life beyond what we have here and be responsible to nobody but ourselves. We are supposed to overcome instincts, impulses and emotions by power of cold reason and by reasoning lift ourselves by our ethical boot straps to some vague, mechanically altruistic interest in our fellow creatures.

Following the materialistic theory to straight, logical results, what this younger Huxley calls Americanzation—standardizing, machinizing—the world, should bring perfect conditions—human machines working with and served by machines of metal, wood and cloth, with never occasions nor excuse for any spark or glint of feeling. Yet Mr. Huxley and his varied associates in materialism and denial of a soul unite in bemoaning the psychological collapse and destruction of ideals to come with the machine age, not favoring us with information of how there can be a psychological effect where there is no soul or of why a machine mind, directed and operated by pure reason, may not construct its own ideals to suit its owner.

As well as can be gathered from the oddly confused lamentation and prophecy of Mr. Huxley and his associate adventurers in the fog, the soul they say does not exist is stifled and the ideals somehow and somewhere meandering mistily apart from all definite ideas must be crushed entirely by the order, efficiency, system, of American methods. We are left to assume that non-existent souls can scintillate and ideals live and flower only in disorder, futility and waste. We Americans lack soul. That is an old sneer and a favorite article of faith with followers of the two popular philosophers, Freud, who coarsens and sensualizes the love of a mother for her child; Nietzsche, elaborately demonstrating that strength is the one evidence of fitness to live and that the weak must be trampled ruthlessly to extinction. Like opinion of us here is expressed in the cackling laugh of French roue philosophy, denying purity to all women and honesty to all men, but prating glibly of the heights and depths of its own transcendental soul.

What, and how much and how many triumphs have been achieved by any of these enemies of the religion the supreme triumph of which has just been commemorated? How much ground have they won? How much good have they accomplished for anybody? How far have they deflected Americans or America from their straight onward path, their steady provision of improvement for the world? How far have they obstructed the progress or weakened the power of Christianity?

In the year 1928 a large majority of the adult inhabitants of the United States were members of Christian churches. In that year these people, supposed to be soulless and destitute of ideals and to be destroying souls and ideals and culture by standardization, poured out an average of seven million dollars each day of the year for religious, philanthropic and educational purposes. The sum for the year was more than two thousand three hundred million—a sum for such objects never approached in any country of the world, probably not equalled by all other countries combined. In less than two hundred years of national life the American people have endowed colleges and universities for the people of the future to the amount of more than a billion dollars. They have spent voluntarily uncounted billions to educate those at home unable to educate themselves—including the children of many hundreds of thousands of newly arrived immigrants—to send missionaries to meet spiritual needs of multitudes everywhere, to supply the wants of sufferers from all kinds of calamities in all countries.

The American nation, as an organized whole, declares continually its allegiance and adherence to the Christian religion and faith in the soul and the hereafter. It demonstrates constantly its hope and purpose to be useful to all humanity and its efficiency and ability. All this is distasteful to the diligently self-advertising professional cynics, the magnified and miniature philosophers, the habitually superior persons, the loquacious logicians scoffing at purity of motive and life and ambition to do good as fantastic frauds, and yet asserting for themselves monopoly of soulfulness and idealisms and culture. This group, thinly but vociferously represented in most countries, looks with scorn on our simple beliefs and practical views and habits. Yet it is a fact too clear for discussion that the American dollar and a score of discoveries, inventions and enterprises by commonplace, unpretentious Americans have done more to diminish human miseries and suffering, to advance human progress and increase human happiness than all the volumes of speculation, theorizing, attacks on revelation and religion, sneers at Divinity and humanity and society and assumption of the ultra aesthetic and artistic and refined that have come forth in all the languages in the last two centuries.

Science, with magnificent self-sacrifice and courage, has conquered pestilence, prolonged life, prevented each year incalculable suffering and destitution, prolonged thousands of lives. Science applied by ingenuity and thought has multiplied indefinitely the power of man and is bringing the nations together for good will and peace. Have the scientists and philosophers, actual and so-called, intent on unsettling faith, weakening religion, assailing the existence of God and the soul and future life, ever risked an injury or deprived themselves of a moment of indulgence or pleasure for the help or relief of any?

The triumph—the beautiful triumph—of the Christ is repeated and renewed every day and night in this country that is to crush and grind out the world's soul, according to Huxley. The dying go from this life joyful; the sorrowful and suffering and weary and heavy laden are relieved and comforted, their hearts lightened, souls uplifted, thoughts purified. Countless charities and deeds of love and generosity and self-sacrifice and courage are done daily. In His Name. Now and then we read of some man or woman or boy or girl whose common sense has been sapped and conscience deadened and emotion and instincts perverted, committing suicide sensationally, becoming insane or resorting to hideous and abnormal crime. These are the triumphs and achievements of the atheist, agnostic, freak philosophers and scientists and those who laboriously, and with more or less ability, undertake to demonstrate that there is no God, no responsibility, no future or hope; the neurotic, hysterical or deliberately gross, bestial and filthy who contribute to the unassorted garbage in newspapers, books and magazines.

There are triumphs and triumphs.

Alfred B. Williams.

RISEN INDEED!

An Easter Message by the Reverend Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada

IT was indeed a marvel, that cry of the disciples on the first Easter evening: "The Lord is risen indeed!" And today we Christians joyously reaffirm: "Christ is risen indeed!" For the resurrection of Christ is the all of Christianity. It is the plinth of the Christian Church. All stands on that as the rock foundation of the Christian faith. Everything depends upon it as a chain upon the staple that holds it. Take that away and everything falls in confusion. Let us Christians be at least sincere. Let us at this Eastertide stand with Paul and the Apostles and solemnly assert that if the resurrection goes what is left of Christianity is not worth preserving. Either Jesus Christ rose from the dead or the whole fabric of Christianity is a fraud. Every Easter sermon is a lie. Every Christian preacher is a knave. Every Church is a temple of lies. All Christian living is a sham; all Christian dying is a mockery. Disprove the resurrection and no mother will ever see her buried child again; no eye will ever see the face of our dear Saviour in His glory.

Read the arguments of St. Paul in 1 Cor. 15:12-19, and grasp the five absurdities that follow from the supposition that there was no resurrection. Why, said the Apostle, if the resurrection was not actual fact, historic fact, Christ did not rise from the dead, all our preaching is a fraud; all Christian faith a delusion; all we Apostles are convicted liars; and all who believe the most to be pitied of the human race. St. Paul, the brilliant thinker and investigator, the victim of delusion? St. Peter the victim of hallucinations? St. John, St. Matthew and St. James the victims of fancy? They were men who courted death and joyfully greeted martyrdom in order that they might witness to the fact that Christ is risen indeed! And think of the phalanx of witnessing through the ages; Augustine, Pascal, Newton, Faraday, Brewster, Dawson, all of whom could say of Christ's resurrection, with Dr. Arnold: "I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort." We Christians today do know in our hearts that the Lord is risen indeed. Every grave in the catacombs, every baptism, every communion, every Church in Christendom, is a living testimony to the risen Christ; and the Lord's table, the Lord's day, the Holy Scriptures, all of these, with one mighty voice proclaim today: "Christ is risen! Christ is risen! Christ is risen indeed!" We are not deceived. We are not deceivers. We cannot conscientiously believe a lie. Ours is not a corpse religion, the worship of a dead man in a grave.

Not long ago in Moscow, a Bolshevist lecturer, a violent anti-Christian, delivered a lecture against Christ and the obsolete faith. In a series of what he considered unanswerable arguments, he destroyed Christianity. At the close of his diatribe he seemed so pleased with himself that he asked any one in the vast audience to speak, if he cared to do so. Shy and awkward, a homely Russian came forward, and as he came to the platform, the lecturer said in scorn, "Not more than five minutes now! Not more than five minutes." "I shan't take long," was the answer. He mounted the platform. He faced the vast assembly. And then he said, in the words that have rung over Russia for generations—the Easter greeting in the mouth of every one—"Christ is risen! Christ is risen!" It was a daring word to say, for they were supposed to be atheists. But back from that great audience, as one man, came the answer, "Verily, He is risen! He is risen indeed!" He turned to the lecturer and said, "That's all I have to say." No wonder, in the primitive Church, the Easter festival was called Dominica Guaddi, the joyful Sunday, the festival of gladness. O Christians, rejoice in the reality of the Easter faith. Accept Him as the Saviour who saves from sin. Make Easter a starting point for steadier Christian living. Grasp the power of His resurrection. Rise into newness of life indeed, as those alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Greet this Easter with faith's new song, "Christ the Lord is risen today." And, with eyes upon the coming dawn, watch and wait, until there breaks the last and brightest Easter morning, and He returns in triumph whose right is to reign, Christ, the King of Glory.

ANGLO-AMERICAN HYMN.

Sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, England, on the entry of the United States into the war—the service being attended by His Majesty the King, the United States Ambassador, etc., etc.

Two Empires by the sea,
Two Nations great and free,
One Anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith we claim,
One God, whose glorious name
We love and praise.

What deeds our fathers wrought,
What battles we have fought,
Let Fame record.
Now vengeful passion cease,
Come victories of Peace,
Nor Hate, nor Pride's caprice
Unsheath the sword.

Though deep the sea and wide
'Twixt realm and realm, its tide
Binds strand to strand.
So be the gulf between
Gray coasts and islands green
With bonds of Peace serene
And friendship spanned.

Now may the God above
Guard the dear lands we love,
Both East and West.
Let love move fervent glow
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger grow,
Blessing the blest.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

XI.

IN the present stage of our study we are on the eve of a great consummation. Let us hold firmly to the teaching we have observed, that so far as we are concerned, our only position is that of watchfulness and glad readiness for the coming of our Lord to catch us up to meet Him in the air. We may not allegorize or spiritualize the simple declaration of 1 Thess. 4:13-18, which the Apostle insists was given him directly by the word of the Lord. No sincere lover of the Scriptures would willingly do that. To live as we have indicated, in a state of disengagement from the world, deriving inspiration for service, patience in suffering, endurance in trial, is all embraced in the acceptance of the injunction (Phil. 4:5),

"The Lord is at hand".

Remember again, it matters not to us if the early Christians were, as we say, disappointed of their hope. We are not thereby to reason that the entire doctrine is obsolete, valueless, confusing. Our part is to obey the orders of our King, who has commanded us to watch; to imitate the New Testament saints in their eager hope and to give ourselves to the joyous expectation of His coming. This is not impossible, save to those who would filter all truth through the meshes of intellectual criticism. Since there must be, and will be one generation of Christians who will not die, no generation of believers has the authority to affirm that it will not be the one in which they live.

The initial act in the great drama engaging the resurrection of the "dead in Christ" and the translation of those "who are alive and remain" unto this august event, having been effected, the consideration of subsequent unfoldings may be permissible. But in this sphere of fulfillment of the divine plan we may hold tentatively to the order of the program; and utter no dogmatic decrees. What will happen after the above transaction, for something must occur, we shall discover by a consensus of Scriptural revealings.

To prepare our minds for this study, we do wisely to contrast the two classes of prophecy by which the coming of our Lord is qualified. For there is a distinct difference between them. The event we have already noted may be designated as "our gathering unto him" (2 Thess. 2:1) or (John 14:3).

His coming for His own.

That is evident from the already explained 1 Thess. 4: 13-18. Our Lord seems to indicate this by announcing His approach as a thief. There is in this the imputation of unpreparedness on the part of the household. For He naturally affirms that the goodman of the home will not expect it (Matt. 24:43). This just meets our present generation which complacently argues that since He has not come, He will not. And if we be allowed to stress the figure a bit, we might assume that what the thief comes to remove is only that which is valuable. Surely, they who obey His behest to watch, who permit the Holy Spirit to flood their hearts with the "love of His appearing", must be dear to Him, though in themselves they may see nothing which entitles them to this favor. As we have already noted, it is that the promise of His coming is to be made effectual (Heb. 9:28). We may not dogmatize as to this; for we are on the field of reverent comparison; but let our simple minds work over the problem and we shall perceive that this syllogism has a fairly reasonable premise from which our conclusion may be drawn. For we have the urgent warning from His own lips, "Watch, for ye know not when your Lord will come" (Matt. 24:42). We have more than once indicated that this will not be a matter of merit, of culture, of spiritual exclusiveness; but simply readiness of heart and life. And we do well to regard again His appeal, so minutely indicative, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness (not merely physical intoxication), and cares of this life (the subtle sin of the children of God), and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come upon all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch, therefore and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:34-36). We see then, there can be and may be those who by their attitude towards this event, are not worthy to partake of the joy of standing before the Son of Man. Now, earnest inquiry demands,

"To them that look for Him"

"What about the signs and the world cataclysms?"

We must tread this precinct with guarded feet. Yet, while the Lord does not encourage speculation, the rounded whole of prophecy discloses to us certain conditions and promisings which point to another unfolding of the divine plan. There is a class of predictions which define the coming of the Lord in an entirely different qualification from what we have considered as embracing only those who are to be caught away to meet Him in the air. We are impressed with our Lord's own declaration (Matt. 24:27), "As the lightning shineth . . so shall the coming of the Son of man be". In verse thirty of this chapter, He is associated with a sign from heaven; and we read that "all of the tribes of the earth shall mourn"; which is taken up by the Apostle in Rev. 1:7, "Behold, He cometh with clouds and every eye shall see Him and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him". St. Paul, who, as we have seen, insisted that the revelation of the coming for His own in the first epistle to the Thessalonians was directly from the Lord, plainly discloses another and entirely different manifestation of Him in the scorching prediction, "He shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints" (2 Thess. 2:7-10). May we not assume that the saints are they who in His earlier epiphany have been resurrected and translated? But anxious questioners will beg,

"What of those who were not ready to be caught up?"

Here again we are left to reverent contemplation. Devout consistency may rightly take the position that following the event of which we have made full treatment, some outpouring of the Spirit of God may fall upon the "almost but not wholly ready" believers who shall thereby be fitted to join those who have preceded them. Thoughtful students of prophecy have concluded that since the descent of our Lord from heaven will usher in a supernatural age, translation of prepared saints may be current, as they reach that state of spiritual unity with him which is the challenge of our Lord to us now. Then, there is a ray of hope in the implication that "the daystar will arise" in the hearts of those who shall await the coming of the Lord in His majesty in that period (2 Peter 1:16-21). We know the whole world" (Rev. 20:2, 10).

Great Tribulation

such as has not been, nor ever shall be. If we place any confidence in the Book of the Revelation, upon the readers and hearers of which a benediction is promised (Rev. 1:3), there is room for thought in the assertion of Rev. 12:7, that Satan whose sphere of operations is now the heavenlies (Eph. 6:10-12), will be cast out into the earth and begin a superintendence of evil with a malignity consonant with his furious resentment (Rev. 12:7-12). And indeed the entire book, chapters six to twenty, contains numerous indications of this unfolding of wickedness. We have no philosophy by which to explain this inscrutable dispensation. All we can do is to behold the vision and accept the teaching on its face value. Suffice to say that we can never understand the doctrine of our Lord's return if we delete from the Word of God the many references which embrace the destiny of that spiritual hierachy dominated by the god of this age (John 12:31; 14:30; 2 Cor. 4:60) unqualifiedly designated as "that serpent which deceiveth the whole world")Rev. 20:2, 10).

Passing thus briefly for the present over this "tribulation the great" (Gk for Rev. 7:14), we apply our thought to the more winsome consideration of what it will mean for us "to stand before the Son of Man". That is our great objective. We are not involved in the intricacies of the subsequent period. Nor need any be, to whom the Gospel has come. All He asks of us is that we believe His word and do His will. And we may be sure that as He Himself is eagerly expectant of His return to earth for the accomplishment of His "bright designs", He must have a warm place in His heart for those who enter sympathetically into His own glowing anticipation (Heb. 10:12, 13).

THE "LAST REVIEW" OF MARSHAL FOCH

FERDINAND FOCH, great leader of men and humble follower of the Christ, passed on to the fuller life on March 20, 1929. At the funeral ceremonies, on March 26, representatives of twenty nations united to pay their last respects.

Edwin L. James in the New York Times has so beautifully described this final scene that we are reprinting his account here in full:

Sorrowful and proud France said farewell today to Marshal Foch. With a ceremony at once magnificent and dignified, she placed her illustrious captain to rest beneath the gilded dome of the Invalides where Napoleon sleeps.

And prince and potentate and commoner of the other ten nations which followed Marshal Foch to victory a decade ago joined in the historical tribute to the leader whom even the enemy respected and esteemed.

Marshal Foch, good man and true, is gone, but who thinks that his memory will die in the minds of the peoples of eleven nations whom he saved from a dominance which must have been hateful? Before his coffin, while a million listened Premier Poincaire said:

"Let us bow our heads before the sacred remains of him who, in serving France, served humanity, and with life eternally renewed, will live in the hearts of posterity."

Eleven years ago today to the hour Premier Poincaire, then President of France, presided at a meeting in the humble Town Hall of Doullens when Marshal Foch was named allied generalissimo.

Who can say how many people stood under the funeral sky to watch the last parade of the man who won the war? There may have been a million—there were probably more, many of whom stood in line since last night to pay their respect to the man to whom France today said "Merci et adieu".

First, there was the service at the Cathedral of Notre Dame, the heart of France's faith, where had gone so often to worship the man to whom religion was the greatest thing in his personal life. Then there was the funeral procession down the Rue Rivoli, through the Place de la Concorde, up the Champs Elysees, across the Pont Alexandre III to the Invalides. Here the last respects were paid to the Marshal by the head of France's Government before the body was laid in the crypt in the Invalides.

Ten years ago, less a few weeks, I stood in a window on the corner of the Place de la Concorde and saw Marshal Foch lead the mighty Victory Parade of the allied forces. With Marshal Joffre by his side, and General Pershing, Marshal Petain, Marshal Haig, Marshal Wilson and Marshal Cadorna behind him, how proudly he led that pageant of glory down the Champs Elysees and across the historic Place de la Concorde! His eyes flashing, he was waving his sword along the whole line of march in response to the cheers of happy thousands. Germany had just accepted the peace which had been made after the victory he had wrought.

Today, from the same point, I watched another parade which moved in another direction. Marshal Foch's charger bore an empty saddle, and behind him a coffin, which seemed so small in all that grandeur, rode atop a French 75 gun—the gun to which Marshal Foch always gave credit for such a large part in his victory. Marshal Haig was not there, nor Marshal Cadorna nor Marshal Wilson. They are dead. Marshal Joffre was too feeble to make the long march. Marshal Petain and General Pershing marched on foot today beside the body, holding cordons as pallbearers. And behind the representatives of the armies and governments in their brilliant uniforms tramped 15,000 bareheaded men, many of whom marched in that parade ten years ago. Somber civilian garb had replaced horizon blue, and looking down on them one saw gray hairs and bald heads where jaunty steel helmets gleamed a decade back.

Seldom has such a magnificent pageant been seen. The procession was led by a detachment of the Guard Republicaine, followed by its famous band playing Chopin's "Funeral March". Then came General Simon leading three companies of Infantry of the Paris garrison. These were followed by a company of Belgian troops; then a detachment from the American Veterans Paris post in uniform. Making a brilliant impression, there followed a company of the Coldstream Guards in their bright red uniforms and bearskin busbies with their band playing Beethoven's "Funeral March". A company of Italian troops from Turin added another color. Here followed a detachment from the Polish Czech and Serbian armies.

Just preceding the gun carriage bearing the coffin marched two of France's three Cardinals, Dubois and Binet, wearing their long cappa magna, borne by pages. Because of his age Cardinal Lucon was unable to take part in the long procession. Behind the Cardinals marched the Bishops and Archbishops.

Behind the coffin came the Marshal's family, and then Gaston Doumergue, President of the French Republic, and next in line the Prince of Wales, wearing the uniform of a Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, with on one side of him Prince Charles of Belgium and on the other Prince Pierre of Monaco, who served in the French army. Then came the Ambassadors in brilliant uniforms, with the exception of Mr. Herrick, who, despite his recent illness, marched the whole route of the procession, some three miles. During the frequent stops in the procession the Prince of Wales engaged several times in conversation with the American Ambassador.

Premier Poincaire led the group which included members of the government, and following were members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies. The Immortals of the French Academy made a striking picture in their dress uniforms. Then came delegations of the Legion d'Honneur and the Institute of France.

It was estimated that there were 8,000 in the official part of the procession and there followed some 15,000 veterans. It took the whole line about an hour and a half to pass a given point.

In dignity and quiet the mighty crowd told in spirit of the respect which it held for the French capital. Except for the miscarrying of plans at the Invalides, caused by changing the program due to the lateness of the hour, there were no untoward incidents, although Prefect of the Police Chiappe had made full preparations to handle any Communistic manifestations. Even the presence of the cardinals and clergy, for which Premier Poincaire assumed full responsibility, provoked no comment from the Anti-Clericals. And not even the halt before the statue of Joan of Arc brought any ripples to the surface of the vast sea of faces.

Marshal Foch would not have wished it to have been so grand, but on the whole it must have been the sort of funeral he would have chosen. He sleeps tonight in France's Hall of Victories. And who better deserves to? For if the other great captain lying there, Napoleon Bonaparte, fought for personal aggrandisement, Marshal Foch never did.

The Temps says tonight:

"Marshal Foch had the funeral he deserved, which is to say the most, beautiful a great country can give to a great man. France is most grateful to the allied and friendly countries which contributed a brilliance without equal in surrounding the coffin of the great captain with their most illustrious representatives.

"Never has one seen a national funeral take on such an international character. No conqueror, no master of the earth, ever before going to his last abode, has enjoyed such a universal homage as that given to the least ambitious and most humble of the victorious soldiers. Let the great countries which have given to the memory of the conqueror of the great war this evidence of their admiration, affection and gratitude, know that France is proud, and thanks them."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by John B. Ladd, of Brookhill, Virginia:

> "For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it."—Proverbs 8:11.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

PURPOSE.

THE Book of Job was written to reveal to us God's ways and purpose in trial of faith (1 Peter 1:7).

In the trial of Job we see reflected the trial of the First Adam, but we behold typically the testing of the Second Adam, and the testing of every member of the race of the Second Adam, whether His heavenly seed, the Church, or His earthly seed, Israel.

1. Chs. 1, 2. Tried by Satan. God permitted Satan to test Adam, not that he might fail, but that he might exercise his power of choice and thus enter into the enjoyment of His God-given sovereignty (Gen. 1:26, 28).

Adam chose the way of the flesh, self-assertion, self-exaltation, independence of God, rather than the way of faith, self-denial, self-humiliation, dependence upon God (Matt. 23:11, 12).

God permitted Christ to be tested by Satan that His righteousness and true holiness might be revealed, that Christ's sovereignty might be manifest in choosing the way of faith, and overcoming Satan (Eph. 4:24; Ps. 8:2; Matt. 4:1-12; Heb. 2:14; 12:2).

All of God's people are permitted to be tested by Satan, that their faith may be manifest, and that they may learn to live as kings, choosing always and only the will of God, thereby overcoming the enemy (1 Peter 1:7; Rom. 10:17; 12:1, 2; 1 John 5:4; Rev. 1:5, 6).

2. Chs. 3-31. Tried by friends (?), ignorant of God's ways.

Christ was sorely tried by the religious leaders of Israel, who ought to have been His friends (Matt. 21:37-39).

They charged Him with being the worst of sinners, and only mocked Him in His suffering, because they did not understand Isa. 53 nor John 12:24 (Matt. 12:24; 27:39-43).

But those who were His friends, His own disciples, tested His faith, wanting to make Him King, and trying to turn Him aside from the way of the cross (John 6:15; Matt. 16:22, 23).

What sharper darts can pierce our hearts than the whispers of our friends, that God does not love us, or we would not be in such a place of trial. Denying us the way of the cross, they would rob us of the crown (Rom. 8:17; 2 Cor. 4:17, 18; Acts 21:13; Phil. 1:29; Heb. 12:5-11).

The other charge which friends, ignorant of God's ways, make against Christians in the place of testing, is that they have committed some awful sin.

3. Chs. 32-37. Tried by true friends, who know God's ways.

True friends, understanding God's holiness and love, justify Him in all His ways with His children. They know that He works all things together for good to those who love Him and are called according to His purpose (Rom. 8:28).

True friends, knowing God's ways, help us to judge ourselves, and bring every thought into captivity, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 11:31; 2 Cor. 10:5; 1 Peter 4:11).

Christ was not tried by such friends because the Word of God dwelt in Him richly, He hid it in His heart, and never exalted Himself, but justified God in every thought, word and act (Ps. 119:11; 139:23, 24; John 8:29).

4. Chs. 38-42:6. Tried by the Lord. God tried the faith of His Son by revealing His will concerning sacrifice for sin, and Christ, delighting in the Father's will, humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (Hosea 6:6; Ps. 40:6-8; 16:10, 11; Heb. 12:2; Phil. 2:8).

God's revelation of His glory in the face of His Son, brings down in the dust all our self-righteousness, and makes it possible for God to exalt us, by revealing His abundant life to and through us (2 Cor. 4:6; 1 Peter 5:6; John 10:10; 7:37-39).

5. Ch. 42:7-17. Exalted by the Lord. Even though humbled by his sin, God, in sovereign grace, reached down to Adam and lifted him up, opening to him the Paradise of heaven and gave him the assurance of eternal life in a glorified body, twice as much as he had before (Gen. 3:15-24; Heb. 9:5).

Because Christ humbled Himself, God highly exalted Him, giving Him the glory He had with the Father before the world was, and the added glory of Redeemer (John 17:5, 22; 1 Peter 1:21; Eph. 1:21; Phil. 2:9-11).

In Christ every believer has been given twice as much as he had in Adam (Eph. 1:18-23; 2:1-6).

Every believer yielded to God, will have to go down in the ash pile, in order to enjoy the blessings of God in Christ, and be made a blessing (Eph. 1:3-23; 2:5-10; Acts 20:35).

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EASTER

Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty Father, who hast given Thine only Son to die for our sins, and rise again for our justification; Grant us so to put away the leaven of malice and wickedness, that we may always serve Thee in pureness of living and truth; through the merits of the same, Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE Collect is a beautiful one, though not taken from the sacramentaries, as most are. It dates from Reformation days, and so is comparatively recent, though over three hundred years old.

Observe the great importance of the Resurrection for our justification. Christ died for our sins; but our justification is not fully accomplished without the great fact of His Resurrection. St. Paul teaches this very forcibly. Some of the Corinthian Church "had so lost the very foundation of Christian faith, as to deny the resurrection of the dead, and thus to adopt the belief, as well as the sensuality, of their Epicurean neighbors, whose teaching was: "Let us eat and drink; for tomorrow we die." Here St. Paul writes to them the glorious, triumphant teaching of 1 Corinthians 15:12-23. Read it.

THE Epistle for the First Sunday after Easter is 1 John 5:4-12.

The need of a close and vital union with the Risen Christ is taught in this Epistle, which makes it very appropriate for this Sunday, so close to Easter. It is summed up in the last sentence of the Epistle, and is a most solemn truth: "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." We can get no better idea of this union so necessary to spiritual life than that given by our Lord in His last teaching the night before His crucifixion, in the Passover chamber, where He told His Apostles: "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, He taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. . . . I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for, severed from me, ye can do nothing." The Epistle speaks of a victory to be won by "Whatsoever is born of God" over a great adversary, "the world"; and this victory is won by "our faith"; and as Satan is the prince of this world, being so-called three times by Jesus Himself in St. John's Gospel (chapters 12, 31; 14:30; and 16:11), in fighting the world we must fight the great enemy of mankind, who through the lusts of the flesh is ever enticing us to sin. I have myself followed a great and good General in march and battle, and know how important it is that the soldiers be faithful—have perfect confidence and faith in their leader. If this avails so much with a mere human leader, how confident and fearless should the soldier of the cross be in this fight with the world! As St. John says here in the Epistle: "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" 'Tis no mere mortal that leads the Christian army.

In such a battle as we Christians fight—must fight (for there is no neutral ground), the victory can be won only by supernatural strength; "for our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places."

THE Gospel for the First Sunday after Easter is St. John 20:19-23, and tells of our Lord's fifth appearance (and last on Easter Day) to the Eleven as they sat at meat at evening, when the doors were shut for fear of the Jews. "He stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them: Peace be unto you (pax vobiscum)." "He showed unto them His hands and His side" (and His feet also, says St. Luke). Three of the Evangelists (Mark, Luke and John, tell of this fifth appearance of Jesus after His Resurrection, and St. Paul also testifies to it in 1 Cor 15:5, where he speaks of six of the ten appearances of Christ, between His Resurrection and Ascension, to silence some in the Corinthian Church who said "there is no resurrection of the dead."

On this occasion, and also on the next our Lord took great pains to convince His Apostles that He was risen indeed from the dead, not a ghost or spirit merely, but in His own body, "with flesh and bones" (Luke 24:39). The most important matter of this interview was His opening "their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures, and (He) said unto them: "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:45-48). Observe carefully the great importance of this "opening their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures". Only a little while before this, the same afternoon, as He walked with Cleopas and another toward Emmaus, He had begun at Moses and all the prophets, and "expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke 24:27). Some glimmerings of the truth about the Messiah, as told by the prophets in the Old Testament, must have been vouchsafed to these disciples now; that this first coming of their Messiah was not in glory and majesty to set up a great kingdom of this world, like David's or Solomon's, as they and all the Jews fondly believed; but the full revelation of this great truth did not penetrate their dull souls, till they were filled with the Holy Ghost at Pentecost. This is evidently so; for even at the end of the forty days of Jesus' stay on earth (after His Resurrection), which He spent in "speaking (to them) of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" (Acts 1:3), at His last appearance to them, just before His Ascension 'they asked of Him, saying, Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" It was hard for them to give up the hope that had been cherished by them so long, and by their forefathers for hundreds of years. And doubtless the Twelve thrones on which their Lord had told them they should sit, judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:18), still dazzled and blinded their eyes; so hard is it to be free from flesh and sense, and see the spiritual things, which must be spiritually discerned with the eye of faith. Jesus seems to have been hopeless of showing them the truth He had so often told them before, relying upon the power of the Holy Ghost, telling them "that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts 1:5). And what lesson must we learn from such slowness of comprehension on the part of those who had companied with the Lord Jesus all the time that He went in and out among them "beginning from the baptism of John unto the day that He was received up from" them (Acts 1:21)? And how may we escape the reproach He gave to Cleopas and the others on the way to Emmaus, when He said unto them (Luke 24:25-26): "O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken." The teaching is plainly that our guide must be the Holy Spirit who, Jesus said, should guide us "into all the truth" (John 16:13); for only after they had received the Pentecostal fulness of that Holy Spirit were His disciples able to understand, what they had been so slow of heart to believe before, viz.: how it behooved the Christ to suffer these things for us, and then to enter into His glory. There can be no full knowledge of spiritual truth, except we "be filled with all the fulness of God" (Eph. 3:19). Let us pray to Him for this most precious of all gifts.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, D. D.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, after a life filled with service for his God and for his fellow men, passed on to the higher life on March 27, 1929.

Charles Henry Brent was born at Newcastle, Ontario, April 9, 1862, the son of the Rev. Canon Henry Brent, M. A., and Frances Sophia (Cummings). He was awarded numerous honorary degrees from colleges in Canada, the United States and Scotland. He twice declined a bishopric. In 1908 the Diocese of Washington, D. C., sought him for their spiritual leader, and in 1914 the Diocese of New Jersey offered him the bishopric. Bishop Brent was a man nationally and internationally loved and admired.

The following tribute is from a Texas secular newspaper, The San Antonio Express:

In Grateful Memory of Bishop Brent.

"If we make religion our business," it has been written, "God will make it our blessedness."

One who has just died in Lausanne (Switzerland), considered it his duty to make this business directly a blessing to humankind the world over—by untiringly, nobly, greatly serving the cause of universal understanding, concord and brotherhood. So it was that no man of this generation more notably belonged in the service of religion—had clearer title to be there—than he, the Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, latterly Bishop of the Diocese of Western New York, and sometime Missionary Bishop of the Philippines, for the Protestant Episcopal Church (1901-1918).

When Dr. Brent went to this country's Far East possession twenty-eight years ago it was still in gravely disturbed condition. The archipelago was under military rule and travel beyond the lines around garrisoned places was dangerous.

Bishop Brent—then thirty-nine years old—at once gained the confidence of Americans, natives and foreigners alike. He early began a crusade against an evil there which most others had ignored—the vice of using opium and its derivatives.

In 1903 the Philippine government requested Dr. Brent to head a commission to investigate the opium problem in the islands and neighboring countries. His fearless performance of that arduous task brought about a world-wide movement to limit the production of narcotic drugs to the quantity honestly required for strictly medicinal and scientific purposes.

Bishop Brent presided over the International Opium Commission at Shanghai in 1909. Three years later he headed the American delegation to the International Opium Conference at The Hague, and also presided there.

His interest in the campaign against a vice which has wrought misery for millions did not interfere with his Church work. Bishop Brent labored particularly with the pagan peoples in Northern Luzon and Mindanao, who long had been isolated and neglected. On the whole they responded well, and they have progressed in many ways.

Bishop Brent's splendid work in the archipelago was closed when the United States entered the Great War. Late in that struggle he was Chief of Chaplain Service with the American Expeditionary Forces in France. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal and was a commander of the Order of Leopold (Belgium) and a companion of the British Order of the Bath.

After becoming Bishop of Western New York in 1918, Dr. Brent renewed his activities against the narcotics evil. In 1923 he represented the United States on the League of Nations Committee that was created to conduct the fight against illicit trade in opium and other habit-forming drugs; to the last he was a leader in this endeavor to free mankind from a hideous foe.

It was at Lausanne that Bishop Brent performed one of his noblest services—arranging for and, in 1927, presiding over the World Conference on Faith and Order.

Bishop Phillips Brooks—the foremost servant of man's spiritual well-being whom, in this country, the Church that Dr. Brent labored for so admirably has known—anticipated "a time when the love of truth shall have come up to our love of liberty, and men shall be cordially tolerant and earnest believers both at once". Greatly did Charles Henry Brent strive to bring that time nearer.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

MORE PROPOSALS FROM THE "ANGLO-CATHOLICS."

Mr. Editor:

Defeated in its attempt at the last General Convention to do away with Articles of Religion, the "Anglo-Catholic", or Romanizing party, has returned to the attack, as was anticipated. It now advances two proposals which challenge attention. The first is to drop the word "Protestant" and to altogether change the name of the Church. The second is that "The traditional Catholic elements of Creeds, Sacraments and Orders" be substituted for the authority of Holy Scripture.

The "American Church Monthly" is a Church periodical, whose editor is the Rev. Selden E. Delaney, until recently rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York City.

The advertisement of the services of that Church, as it appears in "The Living Church", is as follows:

> "Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, 139 West Forty-Sixth Street, the Rev. Selden P. Delaney, D. D., Rector. Sundays: Low Masses, 7:30 and 8:15. Children's Mass and Address, 9:00; High Mass and Sermon, 10:45. Vespers, Benediction and Sermon, 4:00 Week Day Masses: 7:00, 8:00 and 9:30."

Where "Masses" and "Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament" are found in the Book of Common Prayer is not stated, but that is beside the point.

In the January number of the "American Church Monthly" appears an editorial in which it is said:

> "It (the word 'Protestant') should now be dropped from the title-page of the Prayer Book, as it has long outlived its usefulness. . . . . 'The American Episcopal Church' would be a sufficient designation, as it has the sanction of common usage. . . . The American Episcopal Church, then, is a grip of non-Papal Christians under the jurisdiction of Catholic Bishops who are in direct succession from the Apostles of the Lord. . . . The Catholic movement is animated by the conviction that what most needs stressing in our Communion today are the traditional elements of Creeds, Sacraments and Orders. The modern world is weary of the repeated appeals of Protestant Fundamentalism to the Bible and the Bible only."

In the first place, it is said that the name "American Episcopal Church" has the sanction of common usage. By whom? Is it so designated by any but "Anglo-Catholic?" Are any members of the Church save "Anglo-Catholics" endeavoring to bring about such a common usage? If so, who are they? Protestant Episcopalians would like to know.

In the second place, we are told that this Church is composed of "Non-Papal Christians". True as to the great majority of its members. But what is the "Anglo-Catholic" party endeavoring to do? Through its society known as "The Confraternity of Unity" it says it is undertaking to "Catholocize" and unite this Church with Rome. Another of its numerous organizations, the "Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic", selling Rosary beads and crucifixes said to have been "blessed" at the Convention of Santa Sabina, in Rome. How long does the "Anglo-Catholic" party propose that this Church shall remain "non-Papal?" No longer than, through the lawless methods it has pursued, it can bring about the union for which it is so diligently working.

In the third place, we are told that "What needs stressing in our Communion today are the traditional Catholic elements of Creeds, Sacraments and Orders", in the very next sentence we are informed that "The modern world is weary of the repeated appeals of Protestant Fundamentalism to the Bible and the Bible only." In other words, God's Holy Word is to be discarded as the final and supreme authority, and, in its stead, that authority is to be derived from "Traditional Catholic elements of Creeds, Sacraments and Orders!"

Most of us have thought all along that "What most needs stressing in our Communion today" is Christ's own command, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28:19, 20)—not "Traditional Catholic elements of Creeds, Sacraments and Orders".

In its Sixth Article of Religion, which our General Convention has just refused to drop, this Church has declared:

> "The Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation, so that whatsoever is not read therein nor may be proved thereby is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those canonical books of the Old and New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church."

Thus is it proposed that the Protestant heritage of the Church shall be destroyed and the authority of God's Holy Word subordinated to the pronouncements of Creeds and Ecclesiastics. Almost daily we hear of some new organization formed in the Church to bring this about, such as Orders of Monks, Sisterhoods, Confraternities of this and that, "Catholic" Clubs, etc.

Can it be possible that the loyal Protestant Episcopalian bishops, clergy and laity will stand idly by and look upon these things with indifference?

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR MISSIONARY CLERGY.

Mr. Editor:

A group of clergy and laymen of the Diocese of Albany have organized a Central Committee for Defence of the Security and Independence of Priests in Parochial Work.

This has grown out of the discovery that a number of the clergy feel it unsafe to speak freely and openly when subjects that affect their work and interests are publicly discussed, because:

(a) The "missionary" clergy are subject to arbitrary removal at the will of the bishop; and

(b) All stipendiary clergy are subject to reduction of salary at the will of the Diocesan Board of Missions.

Thus the clergy who accept the most unpromising and extended work in isolated places, usually on small salaries, are subject to serious disabilities as compared with those who accept rectorships and have security as to tenure of office and salary.

This discrimination seems manifestly unjust and undesirable, and is responsible for constant change of personnel in the very fields where permanence is of highest importance.

There seems to be no reason why the priest-in-charge of St. John's-in-the-Wilderness and St. James'-at-the-Cross-roads should have a precarious tenure of his field, while the rector of St. Mark's-on-the-Boulevard is irremovable except under carefully regulated canonical procedure.

There seems to be no just cause why the former should be more insecure as to an originally determined salary than the latter. We hold it to be manifestly inequitable and presumably illegal for a diocesan corporation to reduce an established salary during an incumbency, when a parochial corporation may not do so. We consider the forcing of a resignation as great an evil in the first case as in the last.

We hope to secure legislation in our diocese to remove these disabilities, and we also hope to establish a minimum salary that will provide a decent living for ALL priests regularly in charge of parishes or missions.

In concluding the Twenty-ninth Canon of 1908 the General Convention said: "It is understood that this Church designs not to express any approbation of any laws or usages which make the station of a minister dependent on anything else than his own soundness in the faith, or worthy conduct."

We do not know how many dioceses have provisions like our own, but evidence is before us which shows that we have moved a long way from the ideals of 1808. Under the new Field Department system we find that there are executives who propose engaging ministers for five-year periods (making it possible to consume their youth and vigor and turn them out to shift for themselves in their less active years); that some bishops will not accept clergymen who are not "definitely sold on the missionary program" (which, alas, includes much that is bureaucratic and not always vital in both national and diocesan budgets); that in some regions aid is withheld except as quotas are paid in full; that the opinion is held by some that a minister who has "failed three times in three separate fields was probably not really called to the ministry" and is given "six months to get a new job".

It is apparent that by the tests too often applied our Lord was a "failure", since Nazareth, Capernaum, and Jerusalem did not desire Him in their midst. And by the same token St. Paul was a failure. And what shall we say of the repeatedly exiled bishops, St. Athanasius and St. Chrysostom, or of the usually persecuted prophets. When our Lord commissioned His disciples to preach the truth, whether men would hear or forbear, He seemed to imply very definitely that many would have no apparent success.

We know of no objection to the testing of clergy as to their soundness in faith or morals, their fidelity in administering the Sacraments, their diligence in the conduct of public worship; we would approve stricter searching of qualifications before men are admitted to Holy Order: but we hold that when the Church has tried, examined, approved, and ordained men, she is obligated to give them a share in her work and an adequate living until able and disposed to try them on charges before a jury of their peers. The Church is as truly bound to her clergy as a husband to his lawfully wedded wife.

As Secretary of the Committee I should be pleased to receive information, comment, or suggestion from any members of the Church who are interested in giving greater security to the clergy in their often difficult work, and in securing legislation which will make the salaries of those dependent on diocesan aid as secure as the salaries of rectors of independent parishes.

Faithfully yours,

Theodore Haydn, Secretary.

MADNESS OF WAR: By Harold S. Brewster. Cloth. Pp. 261. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York. Price, $2.

Dean Brewster has presented the case of Christian pacificism with high moral conviction and persuasive enthusiasm. Like many idealists he gives scant respect to the equally sincere convictions of opponents, who regard some form of police protection in our present imperfect state of society as logical and inevitable internationally, as nationally and locally.

A Southern Churchman reviewer could hardly fail to vehemently protest against the following application of our Lord's words: "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple . . ." "This is merely an expression of the wisdom that sees things in their true proportions, that puts first things first. If General Robert E. Lee, for example, had put first things first, the tragedy of his life would have been avoided; for that tragedy was due not to any lack of moral grandeur, but rather to the inadequacy of his spiritual understanding which allowed him to put the part above the whole, to exalt Virginia above the entire United States." Suffice it to say that Dr. Brewster is dean of the cathedral at Fargo, N. D., and has an antipodal perspective to Southerners as to General Lee's spiritual understanding.

But in this day of peace treaties and of wide discussion of methods of war prevention this is a book that deserves reading and is certain to be found interesting and suggestive, if not always conclusive in its sweeping generalizations.

THE JEWISH LIBRARY: Edited by Leo Jung, Ph. D. Cloth. Pp. 374. Published by the Macmillan Company, New York City. Price, $2.50.

Twelve most interesting papers are here presented as the First Series of a promising literature concerning Judaism. The editor himself furnishes the initial, entitled, "The Essentials of Judaism". Three of the authors are English; four are German; one is Swiss and the remainder are American. This insures us a cosmopolitan vision of present-day Judaism as related to the venerable past of this remarkable race.

Designed "to assist the twentieth century Jew to become more fully acquainted with the riches bequeathed to him by his innumerable noble progenitors", it is as well incomparably valuable to the Christian. For what is essential to the comprehension of the race of Israel, is eminently fitting for us as we more and more come to see that the Son of David is indissolubly united to His ancient people. And this the more appealing because many Jews are now reading our New Testament with candor and open-mindedness.

We are pleased with the treatment of such subjects as "Judaism in Jewish History," "The Spread of Judaism Through the Ages," "Marriage in Judaism," "The Hebrew Bible" and "The Theory of Evolution and the Faith of the Jew." This latter, dispassionately treated by Dr. Wolfsberg of Berlin, contends that the creation story of Genesis cannot be abrogated by evolution and the author strictly maintains the purely hypothetical character of the evolutionary contention.

NEW HORIZONS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH: By Rev. Frederick C. Grant, S. T. D. Cloth. Pp. 287. Published by Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Price, $1.50.

We are everywhere confronted by the challenge to present the Gospel to the new age in a new way. Evolution and psychology have obtruded into the realm of faith, to modify and in some features to contradict it. To make it palatable to sensitive and spiritually perverted souls is the expressed need.

This writer, however, saves the situation by meeting the problem with firm conviction that "the faith once for all delivered to the saints" may demand a new presentation to the new generation, but cannot be other than what it always has been, "the power of God unto salvation". If evolution be conceded as a working hypothesis, creation may not thereby be denied. Indeed, he affirms his belief that creation as stated in the Scriptures cannot be successfully controverted by any assumed evolutionary postulates. He, himself accepts it.

The fact that this book is of the series of lectures of the Hale Memorial Fund, and given at the Western Theological Seminary during the past year is a recommendation of its intrinsic value. By admitting into the court of reason all biological and speculative testimony as to the doubts thereby made possible, he frankly discovers their use and misuse, resulting in his own expressed conviction that "If the new age is full of promise for science, for philosophy, for social welfare, no less is it so for religion, for sound doctrine and for theology." A thought-provoking contribution to this wide field of study.

Church Intelligence

Lack of Religion Responsible For Nervous Diseases, Says Prominent Physician.

Atlantic City, N. J.—"If men and women had more religion, they would not be flying off at tangents as they are today," is the unique manner in which Dr. Davenport White, nationally prominent in medical circles, diagnoses nervous diseases of the country.

When interviewed recently at the Marlborough-Blenheim, where the doctor had come from his home in Washington, D. C., to enjoy a brief vacation, he proved a most versatile gentleman. Religion, drama, travel and literature are just a few of the subjects upon which he voluntarily launched when discussing such far removed subjects as tuberculosis and criminally insane men.

In speaking further of the importance of religion to health, Dr. Davenport averred: "It does not matter which religion a man professes. Voodooism or any other faith under the sun serves the purpose of making a man realize that there is a higher being in whom to put his trust. This gives him something definite upon which to lean and relieves his nervous temperament. Because of the lack of religion in America, many people today are spiritually suspended in mid-air. It is no wonder that they are neurotic and subject to all known nervous ailments."

The return of the family doctor to his own is predicted by Dr. Davenport. "I believe that medicine today is too specialized," he said. "There is no doubt that the old fashioned family doctor is due for a return in the near future. I refer to the type of man who makes a general diagnosis of his patient.

A cure for tuberculosis may soon become a reality, in the opinion of Dr. Davenport, who has been doing extensive research work. He said, "I believe that doctors today are on the right track. In the beginning they emphasized the tuberculosis germ because they were so elated at its discovery. Now they are realizing that the germ itself plays a small part in the disease and are looking elsewhere."

Those who jeer at the American system of punishment to criminals have a mistaken idea, Dr. Davenport believes. "Only on rare occasions are murderers in their right mind," he said. "A man cannot take the life of a fellow being unless he is under the influence of some passion which so completely distorts his viewpoint as to make him insane."

Religion and Science to Join Hands, Predicted.

Atlantic City, N. J.—An amicable joining of hands of religion and science was predicted here yesterday by James Rodgers, of Shanghai, China, who for the past eighteen years has been in the Orient, under the auspices of the University Union Institute of Washington, D. C. At the present time he is sojourning in this resort.

"The argument is not between the truths of science and religion," he pointed out, when explaining some of the theories which he has been bringing to the students of the Orient.

"The contention is between the truths of science and the theories of religion; and the truths of religion and the theories of science," he added.

"Already theologians are turning to scientists for assistance and corroboration and scientists are turning to the church.

"Scientists rely upon the entire universe as their book of instruction. Theologians rely upon the Bible. Neither conflict in any way when they are properly interpreted. Scientists contend that the earth is more than 6,000 years old. The Bible does not disagree. It merely says, 'In the beginning God created'.

"It is a known scientific fact that no fountain can rise higher than its source. Scientists must admit that human beings have rational minds, energy and the capacity to love. Therefore, their source must have the same ability."

United States Honors Virginia Health Officer.

Dr. R. P. Cooke, now health officer for Rockbridge County, Virginia, has just received a Congressional gold medal for distinguished service. This is a delayed recognition of an act of outstanding heroism.

When Dr. Walter Reed was starting his investigation of the causes of yellow fever and its methods of transmission, he was compelled to use volunteers to disprove or to prove certain factors. At that time the great majority of people thought that the disease was carried by contact. If that theory could be proved a great step would have been taken; if that theory could be disproved much time would be saved.

Dr. Cooke was one of the small group who offered to sleep in the uncleaned hut of a man who had died of yellow fever. The outcome of this heroic experiment and the subsequent study of the mosquito as a carrier gave to Dr. Reed the information upon which is based the campaign which is ridding the world of yellow fever. These experiments were conducted in Cuba in 1900.

Doctor Elliott Returns to America to Aid Campaign Work.

On March 2, Dr. Mabel E. Elliott, one of the two American doctors at St. Luke's International Hospital, arrived in this country from Japan to aid the work in raising the funds to rebuild the Hospital.

Dr. Elliott will tour the country filling various speaking engagements. She has been in Japan since 1925.

It would be difficult to find a woman who has had a life more crowded with rich experience than Dr. Elliott. She has devoted the better part of her life to humanitarian work in various parts of the world. It would not be an exaggeration to say that no woman has a record in the field of medicine which is superior to hers.

For four years Dr. Elliott was perhaps the most notable woman connected with the American Woman's Hospitals in the Near East. "She has had," quoting Grace N. Kimball, President of the Medical Woman's National Association, "four very distinct experiences, with a crescendo of tragedy, in their continuity. First, Marash, in Central Anatolia, her hospital and general medical relief work for the population when the French troops were in occupation; the long siege by Turkish troops, with fear, hunger and disease to combat; and the final evacuation in midwinter when she went out with army and populace."

During the evacuation Dr. Elliott suffered from the severe hardships which caused men to drop from exhaustion. For three days it was necessary for the group to march through deep snow without food.

Her next hospital work came at Ismid, south of Constantinople. It took some time to get this base established and functioning properly. At last a hospital, a general medical relief station and a nurses' training school were in operation when war broke out again. The Greek occupation yielded to the Turks. Under heavy artillery fire, Dr. Elliott continued her work, at the same time sending her Christian nurses to the rear. Soon she was serving the Moslems. With this piece of work finished, Dr. Elliott was transferred to the Trans-Caucasus, where she had the terrific task of organizing and directing hospitals for Armenian refugee children. There were thousands of homeless children for her to oversee, most of whom were suffering from disease of one sort or another. Dr. Elliott rose to the occasion and did an exceptional piece of work which involved executive as well as scientific ability.

After this task was completed, Dr. Elliott was enjoying a long needed rest when the tragedy of Smyrna horrified the world. A few weeks saw her back in uniform again doing her work of mercy.

Dr. Elliott's work in Japan with Dr. Teusler needs no detailed delineation. It will suffice to say that for four years she has been Dr. Teusler's only American medical associate and as such has developed intimate knowledge of the whole problem and opportunity facing St. Luke's. The Committee in this country engaged in promoting the building fund are fortunate in having her made available at this time for speaking engagements.

Help Build for Porto Rico.

In March, 1918, Miss Ellen T. Hicks, just home from thirteen years of service in the Philippine Islands, went to St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, Porto Rico, to meet an emergency call, agreeing to stay three months. She has been there ever since.

Her work in Ponce, as it was in Manila, has been of the highest character. Miss Hicks and the Porto Rican nurses whom she has trained, have been carrying on ever since the hurricane of September 13, in the old St. Luke's building, so badly wrecked by the storm that engineers declare it must either be entirely rebuilt or abandoned.

On March 12, the eleventh anniversary of Miss Hick's arrival in Ponce, the graduates of the Nurses' Training School, and the pupil nurses, arranged a surprise party. There was a birthday cake with eleven candles, flowers galore and a check for $150 to help in the rebuilding of the Hospital. It was enclosed in an envelope reading, "For St. Luke's Hospital Building Fund. Looking forward to a new and modern building."

As Miss Hicks says: "It is a big thing for these girls to have done, knowing as I do what responsibilities most of them have. It shows how they love the Hospital and how willing they are to give even of tne little that they have, to see the Hospital rebuilt."

The General Convention asked all our Church people to make their offerings last November to provide the $202,800 the Bishops of Porto Rico and Southern Florida estimated would be necessary to repair damages and re-erect destroyed buildings. Of this amount, $100,000 was assigned to St. Luke's Hospital. So far, the total received for both Porto Rico and Southern Florida is $148,000. That means that there is no chance of rebuilding St. Luke's Hospital unless another $55,000 is received.

The record indicates that only a fraction of the congregations of the Church complied with the request of the General Convention. The Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will be glad to receive and forward additional gifts from either congregations or individuals.

Correspondence School for Indian Clergy.

A correspondence school of inestimable benefit to our Indian clergy has grown up during the past two years, through which the Rev. Paul H. Barbour, of Springfield, South Dakota, has given instructions to more than twenty-seven men, including several in North Dakota and one in Arizona. Over a thousand lessons have been given.

Ashley House, the little Indian divinity school, is headquarters for the work, but the number of students in residence must of necessity be very small, in some years none at all. But there are many married helpers, catechists, deacons and even priests, some of them middle-aged men, who are eager to make up for the deficiencies of their training for the ministry. About two years ago one of them, who lives twenty-five miles from Springfield on the Yankton Reservation, appeared, begging that some way might be found for him to study. Since then, rain or shine, in mud and snow, his rickety old Ford has driven up once a week for an afternoon of lessons. Once he did not arrive until half-past ten in the evening, but he came just the same, hoping for the bed and board which of course he found, and lessons in the morning.

Courses are given on the Prayer Book, Church History and the Bible, in English and Dakota, according to the desire and ability of the student. At the end of each quarter a report is sent to the men themselves and to the ministers in charge of their reservations, to the bishops and Dr. Ashley, while their grades and the number of lessons they have sent in is printed in Anpao, the Dakota Church paper. Two Indian priests now help with the translation, also by correspondence, a white boy from the parish at Springfield runs the duplicator, and the rural mail carriers are the rest of the office force! In South Dakota some part in this study is now required for the renewal of a catechist's license.

It is now possible as never before to make education one of the requirements for advancement in the ministry. In fact, the opportunity for study which this new educational venture offers increases the self-respect of our Indian staff, dignifies their work and arouses their ambition. It is a work that ought in time to do much to raise the whole standard of intelligence among the Indian clergy, one of the greatest needs in the period of transition through which the Indians are passing.

The first "graduate", the Rev. Joseph Paints Yellow, has finished the course, taken the examination, and will shortly be the first to receive a certificate, which is being printed in the new printing department of the Hare Industrial School at Mission, S. D.

Mr. Barbour will gladly receive inquiries from clergy anywhere in the country who have Indian workers who would profit by such instruction.

A GREATER ROGATION SUNDAY.

By the Rev. Harrison W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work, National Council.

For hundreds of years the historic branches of the Christian Church have devoted the Rogation Days to special prayers to God for His blessing on the fruits of the soil. "Vouchsafe to bless the lands and multiply the harvests of the world" pleads the Church in one of the prayers appointed to be read on the Rogation Days. In some parishes and lands the day is made vivid by litanies and processions, but usually with the soil and crops and harvests in mind.

That the Church might well ask God's blessing on the husbandman himself, on the spiritual, social and economic welfare of the farmer as well as on the soil he tills, was recognized officially by the Church at its last General Convention. In fact, that Convention passed a Resolution urging all bishops and clergy to include rural life and work in their Rogation Sunday sermons, services and prayers.

World-Wide Observance: At the meeting of the International Association of Agricultural Missions, held in January last, missionaries from foreign lands regretted that "they had no official and vivid way of bringing home to native peoples the fact that the God of the Christians is a God of fields and farms just as much as any other god." Others frankly stated that "there ought to be a 'Rural Life Sunday' to be known and observed as such by Christians of all names and in all lands."

Immediately the Secretary for Rural Work invited all denominations and churches to unite in "keeping the fifth Sunday after Easter each year as Rural Life Sunday". The suggestion was accepted by the Association, and since then the Home Missions Council and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America have endorsed the movement in official Resolutions. Should the churches represented unite whole-heartedly in the observance of Rogation, or Rural Life, Sunday, it would be one of the most widely observed days in the Christian Year, reaching practically every part of Christendom.

500,000 Neglected People Given the Gospel in Print.

A splendid, philanthropic, Christian work is done each year by the Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, founded in 1894 by the noted evangelist, D. L. Moody, which is not generally known. It consists of the free distribution of evangelical Christian literature to various classes who are in great need, but are often neglected—such as prisoners, lumber-jacks, mountaineers, seamen, soldiers, firemen, pioneers, patients in our large city hospitals, and the peoples of Alaska, Latin-America, Africa, India, and the Philippine Islands.

During the past fiscal year, ending February 28, the Association has distributed Bible portions—consisting of Testaments, Gospels and Pocket Treasurys—Moody Colportage books, Evangel booklets, and Gospel tracts to the extent of 681,995 copies. As a result of this wide distribution many hardened criminals have been saved, undesirable citizens have been transformed, and the young people and boys and girls in the schools of the mountains and the western frontiers have been given a new and better outlook upon life. It is estimated that about 500,000 neglected people have thus been reached during the year with the Gospel in print.

The Association would like to get in touch with more Christian workers who can cooperate in the distribution of Gospel literature to prisoners, hospital patients and other neglected classes. It also invites correspondence from those who would like to assist in making possible a larger distribution of evangelical literature to those classes included in its Missionary Book Funds.

Bishop Tucker in Hospital for Appendicitis.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, underwent an operation for appendicitis on the afternoon of April 2, in the hospital in Alexandria, Virginia. The Bishop was in Richmond Monday, keeping many engagements, but when he went to the hospital on Tuesday the doctors decided that he had an emergency case of appendicitis and should be operated on at once. The diocesan headquarters in Richmond received word from Mrs. Tucker late Tuesday afternoon that Bishop Tucker stood the operation very well. It is hoped that he will be out very soon and that no complications will arise.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

National Cathedral.

Throngs of visitors made their way to Washington Cathedral during the Easter Season. In recent years, Easter and the Sunday preceding have been great visiting days at the Cathedral, and the Cathedral Guild of Ushers were all prepared to care for those who came by furnishing guides for the crypt chapels now completed and other points of interest. On the Sunday before the recent inaugural, more than 6,000 people entered Bethlehem Chapel, and Easter and Cherry blossom time in Washington being coincident this year, many thousands came to the National Capital at this time and included in their sightseeing a visit to the Cathedral.

Washington Cathedral is in a very real sense a National Cathedral, if the increased national interest evidenced by visits and gifts from all over the country is a criterion.

Diocesan Drama and Pageant Society.

The spring meeting of the Diocesan Drama and Pageant Society was held in the Parish Hall of the Church of Our Saviour, 1616 Irving Street, N. E., on Sunday evening, March 31 (Easter Day), at eight o'clock. It was preceded by a demonstration pageant entitled, "Quien Quaeritis" (Whom Seeketh Thou), under the direction of Mrs. H. G. Torbert. This is the oldest religious pageant of which there is any record.

Swedish Parish Fortieth Anniversary.

The fortieth anniversary of the Swedish work at St. Bartholomew's, New York, was celebrated on Sunday, March 3, with the Holy Communion in English at ten and in Swedish at 11:15. The following day members and friends of the congregation gathered in the social hall of the chapel and listened to reminiscences of the past and plans for the future.

Since the time when Dr. Hammarskold began the work in February, 1889, the ministers in charge have baptized 2,081 children, presented 889 candidates for Confirmation, married 940 couples and officiated at 751 burials.

The first Swedish service was held in St. Bartholomew's Church, Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, the first Sunday afternoon in March, 1889. Bishop Potter and Dr. Greer, then rector of the parish, took part in the service, and the late Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt was present as a representative of the vestry. At the conclusion of Dr. Hammarskold's sermon in Swedish, Bishop Potter delivered a memorial address on the life and work of John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor. Immediately after this address a Swedish male chorus of Brooklyn rendered Josephson's "Requiem Aeternam" in Latin. The use of the Swedish Liturgy and the three different languages made Bishop Potter state that it was "the best catholic service" he had attended.

The present vicar is the Rev. Eric C. Ericson. He is trying to raise funds for a new chancel and the enlargement of the Chapel. When the work is done it will be one of the most inspiring of our Swedish Churches.

Memorial Service for Marshal Foch.

A memorial service for Marshal Foch was held in historic old St. Paul's Church, Richmond, on March 26, at the same hour of the day, twelve mid-day, as the funeral services were conducted in Paris. Those who were fortunate enough to be crowded in the pews or standing in the aisles will long remember the beauty of a very stirring ceremony. Dr. Beverley Tucker, rector of St. Paul's, read the funeral service. The organ played Chopin's Funeral March, and then the Marseillaise.

Veterans of the World War were present in uniform and in their midst were veterans of our other war in their faded gray uniforms. Colonel John Cutchins, who was with the Richmond troops in France made the address.

In this church, where Lee worshipped, Colonel Cutchins gracefully paid France's great hero the most perfect tribute a Southerner could offer. He compared Marshal Foch with the South's immortal hero, General Lee, in both of whom ever shone the humility of true greatness.

Church School Runs Airplane Competition.

The Church School of St. James' Church, Richmond, is in midst of its airplane race, and children are enjoying their trans-continental trip immensely. For first two weeks Mrs. King's class of girls had a perfect score and stood in the lead. On the third week Henry Froehling's class of boys caught up with and passed the leading plane. But its still anybody's race. The distance for the week is made up on a percentage of attendance of the class and the percentage of those who are on time and bring an offering.

The Junior Choir has not only sung on the fourth Sunday, when the School meets in the church for its opening service, but during Lent has been singing at the Friday afternoon service. The fifty sets of vestments, which were the gift of Dr. G. Freeland Peter, former rector of St. James, to the church, have all been in use, and the services have been a great success. Young men from the Y. P. S. L. have, on several occasions, read the Lessons, and the rector has been basing his addresses on boys and girls out of the Old Testament. The Junior Brotherhood ushered at these services and took up the offering. At the Children's Celebration on Easter, certificates were awarded to all of the children who attended these Friday services, or made up at other services for those they were not able to attend.

Dr. Gibson Preaches at Three Missions.

Under his commission as one of "The Seventy Mission Preachers", Dr. Gibson, rector of St. James, Richmond, has had the privilege of preaching three missions this year.

He spent a week at V. M. I., beginning with Sunday morning and preaching every day through Friday. Before he left the Institute, an election was held to secure members of the Cadet Vestry from the fourth class, and it is a pleasure to all at St. James to know that Harley Duane, a member of St. James, was one of the two cadets elected at this time.

Dr. Gibson's second mission was at Woodberry Forest, of which school he is an alumnus. He preached in the Chapel on Sunday night, and spoke again on Monday and Tuesday to the assembled school, and in addition to these services, held conferences with the boys who so desired.

On the week before Holy Week, he preached at the noonday services in St. Paul's Church, Norfolk.

The Parkwood Club.

Under the Edwin Gould Foundation of New York operated by the Memorial Home Board, Richmond, Virginia, the Parkwood Club, has been established in Richmond. This is a club for young business girls receiving small salaries. Room and board are furnished here at six dollars a week. Also girls desiring vocational training can secure financial assistance from the club.

The place has a home-like atmosphere, with large grounds and a good location. The address is 3003 Parkwood Avenue.

Unusual Lecture.

An unusual demonstration and lecture was given at the Church of the Redeemer, Merrick, on a recent Monday night. The occasion was the regular biweekly meeting of the Church School teachers of the parishes centering on Merrick; but the usual program was set aside to listen to the Rev. Harry G. Greenberg, of the House of the Holy Comforter, Brooklyn, who spoke on "The Jewish Feast of the Passover and Its Relation to the Christian Eucharist". More than a hundred people from Grace Church, Massapequa; St. Mark's, North Bellmore; Redeemer, Merrick; Transfiguration, Freeport; St. Paul's, Roosevelt; and All Saints, Baldwin, were present.

The lecturer was provided with a table set in the usual way for the observance of the Feast of the Passover, and with the food items essential to it. As the lecture proceeded, there were frequent striking and illuminating references to incidents of the Last Supper, or corresponding parts of the Holy Eucharist, or to matters of Christian doctrine, which made the presentation of this Feast extremely interesting and profitable to those present. Following the lecture, a brief statement was made of the objects and methods of the House of the Holy Comforter, and an offering was taken for the work. It was explained that this offering would be used to provide unleavened bread for certain poor families whom the missoinary knew, thus giving him an opportunity for closer contact with them and the presentation of the Christian fulfillment of the Jewish Passover in the Sacrifice of Calvary and the Eucharist.

Protestants Loan Church To Armenian Catholics.

On Easter afternoon beginning at 1:30 o'clock a service in Armenian was held at the Church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, the Rev. Jeffrey Jennings, D. D., rector. This service was held in the Episcopal Church, due to the fact that the Armenian Catholics in Brooklyn do not have a church of their own as yet. There are about 500 Armenian Catholics in the vicinity of the Church of the Atonement. Recently a church formerly occupied by the Swedish Lutherans at Fourth Avenue, corner Fifteenth Street, was purchased with the possession as of April 1.

As Easter fell on March 31, Dr. Jennings was asked for the use of the Church of the Atonement. He immediately notified General Episcopal Headquarters at the Church Missions House of this request and received word from the Rev. Robert T. Lau, in charge of the foreign-born Americans, that "any courtesy which you can show to the Rev. Elisee Kalchinjian will be well directed". The trustees of the Church of the Atonement also gave their consent and the Rt. Rev. Ernest Milmore Stires, Bishop of the Diocese of Long Island, in a letter to Dr. Jennings said in part: "I am indeed very glad to approve of your invitation to the Armenian priest to use the Church of the Atonement for their services at certain convenient hours. This is a brotherly act and will, I am sure, be far-reaching in its good effect."

The singing at this service was under the leadership of H. Shabian, rendered by an Armenian choir of twelve trained voices. Mrs. Alexander Kalajian was the soloist. The service was conducted by Archbishop Tirayr, exprelate of the Armenian Church in America. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Kalchinjian and the Rev. Dr. Jeffrey Jennings. A special invitation was sent to the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., to be present. This was the first time in the history of the Armenian Church that any of its members have held a service in the Diocese of Long Island. The new church will be the first Armenian Church in Brooklyn.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Abbott Faces Inspiring Work.

A daily newspaper says that it is the adventurous spirit of the missionary, who sees a great opportunity for service, that has inspired Dean H. P. Almon Abbott, newly-elected Bishop of the Diocese of Lexington, to relinquish a $20,000 yearly salary as rector of the wealthy St. Chrysostom's Church in Chicago for the $5,000 yearly paid by the Lexington Diocese.

The new Bishop, who begins his duties in Kentucky in May, envisions inspiring work among the mountaineers of Eastern Kentucky. Bishop Abbott will have charge of Eastern Kentucky, embracing 20,000 square miles and one of the most difficult problems in the Episcopalian program.

Many struggling hill country missions must be rejuvenated, there being few self-supporting parishes in the mountain zone.

The Lexington Diocese includes approximately thirty churches and missions, with twenty clergymen and 5,000 parishioners.

Dr. Abbott will probably have to add mule riding to his accomplishments, as some of the roads in his diocese are almost impassable otherwise. Heavy wagons are also used, because automobiles and buggies can not penetrate some places. Leslie County, the most isolated area in the State, is in the diocese.

The new bishop, a Canadian, will come to Lexington about May 1.

Explain the sparkle of the sunshine
The joyousness of the meadow lark's song in spring:
The snowdrifts that break into little streams:
The crimson roses spilling their perfume on the breeze:
The purple blue of the morning twilight:
The sunshine that sifts through the noon-day air:
The rainbows that glorify every black cloud:
The golden orioles that fly hither and yon:
Why the dull tomb of yesterday
With its cavern-like coldness and gloom,
Brings the resurrection of a new day,
Bright, blue, sparkling, cloudless:
Whereby the divine, supreme love of the Maker
May be satisfied,
But not by man understood.

The Desire For Immortality.

Archaeological research in Palestine is bringing some interesting facts to light, chief among which is a corrective to the prevailing view that the inhabitants of that country in Old Testament times had little or no belief in the survival of the soul after death. The spade and mattock are now revealing to us that, side by side with the religion of the prophets, there subsisted a sort of cult of the dead. It was not unattended with moral danger, for there is some evidence that necromancy was practiced with its correlative abominations; which no doubt is the reason why the great prophets discountenanced it and placed the main stress of their teaching upon ethical values in this life rather than upon the satisfying of curiosity in regard to a life to come.

But there are glimpses even in the canonical Scriptures of a longing which takes a higher form, as in King David's touching words when he dried his tears after mourning the loss of his child: "I shall go to him, but he will not return to me." If this meant no more than that the bereaved father looked forward to sharing the same grave with his little son it is one of the saddest utterances in the Bible. But in the light of the new evidence we are not driven to this conclusion; there is an alternative, namely, that David looked forward to reunion with his beloved one somewhere and somehow. The tokens of a belief in survival which excavation is discovering are also token of the existence of superstition and worse in ancient Israel, but there is a pathetic side to their significance none the less. They show that the human heart of three thousand years ago, like the human heart today, longed for some assurance that the beauty and the joy of life, the sweetness of human companionship and mutual ministry and tenderness, did not end with the tomb.

The assurance was not forthcoming. Over the ancient world, as has been well said, the shadow of death hung like a pall. It was with the promulgation of the gospel of Christ that a new and really triumphant attitude towards the great mystery became possible to faith and love. We need not here discuss all that was held to be involved in Christ's victory over death as recorded in the New Testament it is sufficient to point out that the most conspicuous immediate fruit of that sublime event was that it changed entirely the feeling of His followers about the mystery of death. They were no longer afraid of it; they regarded it henceforth as no more than an incident in a process that had yet to be consummated. Neither the ordinary Greek nor the ordinary Jewish view of the survival of the soul after death was that of the Christian. Neither going on in a disembodied state, nor going back to a renewal of what had been, fully expressed the Christian hope.

This is a fact which we need to keep in mind at the present day, for much of the talk about survival means no more than the desire for a continuation of existence as we know it in the flesh but under better conditions in some other sphere; and this is not enough. The Christian seeks eternal life, and eternal life implies more than duration. It means nothing less than sharing in the life of God, and therefore in the fulfilment and glorification of all that is best in our present experience.

There are many people who can neither believe in this all-comprehensive attainment or in the fact of survival at all. Here and there one comes across people upon whom the burden of the life that now is has pressed so heavily that they desire no other; they are tired out and only long for rest, the rest that knows no ending, the sleep that knows no waking. They wake so often to pain and sorrow and disillusionment that to them it would be no bad news to be told on unassailable authority that they will never awaken more after life's fitful fever finally ceases and its unhappy dreams have fled. Such persons may be more numerous than we commonly assume.

But probably the majority of those who doubt or disbelieve in the immortality of the soul do so simply because, so far as they can discern, there seems no likelihood that self-conscious life can survive the break-up of its physical organization. There are not a few fine spirits in the modern world who feel themselves compelled to the dreadful conviction that the highest reaches of human character, the noblest of human aspirations, and the sweetest and most beautiful of human relationships, are nothing more than a tragical development against a dark and awful background of cosmic mystery and doomed to pass away like the bloom of yester year.

Warwick Deeping gives us in "Sorrel and Son" the confession of a brave, unselfish father whose whole mature life has been a struggle to give his boy a standing and work in the world better than he himself has ever had. The purpose achieved the father is smitten with cancer and thus expresses himself to his closest friend: "I don't believe in anything. I have just done a particular sort of job—and loved it. The whole business is beyond me. Sometimes I have felt that there is a plan, but then—there is so much against the idea of a plan. Just a warring of blind forces—pushing—like a lot of beasts. . . . . We don't matter. Man matters only to himself. He is fighting a lone fight against a vast indifference. . . . . Man invents religion to hide the full horror of the universe's complete indifference, for it is horrible. He tries spiritism. Oh—anything to escape to color the spectacles. I have always felt myself up against—not only the human scuffle—but against the crushing—impersonal foot of the heedless universal."

This is a sad testimony, but it is all that many men of integrity ever attain to; they will find something better awaiting for them on the farther shore where all life's questions are answered. Nor is it merely with the desire to administer a spiritual anodyne to the perplexed and weary, the suffering and the solitary, that I place over against it a word of God that verifies itself infallibly in the heart of the man who dares to trust it and challenge the darkness in its power. "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made comformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." We can live that resurrection life now—which is the deeper sense of this famous passage. "Because I live," said our blessed Redeemer, "ye shall live also" Yes, we live in Him. He is Himself the pledge and guarantee that no spiritual possession we have ever enjoyed can perish with the passing of earth's little day. We cannot even think of life in Christ as subject to the vicissitudes of things temporal, nor of anything worthy of our fellowship with Christ as being at the mercy of the fortuitous and the unpredictable. This world of shadows and dreams is not our home, nor do we live in it alone; we live in another and higher all the time, though it be veiled from us by our mortal part. And when the veil is rent asunder at the last we shall be no strangers in a strange land but children greeting each other in the Father's house.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, in Church of England Newspaper.

Easter Thoughts.

If this life is all there is for man he is over-endowed. He comes to old age eager to complete unfinished tasks, and breathes his last longing to go on with the things that absorb mind and soul. Victor Hugo said: "The frosts of winter are on my brow, but eternal summer is in my soul. I smell the breath of the roses as at twenty, and the dreams of youth still throng my brain. For fifty years I have been writing fiction, poetry, drama, history, yet I have not written a tithe of what is in me. I shall finish my day, but not my task. Life is not a blind alley, but a thoroughfare."

The yearnings of the human heart for an immortality free from the restrictions and evils of this life argues for the existence of such a life. Dr. Mullins used a fine illustration to enforce this truth. "Some birds in Northern Europe migrate at the approach of winter thousands of miles toward equatorial Africa. They fly days at a time on unwearied wing toward the land of sunshine, away from the cold of the North. One of these birds was confined in a cage when first hatched and kept there until grown. When the season for migration came it was found seated on the porch in the cage ceaselessly beating its wings for hours at a time. Thus it manifested its migratory instinct. Dimly present in the bird's imagination perhaps was some picture of a far-off clime of sunshine and food and flowers. So also man beats his wings in his earthly cage of time and space. He also is a migratory bird. His soul pictures a far-away land of spiritual rest and peace. He longs for immortality and God."

To live again with loved ones who have passed on from this life is the universal craving of the human heart. Note the instances below, which show that philosopher and savage alike have this yearning; and if it be so universal surely it must be implanted by God who can and will gratify it. Socrates said: "If death be a transition to another place, and if it be true, as has been said, that all who have died are there—what, O judges, could be a greater good than this? What would not any one of you give to converse with Orpheus and Masacus and Hesiod and Homer? I would gladly die many times, if this be true. To dwell and converse with them and to question them would indeed be happiness unspeakable!"

Dr. Egerton Young, a missionary to the Indians, said: "I visited a band of pagan Indians in the Far North, and found them utterly unresponsive to Gospel truth until I shouted out, 'I know where all your children are—all your dead children'. They quickly uncovered their faces and manifested intense interest. I went on: 'They have gone from your wigwams and your campfires. Your hearts are sad and you mourn for the children you hear not. But there is only one way to the beautiful land, where the Son of God has gone, and into which he takes the children, and you must come this way if you would be happy and enter in'. As I spoke a stalwart Indian sprang up and rushed toward me. 'Missionary, my heart is sad and I mourn much, for none of my children are among the living; very lonely is my wigwam, I long to see them again and clasp them in my arms. Tell me, what must I do to enter that beautiful land, and see my children?' And others quickly followed him, seeking for instruction."

Easter emphasizes the Christian's hope of immortality in the presence of death. It is said that there is a chamber in the catacombs used about the time of Julius Caesar, and "every tomb has emblems of the skull and crossbones. Hard by is another chamber of a later generation, and lo! Christ's teachings have carved upon each stone a lily, eloquent of immortal hope".

The Christian's hope is based upon the resurrection of Christ the Redeemer, who "could not be holden of death". Bishop Warne, in an address of several years ago, said: "In one of our villages in North India a missionary was preaching in a bazaar, and after he had closed a Muhammadan gentleman came up, and said, 'You must admit that we have one thing you have not, and it is better than anything you have.' The missionary smiled, treating him as a gentleman, and said, 'I shall be pleased to hear what it is.' The Muhammadan gentleman said, 'When we go to our Mecca, we find at least a coffin. But when you Christians go to Jerusalem, which is your Mecca, you find nothing but an empty grave.' And the missionary replied, 'That is just the difference. Muhammadan is dead. Muhammadan is in his coffin.' The founders of all these false systems of religion and philosophy are in their graves. But Jesus Christ, whose kingdom is to include all nations and kindreds and tribes is not entombed; He is risen. And all power in heaven and earth has been given unto Him."—Dr. H. H. Smith.

My beauty vain,
If all my way-faring
Did not pertain

How greater? than Fit for His gathering—

Evangelism or Tact.

The world was full of religion when Jesus Christ in person preached the Gospel, but it was such bad and false religion that the people "verily thought they did God service" when they nailed Jesus, the Preacher of good and true religion, on the Cross. You can't build a beautiful home on land where ugly, filthy huts stand, until you first tear down and utterly demolish the huts of wretchedness; neither can you build the religion of the Lord Jesus in the lives of people until you first annihilate the devil-ideas in their hearts and minds which pass for religion.

All human life and every good cause is suffering today because the Christian "churches" have not been true to Jesus Christ; they have left unsaid the things they ought to have said with telling emphasis. Many discreet, diplomatic, tactful leaders of all the churches called Christian have crucified Jesus the God of Christianity, in the churches through their sins of omission. That sounds hard and cruel. Yet I believe it to be the solid truth. We have honored in most churches men who have preached what Poe called poetry—"the vagueness of exultation"; men who fear of giving offense to some of "the best people" have never fought the anti-Jesus prejudices, ignorances and pagan concepts which these people have insisted are religion. Isn't it queer that most church people think it is a compliment to say of a clergyman, "every one speaks well of him," when Jesus, the God of Christianity, said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you?" Everybody with the mentality of a fifth-grade school boy knows that the male of whom every one speaks well deserves the name of man only when you put a yes and a hyphen before the word man. But the devil has diseased society with an idea called "tact" until middle-aged and old people have mistaken tact for Christianity.

Our Church has the priceless opportunity of helping to introduce the Jesus Christ of the Gospel narratives to people of today; of helping powerfully to break down autocratic, anti-Jesus ideas of God and teaching the abundant life-giving religion of Jesus. I truly believe the Protestant "churches" are looking to us for leadership as never before. They will watch our evangelism. What are we going to preach to the world? I'm hoping that some of the seventy sent forth by the Church will preach Jesus and Jesus only; that they will honestly and fearlessly try to convince people that no idea, however old and revered, and no tradition or teaching of church can be called Christian unless it can be squared with what Jesus Christ said, or did, or stood for as the Christ is portrayed in the Gospel narratives.—E. C. Tuthill.

A Brief Description of a Short Life.

Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until He was thirty, and then for three years He was an itinerant preacher. He never wrote a book. He never held an office. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place where He was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. He had no credentials but Himself. He had nothing to do with this world except the power of His divine manhood. While still a young man, the tide of popular opinion turned against Him. His friends ran away. One of them denied Him. He was turned over to His enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed upon a cross between two thives. His executioners gambled for the only piece of property He had on earth while He was dying—and that was His coat. When He was dead He was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

"Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone and today He is the centerpiece of the human race and the Leader of the column of progress.

"I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has that One solitary life.—Selected.

GREAT THOUGHTS ARE GOD'S.

Great thoughts are God's; for, as the heavens are high
Above the earth, and as His ways transcend
The ways of man; His thoughts o'er-reach the end,
O'er top our loftiest. And as the sky
Envelopes sun, moon, stars, and girds them round
With vast infinitude of tractless space
His thoughts envelope ours. We can but trace
Them dimly in His works. Earth, sky, abound
With tokens of Omniscience; and yet,
Himself doth say within His written Word,
"Know ye,"—"Ye are the temple of the Lord."
And if in us He dwell will He not let
His thoughts live in us too, our thoughts to inspire,
Our lives to set aglow with heavenly fire?
—A. Edwards.

A carpenter is not a good carpenter who must think how to hold his saw or plane. Even so the truthful person does not need to make any effort to tell the truth. It is a natural process.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

Martha Shepherd Lippencott.

This world is as we make it,
I often hear folks say,
If we are sad and tearful,
The world will seem that way;
And if we seek the dark side,
Where everything goes wrong,
And see mole-hills as mountains,
Our lives will seem too long:

But if we seek life's sunshine,
Sweet joy to others, give,
And gaily climb life's mountains
As though we're glad to live
To overcome disaster
And, sunshine round us, shower,
To make our dear friends happy,
Then joy will be our dower.

The world is but a mirror,
Reflecting each one's mind.
If we look at it crossly,
To us, 'twill not look kind;
But if we smile upon it,
It will be joyous, too:
No matter how we see it
'Twill give us our own view.

So, when the world looks dreary,
And life seems bitter, too,
Just ask your disposition
If it can, better, do;
And, if it turns to sunshine,
The world will look so bright
That you will be forgetting
How dark has been the night.

The Dark Forest.

Mary Danforth Dodge.

It was long ago in the early years of the last century, when my grandfather was a boy about twelve years old. He had been sent on horseback by his father to deliver a letter in a neighboring town. Very old, indeed, little Joseph felt as he rode away on Big Bill, his father's letter pinned safely into his pocket, and a basket of lunch tied to the saddle, for it would be a good half-day's expedition, and he could not be home before dark.

One cloud shadowed Joseph's joy as he galloped off through the shady street, followed by the eyes of his village playmates, to whom Joseph, journeying forth on the big bay horse, seemed the embodiment of dignity and importance. Yes, for all that he sat so straight, and held his head so high, Joseph was worried. Just outside the village was a two-mile strip of thick forest through which he must ride. It would not be so bad going, but in the evening!— The very thought of the forest after dark made Joseph's heart thump and his breath catch in his throat. What might not happen then! Joseph often played in the forest in the daytime with the other boys and girls, but even then it was always with peering eyes that they ventured away from the path. Any big trunk might hide an Indian; out from the underbrush might spring a bear; and one never knew where the elves and gnomes were. Mercy Ann's brother had seen them under an oak tree one moonlight night. One never could tell what might happen in the forest, and after dark! Yes, Joseph was frightened, as frightened as little Mary Eliza was of the shadow-haunted upstairs at bedtime; and during his whole outward trip he thought of little else, but his return through the forest.

Some hours later a very tired little boy turned his horse's head toward home. His father's letter had been delivered, some small purchases made for his mother, and now he must face the long return ride. It was even later than he had expected; for he had been delayed in his errands, and he had not gone many miles before twilight began to fall. Oh, the nightmare of the forest, awaiting him with all its terrors! How could he go through it! Would he get through, at all? The soft, spring dusk closed around him; stars came out overhead; friendly lights twinkled from scattered farm houses. Other little boys were going to bed. Big Bill's hoofs thudded a rhythm along the road. Leaning down, Joseph rested his head on the horse's thick mane. How good bed would feel when he got home! But, oh, the dark forest!

"Well, well, my boy! old Bill knew the way, didn't he!"

A lantern flashed in Joseph's face, and some one lifted him from the saddle. Dazed, bewildered, he rubbed his eyes. Home! But the forest! Where was the forest? Blinking sleepily, he followed his father into the kitchen, where his mother was awaiting him with a bowl of steaming hominy.

His father's cheery voice rang out again. "Well, Mother, I think Big Bill deserves a good supper, too. The last thing Joseph remembers is Squire Brown's house, five miles back. He slept all the way from there through the forest!"

To Joseph, eating his hominy on the settee in the chimney corner, it all seemed too impossible to be true.

"Why, I needn't have been afraid of the forest, after all," he thought to himself, wonderingly, "for when I got to it, it was just as if it wasn't there!"

As I knew him in his later years, my grandfather was a man of unusual poise, facing with brave trustfulness the many dark forests which from time to time loomed ahead upon his path; calm and steadfast, also, in anticipation of the darkest forest of all, through which each one of us must pass at the end of our earthly journey. And I wonder if this incident of his boyhood had not illumined for him in all after years the truth of the words: "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow . . . Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

At the Footbridge.

Little Eugene was six years old that summer. His sister Jo was four. The two were always together when at play. Sometimes they went with their father when he worked in his big garden which was beyond a small creek from their home. This creek was not a pretty stream rippling over little pebbles. It was deep, and in some places narrow. There was a footbridge at one narrow place. This bridge was just a heavy timber, like a plank, only very thick and strong. The timber had once floated down the big river, and had been caught with other drift and placed here for a bridge. But there was no railing for the hands, so it was not very safe for little folks.

Farther down the stream, near its mouth was a good bridge for wagons on the main road.

One day the two children went with their father when he took his team of horses across on this bridge. It was great fun for them. They stayed awhile playing and watching their father at his work. When they grew tired and ready to go home he told them to be sure to cross on the big wagon bridge. They promised, and he thought no more about it at the time.

What strange notion came into their little heads, no one will ever know. They were not often disobedient.

"We can cross on the plank, for I can lead you," said Eugene.

"Yes," said Jo, and so they went to the plank. There had been much rain, and the water had been over the bridge, where it sagged in the middle, and had left a slime that made it slippery. The children had gone about half way when little Jo fell into the water. She had happened to fall at the side from which the water coming. Instantly the boy lay down flat, and reaching, as she was floating under, caught her dress, then her arm, and kept tugging until she was again on the plank. Then he led her till they reached the bank. The two were now safely across, but afraid to go home because Jo's clothing was wet. So they played a while in the sunshine hoping to dry her clothing. But their mother noticed that her hair and clothes were damp, and inquired how it happened; and finally—though reluctantly, the story came out.

The parents wondered at the presence of mind Eugene had shown. If he had become frightened when his sister fell, and had run away to give the alarm, the stream would have carried her on to the big river, which was a short distance beyond the wagon bridge.

The family has always remembered that the little boy, six years of age, thus saved his sister's life.—L. S. M., in The Christian Evangelist.

How China Peers Into the Future.

Do you belong to the cow? Do you belong to the dragon?—to the pig?—to the monkey?—to the horse? It does sound rather foolish, but it would be really very important if you lived in China.

In China it makes a big difference whether you belong to the rat or the snake. The fortune teller declares that your success in life depends upon knowing this, and furthermore every one believes what the fortune teller says.

Belonging to one of these various animals means the year of your birth, and that is something that you cannot choose. So if you happen to arrive in this world in 1908 you would belong to the sheep, or in 1887, it would be the monkey, and you couldn't help it, of course.

These fortune tellers of China have a board that is called the "yin-yang-bah-gwah" board and from this they claim to foretell everything from success or failure in love, courtship, and marriage to how the crops are coming along, whether to build the new house, the state of weather for the next festival next month and several hundred thousand other things. Yes, anything you want to know.

Fortune telling in China is one of the fine arts, and the mass of the Chinese people thoroughly believe in it when it is done by this "yin-yang" board. The majority of the houses of China have one of these boards nailed up over the front door, as people in America sometimes nail up horseshoes over their doors, for good luck.

If the question is too complicated upon which you want help for you to read the future, then you go to a fortune teller, who, after finding out your year of birth and whom you "belong to" and what the "elements" say and information about your partner, such as his year of birth and whether he is lucky or not, the fortune teller renders a decision that is guaranteed.

The "ying-yang" board is a mass of special markings and symbols every little mark having a meaning. It is arranged on the check and balance plan. That is, there is the "yin" and the "yang" principles. The "yin", which is black, and the "yang", which is generally white, stand for such opposite things as earth and heaven, male and female, cold and heat, darkness and light, evil and good.

Old "Nai-Nai", which is a popular term meaning grandmother, was telling her grandson about some family affairs and instructed him a bit in the wisdom of the "ying-yang" board.

Lo An was asking Nai-Nai about his brother's possible marriage, and the old grandmother was explaining how fortunate it was, the girl that the brother was first engaged to, died because of what the "yin-yang" board showed.

"When the girl died," she said to the lad, "your father began to think there might be something to the old belief after all, and finally he went to see a fortune teller to learn the reason for her death. As soon as the fortune teller learned the year in which the girl was birth, he knew why she had died, for he saw that your brother belonged to the dog, and the girl to the chicken.

"He told your father, 'If this girl and your son had married, and she had lived, they would have had many children, for "fire produces earth" (fire goes with the year 1898 and earth with the year 1899), but the dog and the chicken cannot be matched without great danger to the life of the person belonging to the chicken. You should not forget in marriage or business that the horse cannot be matched with the cow, the tiger cannot be matched with the snake, the dragon cannot be matched with the hare, the sheep with the rat, the monkey with the pig and the chicken with the dog."

These years are the special antipathies among the twelve animals that go with the twelve earthly branches. Now Nai-Nai and her fortune teller could solve the problem, but it included the "elements" and whether they conquered one another or not. The Chinese say that water "conquers" fire, fire conquers metal, metal conquers wood, wood conquers earth and earth conquers water. But on the other hand, wood "produces" metal, metal produces water and water produces wood. The ideal is to mate folks and business and enterprises that are shown by the "yin-yang" board to be productive. Fire and water are a bad combination, while fire and fire or fire and metal would be considered just tolerable.

In China and in other places of the Far East marriage and business and agriculture and progress all await the pleasure and caprice of the "yin-yang" board and its interpretations . It is the great fate board of the Orient. It is complicated enough to satisfy and they provide against failure. Failures of a prophecy to a Chinese person means that due allowance was not made for the "yin" or the "yang" or for the "bah-gwah".

This may sound all very foolish—because it applies to the yellow folks of the Far East, but after all it is but the systematic working out of superstition and ignorance over thousands of years, and even we people of the West are still affected more or less by just as senseless superstitions, such as considering thirteen and Friday unlucky.—By Uthai Vincent Wilcox, in Boy's World.

Betty Ann's Dream.

Betty Ann was a very nice little girl most of the time, but she had one fault; she never wanted to pick up her toys or put away her clothes when she was through with them. One night when she went to bed she was feeling very cross because her mother had made her pick up her playthings. "I don't like to put things away!" she pouted. "I wish I never had to pick up!"

"All right, you need not pick up any more," said a voice like her mother's.

"O goody!" exclaimed Betty Ann joyfully.

For the next few days she was happy because she could let everything stay where she had left it.

One beautiful afternoon the neighbor next door invited Betty Ann to go along with her for a drive in her new car. Betty Ann flew to get her cape, but it was not in its place.

"Mother, where's my cape?" she asked excitedly.

"Just where you left it," replied her mother.

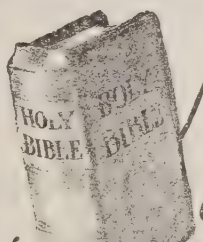
Betty Ann hunted everywhere, but could not find it. So the neighbor with the new car drove away, and Betty Ann missed a ride.

Then Betty Ann called her little friends in for a tea party. She looked for her pretty little pink dishes.

"Mother, where are my tea set dishes?" she asked tearfully.

"Just where you last used them," replied her mother.

Finally she found them out in the yard, where she had had her last tea party. Her dog had pulled the cloth down from the table, and the dishes lay on the ground all broken. She felt so badly about it that she started to cry, and then she awoke. She rubbed her eyes. It was only a dream, but it set her to thinking. She knew her mother was right about making her pick up. She ran downstairs.



"I thought you were fast asleep, Betty Ann," said her mother in surprise.

"So I was, mother, and I had a dream. It showed me very plainly what a careless little girl I am. After this I am going to try to put away my things. Then if any one should want to take me riding in their new car, I won't have to stay at home because I can't find my cape, my hat, or my gloves. And if I should give a tea party, my pretty dishes won't be all broken."—The Sunbeam.

About Gorillas.

About the only time a gorilla will attack is in defense of its young. They are then extremely dangerous. A gorilla is so powerful that he makes short work of a man if he gets hold of him, usually tearing his windpipe out.

Gorillas are very cunning. They throw sentries out during the daytime; these sentries are relieved at regular intervals with clock-like precision, and I have seen huge boulders worn as smooth as a piece of glass and polished as if by varnish from the continual tread of these sentries on the same boulder.—By Captain Franklin, in Adventure Magazine.

Dear Friend:

Another Year of Blessing.

The thirty-first of this month marks the end of another fiscal year, a year of great blessings, both spiritually and materially. "Being enriched in everything to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God. Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift" (2 Cor. 9:11, 15).

Gratitude and Praise.

Our hearts grow more tender and are moved with gratitude as we look into the shining faces of the scores of students whom God has moved to come to the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania. We know that your praises will mingle with ours for the privilege of having a part with us in their training, by intercession and gifts. Over three hundred and fifty individual students have enrolled in the day and evening classes during the school year. Many are making application for entrance next September.

Intercession.

Please intercede for us that the strong, active fellowship in the Spirit, in the School and with our many friends, may continue.

Kindly remember our financial needs. Very little has been received this month and we are praying that we may close the year with all bills and allowances paid. Again, many of our former students are preaching and teaching the Gospel in many parts of the earth: United States, Canada, Central America, South America, China, Africa, Korea, India, and the Philippine Islands. Pray for them. Please remember, also, our needs for increased facilities. May the Holy Spirit move us to effectual fervent prayer for the lost and for the faithful instruction of those who have found Him.

Rejoicing with you in the anticipation of that day when our eyes shall behold Him in the enjoyment of His victory for and in us, we are

Yours faithfully,
Bible Institute of Pennsylvania,
John B. Cole,
Eexecutive Secretary.

The Bible Champion

The Bible Champion, the Official Organ of the Bible League of North America, published at Reading, Pa., at $2.00 a year, commends itself as an invaluable magazine to present day Bible students. It is interdenominational. Five Associate, and twenty Contributing Editors assist the Managing Editor. Though scholarly, the editorials and contributions are not above the heads of the average layman.

The Champion holds that the Bible is divinely inspired, its truth invincible, its authority in matters of faith and practice absolute. Since it stands for constantly advancing study of the Bible, with all the means of knowledge available, it contains a great deal of helpful Bible exposition. It believes that the Bible and true science and philosophy are ever in accord. However, it does not believe the Bible can always be made to harmonize with human speculations and unproved hypotheses.

It aims to be a practical, suggestive magazine of religious thought that does not sidestep any of the fundamental doctrines; it never uses camouflage in any of its statements, but is always frank and above board. It says what it means and means what it says.

Dr. T. C. Horton, founder, and for many years Superintendent of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, and former editor of King's Business, and now one of the Associate Editors and an enthusiastic supporter of this magazine, has just issued an appeal to all Christians to come to the support of the Champion and to cooperate with him and the editor to place the Champion on the Library Table of every theological seminary, university, and college, in the states.

And this is his proposition to meet this urgent need—and without cost in money to you. Secure only Two New Subscriptions (you can contribute them if you prefer), and remit to the publisher, Bible Champion, $4.00. He will then be glad to send a third subscription to any institution you may designate. Or, if you have no choice in the matter, he will be glad to choose one for you. Do not overlook offer to send 5 previous numbers free, as a premium to new subscribers, at this time.

The Bible Champion is of great service to the cause of true spiritual religion and deserves support.

There are no free sample copies, but the publisher will be glad to send a copy at half price—10c (regular price 20c).

Traffic cop gets summons

Even he can't get away with it

"DON'T try to put anything over on Nature," is the way a cop would express it. "Sooner or later she'll get you. Give you a ticket and lay you up in a place where you'd rather not be. Even cops can't get away with it. Like everyone else, if they don't pay attention to the warnings they get a summons that lands them in the doctor's office.

"What the doctor advises is Nujol. Says Nujol will regulate you just like you regulate traffic. Keep things from getting in a jam. And the doctor is right. Just ask the healthiest men on the Force. If they need Nujol—with all the exercise they get—what about the fellows that roll by in their cars?

"Just take a tip from me. You may have the best intentions in the world. But everybody gets tied up at times. Nature can't always take care of things without help.

"Our Medical Chief tells me that Nujol isn't a medicine. It contains absolutely nothing in the way of medicine or drugs. It's simply a pure natural substance (perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York), that keeps things functioning at all times as Nature intends them to. Normally. Regularly. It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them), but aids in their removal."

Nature's law O. K.

Start Nujol today. It won't cost you much—not more than the price of some smokes. Worth a try, isn't it?

You'll find Nujol at all drugstores. Sold only in sealed packages. Get some on your way home today.

Deaths

DUNN: Did, at her home, in Richmond, Virginia, March 23, 1929, MARTHA C. SOUTHALL, wife of Reverend Joseph B. Dunn.

MRS. EMELINE VANDEVENTER.

Entered into rest Monday, March 25, 1929, at "Crow's Nest", Berryville, Va., EMELINE MASSIE MORGAN, the widow of the late James Vandeventer and the daughter of Colonel Benjamin and Martha Castleman Morgan, of "Hill and Dale", near Berryville, Va., in the eighty-seventh year of her age. Funeral services were held in Grace Episcopal Church, Berryville, Wednesday afternoon, March 27th.

MISS EMILY FLORENCE FLETCHER.

MISS EMILY FLORENCE FLETCHER entered life eternal Thursday, February 21, 1929, at 1 P. M., in the Northampton Memorial Hospital, on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. She was the daughter of James Henry and Elizabeth Brodwater Fletcher. Miss Fletcher was born in Accomack County, Eastern Shore of Virginia, where she made her home, until after the death of her parents. In 1905 she went to Tacoma, Washington, to live with her brother, John Drummond Fletcher, of the law firm of Fletcher & Ellis. There she entered into the activities of her church, serving as President of the Woman's Auxiliary and a teacher in the Sunday school, and was always found in her usual seat at church service.

She was a member, and held office, in both the D. A. R. and the U. D. C., of which she was a charter member, and the gathering of the Southern women of that organization was a pleasure to her.

Funeral service was held at Emmanuel Church, Jenkins Bridge, conducted by the Rector, Rev. Thomas F. Forbes, and the interment was in the family burying ground near by, a lovely spot amid the tall old pine trees on Holden's Creek.

After the committal service, Mr. Forbes read the hymn ending, "Father, in Thy gracious keeping, leave we now Thy servant sleeping".

It was a beautiful day, bright with sunshine, and so, with the pines singing a requiem over her grave, we left her there, but her memory will long live with those who knew and loved her.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

forty-three years of use it has become the best known of all the buildings in Michigan City. Gradually it has weakened, until at last it has become necessary to tear the old building down. The need of the building was presented to Mrs. Catherine Barker Spaulding by Dr. Earl Ray Hart, rector of the parish, on February 26 and on March 18, less than one month later, the funds for its replacement were arranged for.

The new building will be complete in every detail from marble lobby at the entrance on Sixth Street to electric dishwasher in the kitchen.

The plans for the building are being drawn by Walter Frazier of Chicago. In the basement there will be a Recreation Room or Gymnasium, forty-three by sixty-six feet, locker rooms, showers and rest rooms, seven class rooms, boiler room, coal storage, janitors supply room, and storage room.

On the first floor there will be a lobby with coat and rest rooms for men and women, choir room, offices for rector and secretary, chapel, Guild room with kitchenette, kindergarten, seven class rooms, quilting room, Church School office, and supply room and garage.

The second floor will be an auditorium capable of seating 800 people, a stage with complete equipment, kitchen, lavatories and storage rooms.

On the balcony floor there will be a balcony to the auditorium capable of seating 200. This floor will also have four dressing rooms and a modern picture booth with equipment.

Although the building will be the property of Trinity Parish as was the old building, it is hoped that the community will make use of its facilities. A special board of managers, chosen by the rector and vestry will direct the activities of this building.

Building operations are expected to begin about May 1 and be completed some time in November of this year.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor

Inspiring Missions.

The following account of Bishop Bratton's Mission at Greenwood has been sent by L. W. Rose. Ever since the beginning of Lent, we had been trying to get ready for the Bishop's coming to us on the third of March. The daily services were well attended and special prayers were offered for the success of the Mission. The Daily Commonwealth gave us generously the use of its columns in the important work of publicity and, strange as it may seem to some (not at all strange to those who know him), Mr. J. R. Bingham, a lifelong, big-hearted, Catholic-minded member of the Methodist Church, wrote letters to the press commending the Bishop and invoking the sympathetic cooperation of all who profess and call themselves Christians. He went even further in the same direction. As an apostle of the cause of Church unity, he showed his faith by his works in inviting all the ministers of the city to meet for dinner under his hospitable roof. And, be it noted, at the general roll call, they were there!

On Sunday, the third, there was a well-attended Communion service at 9 A. M. and at 11 o'clock, the Bishop preached a stirring sermon on "The New Era". The local congregation was liberally reenforced by representative members of all the Greenwood churches, as well as by some of our own church people from Winona, Carrollton, Grenada, and other neighboring towns.

In spite of the rainy weather that night the church was well filled to hear the Bishop's message on "The World and Sin". In no uncertain terms, in the plainest possible language, and yet "speaking the truth in love", the preacher described the exceeding sinfulness of Sin. The next morning at 10:30 he gave a lecture on "The Church of the First Ages". The rain came down again that night, but the people were not intimidated and the Bishop was at his best in discoursing upon "The New Man in Christ".

We haven't the space to go into details. Suffice it to say that day by day and night after night the congregations increased and the interest was intensified and the Bishop preached with consuming energy. On the last Sunday there was an overflow at both services. The sermon themes were as follows: "Sin and Repentance"; "The Meaning of the Cross"; "The Christian's Mission as the Revealer of Christ"; "Why Should I Be Religious?" "Thy Kingdom Come"; "What Can I Do For God?" The lecture subjects (in addition to the one already mentioned) were: "The Creed of the Christian"; "The Sacraments"; "The Ministry"; "How We Got the Old Testament"; "How We Got the New Testament," concluding with "The Devotional Use of the Bible." All excellent, all freighted with valuable instruction but, as many thought, the best wine came at the end of the Gospel feast!

On Sunday night eighteen candidates received the "Laying on of Hands", the sort of class that promises well for the life and work of the parish in the years to come. On Monday afternoon the Bishop left for Minter City and our regular Lenten services were resumed.

We feel that we have given but a meagre outline of all that was said and done. In the words of the Psalmist of old: "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." Our tune time. We really needed a revival. The parish has suffered greatly in the last few years by the death of some of our outstanding workers. Naturally there was a feeling of depression. It could hardly be otherwise. So the Bishop's coming "in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ" meant for us all strength and refreshment. And this, as it seems to us, is only a part of the story. The entire community was benefited, as we hoped and prayed that it would be. It was to all intents and purposes a union series of services. At 7:30 A. M., on the tenth, many of our fellow-Christians, who had participated in the services of the Mission came together with us around the Lord's Table to partake of the memorials of "His blessed Passion and precious Death, His mighty Resurrection and glorious Ascension!" It did seem that at such time we could really sing with our lips and believe in our hearts:

"We are not divided,
All one Body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

LOUISIANA.

The Storm.

Included in the Parish Notes of St. James, Alexandria, La., the rector, the Rev. W. S. Slack, gives the following description of a part of the great storm and flood which have been causing such tremendous havoc in the Mississippi Valley:

Nearly the entire day of Thursday, March 21, we had been having rain, and as we were at service that night the floods descended, so that the water stood on a level with the sidewalks all around the church square. Bolton Avtnue was like a mill-race. At 4:20 A. M. Friday the storm burst in its fury, and for a time none knew how serious it might become. I have rarely seen such vivid and continuous a display of lightning. This coupled with the terrific roar of the oncoming storm was to timid very frightening, having in mind the storm of a few years back, though terror of the darkness was added to this last storm. Fortunately the storm lasted only about five minutes, and then the rain in torrents fell and the ground became a sheet of water in a few moments.

It was a marvel that we escaped as we did, the chief damage consisting in the loss of plate-glass and the water damage in homes, except for the trees and shrubbery that were greatly damaged, and in many instances completely destroyed, particularly cedar trees.

Two of the large trees on Winn Street, alongside the rectory were broken and fell alongside the house, doing a very little amount of damage, considering what might have happened. Several other trees, including the clump of fig trees were blown down; the Parish House roof had many shingles blown off and the comb of the roof entirely taken away. Out at the new church, the massive Bedford stone perforated cross on the front gable was blown off its pedestal and in falling to the ground broke a few slates, but was itself broken in several pieces. As this cross must have weighed nearly if not more than a thousand pounds, the wonder is it did not crush in the roof and break more of the slates. We have great cause for thanksgiving that we escaped so lightly in the face of such a display of the powers of the air.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

Children's Corners.

Two such have lately been established in the opposite ends of the diocese.

The Rev. Merrill M. Moore, rector of Trinity Church, Bethlehem, consecrated his Children's Corner in the back part of the church on Mid-Lent Sunday. He had Miss Zettan Gordan, the Educational Director of the Diocese, "preach" the sermon. The corner looks like a real church with the exception of the many appropriate pictures—the best of their kind on the walls, each one teaching an epoch in the life of our Blessed Lord.

The Rev. Glen Beam Walter, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, also dedicated his Children's Corner in Lent. It is very much like like that of Trinity Church, though it was first opened. The parish and the children of the Redeemer almost reverence the Litany Desk. It was Bishop Talbot's Desk which he kept in his room for many, many years, and before it he made many, many petitions to God for his diocese and people as well as for himself His daughter, Mrs. Donaldson, gave it to the Archdeacon to make some use of it. The rector of Sayre begged to have it for his children and there it is with a proper silver plate telling whence it came. The Bishop must rejoice above that such use is made of his sacred Desk.

Leonard Hall Missions.

The Archdeacon has been put in charge of the missions connected with Leonard Hall—the Postulant School—until the new Warden comes. The young men studying for the ministry go out every Sunday to some mission and either hold a service and conduct the Church School or assist the warden. This is good training for the boys and helpful to the diocese.

Lenten Services.

From all parts of the diocese the clergy report well-attended services. There are some of the clergy who have no visitors to preach for them, but select some theme or subject on which they wish to instruct their people in a more connected manner than seems possible at other times. These courses have been very well attended. It seems to be an improvement on the hit or miss sermon of the visitors.

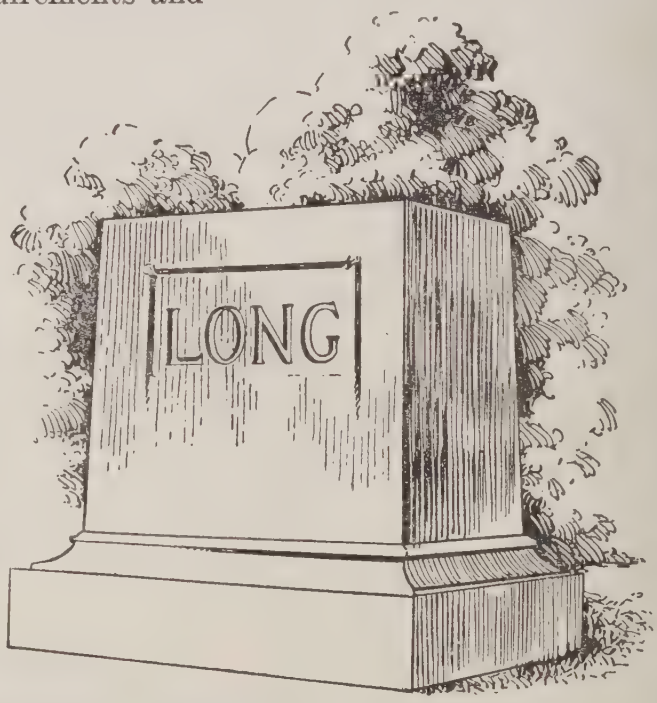
Crystalized Memories

"Man is of few days. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not."



SUCH quotations constantly remind us of the short duration of life. But the memories of our loved ones who have passed on will continue to live in our hearts.

The monuments we select to maintain these memories, should be cut from a stone which will properly carry to many generations to come the messages entrusted to them. This means stone of durability, beauty, contrast and strength. Granite is the only stone which meets such requirements and many granites fail.

Winnsboro Granite

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful, and inscriptions on it the most legible.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below. Write for free descriptive literature.

"HEIRS OF GRACE."

"Grace, 'tis a charming sound,
Harmonious to my ear,
Heaven with the echo shall resound,
And all the earth shall hear.

"Grace first contrived a way
To save rebellious man;
And all the steps that grace display
Which drew the wondrous plan.

"Grace taught my wandering feet
To tread the heavenly road;
And new supplies each hour I meet,
While pressing on to God.

"Grace all the work shall crown,
Through everlasting days;
It lays in heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves the praise."

"We are traveling home to God,
In the way the fathers trod;
They are happy now, and we Soon their happiness shall see.

"Banished once, by sin betrayed, Christ, our Advocate, is made."
"Made like Him, like Him we rise;
Ours the cross, the grave, the skies."

RETURN.

Some day I shall go back again
To where my own things are,
Although the road is very long,
Past moon and sun and star;

I shall pass by the gates of pearl
And saints who sing of God,
And search until I find a street
Edged close with golden rod;

My mother will be waiting there,
Because God understands,
In the gray dress she used to wear,
With sewing in her hands;

And though great saints sit by to learn
The wisdom of her talk,
She will forget them when she hears
My footstep on the walk;

She will spring up and drop her work
And run to welcome me,
And tell me that my room is there
Just as it used to be;

She will not see that I am old
Or that my hair is gray,
But only smile—"My dear, my dear,
How long you seemed away!"

—Margaret Widdemer in the Christian Herald.

FAITH.

The gray buds of the olive broke to bloom;
The lambs He loved played on the green hillside;
Birds sang their happy songs and built their nests—
The day He died.

We only see the horror of the end—
The sobbing friends, the soldier with his spear,
The broken hands, the tired human face—
Death drawing near.

Our little human pity cannot let Us be content that death should take or give,
The while that He, so young, yields up His youth
That we may live.

But birds and lambs and olive trees—perhaps
They sense a thing we mortals cannot see:
That past the night the day that brings Life Always shall be.

—Katherine Burton,
In The Living Church.

SUCCESS OUT OF FAILURE.

Oft have I walked the woodland paths
In sadness, not foreknowing
That underneath the withered leaves
The fairest flowers were growing.

Today the south wind sweeps away
Those wrecks of autumn splendor,
And lo, the starry hosts of spring
Unfolding sweet and tender!

O prophet flowers with lips of bloom,
Whose speech of silent beauty
Fills all the woodland aisles with song,
Ye teach me faith and duty!

Walk life's dark ways, ye seem to say,
In love and hope foreknowing,
That, where man sees but withered leaves,
God sees the fair flowers growing.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The responsibility of tolerance lies with those who have the widest vision. —George Eliot.

The spirit of good will among men rests upon spiritual forces.

Christianity is just one simple and sublime thing. It is eternal life in the midst of time.—Hainack.

"The Easter theme is not the probability, but the certainty of immortality and resurrection; its text is neither philosophy nor science, but "Now Christ is risen from the dead".

With God is the source of all life and light and joy, because He is the source of all love. With Him, therefore, and in the sharing of His great purposes and ends, alone is life.—Henry C. King.

Here is a bit from Livingstone's diary, only a little time before his men found him dead, kneeling by his camp bed: "Wearisome waiting this: and yet the men cannot be here before the middle or end of this month. I have been sorely let and hindered in this journey, but it may have been all for the best. I will trust in Him to whom I commit my way."

It is a healthful exercise to train ourselves to a wise distrust of the senses. How little of certainty they bring us after all! Through the sense of sight we get series of vibrations, but their meaning and message is determined by that which we have within us. A dog sees the paint, but only an artist sees the painting. A sheep may hear the sounds, but only a musician hears the symphony.—Dr. C. F. Wishart.

The citizens of Havre, France, presented Secretary Kellogg with a pen on whicvh was inscribed "Si vis pacem, para pacem" (If you want peace, prepare for peace).

There are burdens we can share with none,
Save God;
And paths remote where we must walk alone,
With God;
For lonely burden and for path apart—
Thank God!
If these but serve to bring the burdened heart
To God.

—Selected.

If we can learn how to control our thoughts by trying to reflect God's thoughts, then our whole life will become a prayer and by degrees the same mind will be in us that was also in Christ Jesus.—E. V. H.

TIDEWATER TALES

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes: "I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co. writes: "This book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo de War' every week."

A prominent attorney in Washington writes: " . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me."

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes: "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond."

CONTRASTS

Two days toward the last of the recent January were notable because of exact contrast. One was dark, gloomy, lowering, the sky like a leaden dome, no glint nor moment of clear, bright light, cold, drizzling rain and wet snow alternating drearily. Every window pane seemed streaked with frozen tracks of tears, the melancholy monotony of the drip from the eaves were ceaseless, fields and roads in the country, sidewalks and pavements in the towns, masses of grimy, chilling slush. Next day the sun rose gloriously, a few gleaming white clouds idling gracefully amid the radiant blue, the air so crisp and clean and life giving that breathing it was luxury.

In the lives of most of us just such contrasts come—times of darkness and gloom and depression and fears; times of ease and peace and comfort and fair prospects when all the ways before us look smooth and pleasant. They come, too, to communities, peoples, nations. The third day of this month was the sixty-fourth anniversary of the surrender and burning of Richmond. Many yet living remember when the principal streets of the city extended by rows of scorched and crumbling walls and littered, ghastly pits where buildings had been. Other Southern cities were equally desolate. A saintly woman ended her "Diary of a Southern Refugee", when she received the news of Appomattox, "My native land, good night!" Amid the murk and horror and ruin she could not foresee, constant as her faith usually was, that the right words were "Good morning," that the South was beginning a new day of splendid recovery and of life more vigorous, finer and more progressive, prosperous and abundant in promise than it ever had known.

Because there is an Almighty, All Wise and All Merciful God to whom we may pray and to whom we may trust, humbly and confidently, for help and we are given souls and minds and may direct and guide our own thought and conduct, responsibility for the use we make of the bleak and threatening and the bright and cloudless days and times is on us distinctly. It is a familiar lesson of nature that continual sunshine and ceaseless storm and cloud are alike and equally destructive of life and growth. Our own lives, the histories we read, what we see all about us and everywhere in the world, tell us the contrasts and changes must come, are necessary to keep the spiritual, divine, element within us active, healthy and fruitful. They give us solemn warning that it is for us to determine whether we shall make both the beautiful and the black days help carry us upward and onward to righteousness and usefulness, or whether we shall waste both.

When the weather is serene and the skies lovely and all goes well with us we forget to be grateful, gabble of gratitude in perfunctory words or, without even pretense of offering thanks, take the blessings and bounties as our lawful and earned dues. We neglect to realize mercies granted us or to appreciate the happiness and peace we have. We exaggerate small troubles and pains to calamities and brood and moan and make ourselves miserable over trivialities. When the real calamities and afflictions come we picture ourselves to ourselves as innocent victims of cruel and unjust persecution by Providence and fate.

We may learn much from the animals. Aesop, master student of human nature and keen philosopher of life, used them to teach wisdom and common sense. Now and then we find a dog which submits without whimper to the harshest lashing. We know he is a thoroughbred and vastly the superior of the mongrel cur, skulking, cowering and yelping under the slightest punishment. It is not impious nor presumptuous to hope and believe that the Creator respects and especially loves His creature who meets suffering, defeat and disaster with the supreme, splendid, courage of patient submission, humility and resignation, gathering new strength, higher purpose, clearer and purer faith.

So many of us refuse to accept and absorb and assimilate the sunshine while it is with us, fail to understand happiness and prosperity and peace, until with sorrow and bitterness we recall them after they have passed, forgetting that we allowed our own folly and self imposed blindness and obduracy to deprive us of the joy and glory of them.

Gloom and leaden skies and pelting sorrows and cares, slow, weary, wearing, heart sickening longing and waiting for fulfillment of ambitions and earthly hope, so often seeing them fade as the dimness of the stormy winter day fades into the sombre blackness of the winter night, try and search and test us. In such test it is for us to choose whether, with Omnipotent help, we shall be staunch or craven, whether we shall attain noble conquests or yield ignobly to weakness, selfishness and temptation to treason. We can, if we will, take into our hearts the sunshine and beauty vouchsafed to us, store our hearts full of them, to be carried with us to the end, gladdening, irradiating, cheering our lives and all the atmosphere about us through all the contrasts and contacts and varying conditions that may come. Many of us are so fortunate as to know people —some of them very poor and, as the world sees, unfortunate people—who have so filled their hearts with light and beauty that their presence is benediction, their examples inspiration.

Each of us may falter and fail at the time of test, in the day of silent but fierce battle, misuse and disregard blessings and benefits. With help of God and the teachings of the Saviour before us we may, if we will it so, gather from the densest gloom glorious victories. We may take to ourselves, make living part of us, the nourishing warmth of the sunlight, to be shared and bestowed wherever we go until we are summoned hence. Under angry and dismal clouds, amid the sparkling splendor of calm, unclouded, untroubled, days, our souls may rise and stretch their wings and mount heavenward until they find perfect peace and endless rest beyond the clouds, where storms and sorrows can not be.

EARLIEST OF CHURCH ASSEMBLAGES IN AMERICA

Alfred B. Williams

(Note.—This series of articles has been appearing in The Southern Churchman from time to time. For those who are following these conventions as a consecutive story we would say that the account of the 1838 Convention was in the issue of February 2, 1929.)

1841—New York, October 6-19. The New York American published occasional paragraphs of five to thirty lines mentioning this Convention and other newspapers of the city sometimes copied them. Sixteen bishops and two hundred clerical and lay delegates were reported attending. Delaware was reported organized as a diocese and was admitted, as was Missouri. The Rev. Dr. Alfred Lee was chosen Bishop of Delaware and was consecrated in St. Paul's Church October 12. Missionary bishops for Texas and Africa were recommended. The Rev. Dr. Vaughan, of New York, was chosen missionary bishop for Texas, and the Rev. N. H. Cobb, of Virginia, for Western Africa, but neither seems to have qualified.

1844—Philadelphia, October 2-22. Nineteen bishops present, three absent and twenty-seven dioceses represented by clergy and twenty-three by laymen. This Convention was five months after desperate anti-Roman Catholic riots in Philadelphia, in which much property of the Roman Church had been destroyed by irresponsible armed mobs. While the Convention was sitting one of the rioters, a boy of nineteen, was being tried for murder and his trial was given far more space in the local newspapers than was accorded the Convention. He was convicted and given heavy prison sentence. Nevertheless, this Convention was given far more newspaper notice and respect than any of its predecessors. The Public Ledger, as shown by existing files, honored it with place on the first page and space sometimes as much as a column, the reports evidently supplied by the secretary of the House of Clergy and Laymen and followed closely the style of reports of congress and State legislatures. A test vote showed one hundred and one clerical and sixty-seven lay delegates. Most of the longest debates were on matters which appear trivial now and several times the report notes "much confusion", probably explaining a much-discussed but finally negatived suggestion that future conventions be held in public halls, because of the irreverent demeanor of some delegates. The Oxford movement and tracts of Bishop Newman were debated hotly and compromise resolutions regarding them were adopted by the clergy, voting by dioceses, fifteen for to eight against, and four divided, and by the laity, eleven for, nine against, and three divided. The Rev. Dr. Carleton Chase, for New Hampshire; the Rev. Dr. Nicholas D. Cobbs, for Alabama, and the Rev. Dr. Cicero Stephen Hawks, for Missouri, were chosen bishops and were consecrated in Christ Church, October 20. The Rev. Geo. W. Freeman was elected bishop for Arkansas and the Southwest, as missionary bishop. He was consecrated the twenty-sixth, with two foreign missionary bishops. A committee was appointed to reorganize the General Theological Seminary. Resolutions on the death of Bishop Moore, of Virginia, were adopted.

The meeting of the Convention was in St. Andrew's Church, where the Board of Missions also sat, in another room. The attack on the "Oxford Movement" and tracts was led by C. G. Memminger, of South Carolina; Judge Berrien, of Georgia, and Mr. MacFarland, of Virginia, and resisted, to various degrees, by the Rev. J. M. Forbes and the Rev. Dr. Tyng, of New York, and the Rev. Paul Trapier, of South Carolina.

It was decided that Bishop Chase, Illinois, missionary bishop, should be paid $1,000 a year and that $1,000 formerly paid to him and returned by him on a decision that the payment was unconstitutional, be restored to him. The expenses of the Convention were stated at $1,200, for which the funds in hand, from the dioceses, were short $350. Two days were taken in discussion of the case of the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Hawks, accused of failure to meet properly debts contracted in attempts to conduct a Church School in Flushing, New York, the question drifting presently to alleged ritualistic practices by Dr. Hawks at his school. This came to such a fine point as whether a candle at the altar in the school chapel had been lighted before or after daylight, to give needed light, or as a feature of the service. Dr. Hawks had been chosen as Bishop of Mississippi and the controversy was on his confirmation for that work. Practically, he was acquitted of wrongdoing, but he never was consecrated. He was elected again Bishop of Mississippi and afterward Bishop of Rhode Island, but declined both. So far as contemporary reports indicate, he resolved to give his life to payment of debts incurred in the ambitious endeavor to found a great Church School at Flushing in distinctly ritualistic surroundings and conditions. He was the most eloquent man of his time, in or out of the pulpit, and at the 1844 convention his opponents confessed themselves so entranced with his speech that they felt unfit to reach decision on his case.

The Rev. Alexander Glennee, rector of All Soul's Parish, Waccamaw, South Carolina, was recommended as missionary bishop to West Africa, but there is no record of his election or consecration.

How To Use the Bible

When in sorrow, read John 14.
When men fail you, read Psalm 27.
When you have sinned, read Psalm 51.
When you worry, read Matthew 6:19-34.
Before Church service, read Psalm 84.
When you are in danger, read Psalm 91.
When you have the blues, read Psalm 34.
When God seems far away, read Psalm 139.
When you are discouraged, read Isaiah 40.
If you want to be fruitful, read John 15.
When doubts come upon you, try John 7:17.
When you are lonely or fearful, read Psalm 23.
When you forget your blessings, read Psalm 103.
For Jesus' idea of a Christian, read Matthew 5.
For James' idea of religion, read James 1:19:27.
When your faith needs stirring, read Hebrews 11.
When you feel down and out, read Romans 8:31-39.
When you want courage for your task, read Joshua 1.
When the world seems bigger than God, read Psalm 90.
When you want rest and peace, read Matthew 11:35-30.
When you want Christian assurance, read Romans 8: 1-30.
For Paul's secret of happiness, read Colossians 3:12-17.
When you leave home for labor or travel, read Psalm 121.
When you grow bitter or critical, read 1 Corinthians 13.
When your prayers grow narrow or selfish, read Psalm 67.
For Paul's idea of Christianity, read 2 Corinthians 5: 15-19.
For Paul's rules on how to get along with men, read Romans 12.
When you think of investments and returns, read Mark 10:17-31.
For a great invitation and a great opportunity, read Isaiah 55.
For Jesus' idea of prayer, read Luke 11:1-13; Matthew 6:5-15.
For the Prophet's picture of worship that counts, read Isaiah 58:1-12.
For the Prophet's idea of religion, read Isaiah 1:10-18; Micah 6:6-8.
Why not follow Psalm 119-11 and hide some of these in your memory?

THE INSPIRED BOOK

Ava Louise Wright

IN a midsummer issue of Harper's Magazine two or three years ago, Mr. James Harvey Robinson, the author of that much-quoted book, "The Mind in the Making", in an article called "Is Darwinism Dead" made some striking statements about those Christians who profess to believe in an Inspired Bible, and who thus refuse to believe in the animal origin of man. The statements, though made so long ago, stuck in the writer's mind like a burr for the misconception they contained about what intelligent Christians really believe of their Book; and they gave rise to the humorous thought that just as I was apt to get myself in trouble with scientists in talking about what I didn't know a very great deal of, so other people, and very intelligent ones, too, who talk about the Bible. But Mr. Robinson is not the only person who holds these misconceptions; many orthodox Christians, who profess to believe in the Inspired Bible, cannot answer his accusations and are accused before them. It is to them I write.

I here quote a paragraph from Mr. Robinson's article: "Those who set the Bible over against any particular scientific theory or discovery ordinarily forget how many things in the Bible they themselves do not believe. Had Mr. Bryan listened to Thomas Aquinas, in the thirteenth century, he would have been assured that the Bible proved that he, as a heretic, should be sent to the stake. Had he lived in the sixteenth century he would have agreed with Luther that the Bible established the necessity of burning witches, taught that disease was caused by devils, and that the sun revolved around the earth. Had he been a Southern clergyman before the Civil War, he could have justified Negro slavery on the ground that Ham was condemned to serve his brethren. As one reviews these facts, the Bible arguments lose their force."

Now, apart from the century or the persons who held these beliefs—whether Thomas Aquinas or Luther or Southern clergymen before the Civil War—the point that Mr. Robinson makes is that they got their sanctions from the Bible, as they did, and because we don't hold these beliefs any more, as we don't, slavery, or burning witches or heretics, or that disease is caused by devils, or that the sun moves round the earth, we no longer believe in that part of the Bible which sanctions them. It sounds like a valid accusation, but let us see.

All the sanctions for any of the things which Mr. Robinson has cited are to be found in the Old Testament: slavery was an accepted institution and was legislated for; witches were put to death, though by stoning rather than burning; Joshua did say the sun stood still; and no doubt heretics were harshly dealt with under Old Testament law, at least we know blasphemers were stoned. But nowhere in the New Testament have any of these things a sanction. And that Thomas Aquinas or Martin Luther or anybody else took their laws and standards from the Old Testament rather than the New is not an accusation against the Bible but against their own ignorance. For the Bible itself lays down in unmistakble terms the relationship between the Old Testament and the New and puts Christians squarely under New Testament teachings.

Is it possible that Christians do not know this? When the first Christian Council at Jerusalem recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Acts decided the question so clearly? When the two letters to the Galatians and the Hebrews are treatises on this question? Nine times the writer to the Hebrews uses the word "better" of the New Testament in its relation to the Old. He says this "In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old. But that which is becoming old and waxeth aged is nigh unto vanishing away." But in saying that the old was nigh unto vanishing away, the writer testified to the fact that it was a reality, and everywhere affirms that it was God-given to His ancient people.

And not only so, but Our Lord Himself said He came to fulfil the law and the prophets. An following this assertion, in the Sermon on the Mount, He took specific ancient laws, deepened some, and replaced others with new. He showed that both murder and adultery, so far as the deed was concerned, could both be done in the depths of the spirit, which is to this day a startling truth to consider. But the ancient law of justice, the "eye for the eye", he replaced with the new law of love and mercy. When men brought to Him an adulteress, whom Moses said to stone, their hope of catching Him in a violation of Old Testament law, was that knowing Him, they felt reasonably certain that He wouldn't stone anybody. And He didn't. But His supreme wisdom was shown in that He made men their own judges.

We Christians ought to know these things and to draw from them the certain truths they were meant to teach: that the New is greater and better than the Old, and to which the Old pointed and in which it is fulfilled. Otherwise we shall find ourselves in the curious position of a growing sect of Christendom which has changed the Christian Sunday back to the more ancient Jewish Sabbaths or seventh day. The early Christians, on the very principle of the new and greater thing which we have been enunciating, spontaneously memorialized the day of resurrection rather than the seventh day of rest. But Christians who keep with us the Christian Sunday and try to impose on it the Mosaic laws concerning the Sabbath, find themselves in equal difficulty. The writer has known one, who when his child was sick and needed to go to the doctor's office for treatment on Sunday, and who felt that riding on a street car was breaking the ancient command of "no work" for the car employees, called the doctor and asked him to send his automobile for the child. Strange, ludicrous inconsistency! But rather pitiful than otherwise. For these misconceptions of truth so bind and torture life. And the people who hold them are so sincerely trying to do right. Surely better to follow a false ideal than none at all. There is a possibility that, like Saul of Tarsus, the light will shine round about them.

But because we don't believe in Old Testament laws and standards as our own, is Mr. Robinson right when he says there is so much of the Bible that we don't believe? Do we not believe in the laws of our childhood and youth because they are no longer binding on us?

Yes, we still believe in the Old Testament as a truthful record of men and God's dealings with them. It is significant that our Lord speaks of the Holy Spirit as "the Spirit of Truth". And this conception of a Spirit of Truth speaking truly, answers many questions as to what we mean by inspiration. He was the guiding power in the minds and souls of men who were sensitive to his promptings, for truth concerning men and nations—but all in relationship to God. "Why, your Book is not inspired," some one says, "part of it is just an historical record. Men don't have to be inspired to write history." True, but does one notice that this is a different historical record from any ever written? God is in it all, His hand moving through. There is a great philosophy of history to be found in the Old Testament. "Why your Book is not inspired," says another, "it deals with such uninspired doings of men. There are disgusting things written in the Old Testament." Yes, quite fearlessly the Bible records some of the grossest sins of men, but does one notice this; they didn't get by with them; God is there and chastisement and pain. David says of himself after he had sinned, "All the waves and billows of thy wrath have gone over me".

"Why your Book is not inspired," says Mr. Robinson, "it is not scientifically accurate; the Old Testament suggests that the sun moved round the earth. "Where is the Spirit of Truth there?"

Now, I have no doubt that many of the writers of the Old Testament held these notions of scientific things, if they thought about them at all; but nowhere do they commit themselves on the subject. When Joshua said that the sun stood still, he spoke exactly as I must believe even the scientific men of our day would speak if they saw the same phenomenon. We still speak in the language of actual appearance rather than scientific fact. We say the sun rises and sets and moves across the heavens. It sounds as if the sun were an active moving body. And artists, too, who draw parallel lines as running together that they may record an actual truth to their eyes, run squarely against the scientific fact that parallel lines never meet. We must use this current language to be intellgible; which is all that Joshua did.

"Ah," the scientists says, "we have you now. Granted that Joshua recorded what he saw, the thing is untrue because it is impossible.

Well, let us admit that here is the crux of the fight between science and the Bible, and those of us who believe in its inspiration; we believe in miracles, and science doesn't. Some scientists do because they are men of faith. It is faith, not science, that accounts for miracles.

Miracles run contrary to natural law, and natural law is the province of science. But at the heart of Christianity are two miracles: the birth of a Child and the resurrection of a Man. Science gives assent to neither one. No scientific textbook considers either the possibility of probability of such things. Science deals with the natural, demonstrable way that children come into being, and come by countless millions. It is not science, but faith in God, that accounts for the One who came differently. Science sees with its own eyes what happens to the lifeless human body, and can demonstrate the elements of which it is composed and into which it is resolved. It is faith which sees a Risen Christ.

No, science is not at loggerheads with the Bible only on the theory of how man came into being originally. Faith alone can account for the miracles of the Old Testament and the New; and it alone can wait to have the laws on which they rest demonstrated; for it is evident in all the universe that God has ever worked on the principles of law.

Let us ask ourselves if we believe that the Spirit of Truth wrote the Book.

SECOND SUNDAY AFTER EASTER

Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty God, who hast given Thine only Son, to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin, and also an ensample of godly life; Give us grace that we may always most thankfully receive that His inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavor ourselves to follow the blessed steps of His most holy life, through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THIS Collect "collects" from both the Epistle and Gospel for the day. In the Epistle St. Peter sets Christ before us as both "an ensample of godly life, and as "a sacrifice for sin", in that, "He bare our sins in His own body on the tree"; and St. John in the Gospel sets Jesus before us as "the Good Shepherd who giveth His life for the sheep".

Observe the petition, "that we may always most thankfully receive that His inestimable benefit," viz.: the sacrifice made by God the Father in giving up His only Son to the death of the cross for us, and by God the Son, who willingly laid down His life for us. Great benefits and blessings constantly received seem after a while somewhat to deaden the feelings of gratitude that at first spring up so spontaneously and freely in our hearts. And if such benefits and blessings, long continued, suddenly cease, we are apt to feel a certain resentment toward the benefactor, as though we had a sort of prescriptive right to the things we have enjoyed so long, and feel ourselves defrauded in the loss of them.

So it is with the many blessings bestowed upon us by our Heavenly Father, especially material blessings, e. g., bodily health, sufficiency of food and clothing, an income large enough to supply all necessaries and some luxuries, even many, abundant harvests, etc. If some or all of them are taken from us, as from Job, it is not easy to accept it in the spirit of that patriarch, and say: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job 1:21). And most difficult of all is it to be sufficiently thankful for "that His inestimable benefit", Christ's sacrifice for sin, and the example of His godly life. So this prayer for grace to be most thankful should be often used, and along with it an earnest effort cheerfully to accomplish those things which God commands, in doing all such good works as He has "prepared for us to walk in". Failure to do these works of love and mercy, especially to those that Jesus called, "the least of these my brethren" (Matt. 25:40), has much to do with that deadening of the feeling of gratitude for blessings, spoken of above.

THE Epistle for Second Sunday after Easter is 1 Peter 2:19-25.

From this Epistle the collect takes its ascription, as we noted above; for in it St. Peter holds up Christ before us, "both a sacrifice for sin, and also an ensample of godly life", saying that "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye (we) should follow His steps", and "who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree".

St. Peter, in setting Christ before us as "example", tells us how He, "when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, threatened not; but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously."

Doubtless Peter refers here to the last scene in the life of Jesus, so vividly foretold by the Prophet Isaiah, who, in the person of the Messiah, says (Isa. 50:5-7): "I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting; for the Lord God will help me; therefore I shall not be confounded; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." And again in that wonderful fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, the prophet says of the Messiah, the Lord of glory: "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted; but He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed." Jesus met with reviling more or less all through His three years of public ministry; but it culminated in the few hours of life left Him after His arrest in the Garden of Gethsemane. What the prophet had seen by inspiration of the Holy Spirit more than seven centuries before (about B. C. 7112) actually came to pass in Jerusalem on that first Maundy Thursday night and the Good Friday following. Let us remember by whose stripes we are healed; for we were "as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Guardian of your (our) souls".

HE Gospel for this Second Sunday after Easter is St. John 10:11-16.

The words of Jesus at the eleventh verse, "I am the good Shepherd," have given a beautiful name to this Sunday; "Le Dimanche du Bon Pasteur" (the Sunday of the Good Shepherd).

The last clause in our Epistle in the R. V. reads: "And there shall be one flock" (not "fold", as in the A. V.). "Flock is undoubtedly the correct translation of the Greek word used by John here. In the clause just before the word "fold" appears, and is the right translation of another Greek word.

"This Epistle dwells on three traits of character, especially, in Jesus, the Good Shepherd: First, His self-devotion; second, His intimacy with His flock; third, His pastoral care of them."

This figure of speech, representing us as sheep, and God as our Shepherd, is common in the Bible. A verse of the One Hundred and Nineteenth Psalm says: "I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost," and then continues with a prayer which I wish were in our general confession: "O seek Thy servant (s)."

This prayer emphasizes the great and most important truth. our inability to get back into the fold from which we have strayed, unless the Good Shepherd seek us and bring us back. This is taught in the parable of "The Lost Sheep" (Luke 15:4-7), where this same Good Shepherd leaves the Ninety and Nine and goes after "that which is lost, until He finds it". Surely very wonderful is the Good Shepherd's pastoral care of His sheep.

Fully to appreciate the pastoral care and self-devotion of our Good Shepherd, we must remember that in those primitive times the shepherd was exposed to dangers unknown to shepherds in our times and country. Jesus in the Epistle speaks of "the hireling whose own the sheep are not", seeing the wolf coming, and leaving the sheep to be caught and scattered by this enemy of the fold; but there were worse enemies to be feared by the good shepherd, as we see from David, when he tells Saul: "Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock, and I went out after him and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by His beard and smote him and slew him." And observe, this is no boasting on the part of the gallant youth; for he goes on to give God the praise and glory of the victory: "the Lord that delivereth me out of the paw of the lion and out of the paw of the bear, He will deliver me out of the hand of this Phillistine." In closing, let me ask you to observe the intimacy of the Good Shepherd with His flock; for Jesus says: "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine." I was a shepherd once myself. 'Twas my father's custom to give to his boys the care of sheep and and hogs and other stock on the farm to feed them and count them and salt them; and I remember how hard it was to know the individual sheep, as hard as to distinguish Chinamen; but the Good Shepherd knows all His sheep, innumerable and countless as they are; and there is not a lamb of the millions He has taken out of the misery of this sinful world in their innocence, not yet able to "discern between their right hand and their left hand" (Jonah 4:11), whom He does not know, and would surely, like David, if need were, go out after it and smite lion or bear for its rescue, even that great adversary and depredator on the fold, who St. Peter tells us (1 Peter 5:8): "As a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." And in our unhappy divisions here in the Church militant on earth it is sweet to read the last words of our Gospel, in which the Good Shepherd assures us that for the great Church triumphant "there shall be one fold and one Shepherd".

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

PSALMS.

"I will praise Thee with my whole heart."
"I will worship toward Thy holy temple."
"I will sing a new song unto Thee, O God."
"Upon a psaltery of ten strings will I sing praises unto Thee" (Ps. 138:1, 2; 144:9 R. V.).

In this wonderful Hebrew Hymn Book, used in the worship of Jehovah by Israel, "all that is within" the heart of man is called upon to praise the Lord (Ps. 103:1).

Here is sounded, in major or minor keys, every possible chord on the psaltery of ten strings, for here is sung every experience of the human heart to the praise of God because of His ways with man.

Subject.

The theme of these one hundred and fifty lyrics is the experience of God's people Israel individually and nationally.

God's ways are the subject of the Pentateuch, God's acts, or dealings, with Israel is the subject of the Historical books, and the result of God dealing with Israel according to His ways is the book of "Praises", setting forth all the experiences of His people.

Through these songs we trace the fierce conflict between the Righteous One, Christ, and the ungodly one, Satan, until Christ becomes more than conqueror through His death and resurrection (Ps. 22:16).

But this awful conflict was also waged and won in the heart of every believing Israelite, so that this book of worship ends in a grand and glorious paean of praise (Ps. 144-159).

We do well to remember that the Psalms were written in the light of Moses' face, not the face of Christ; that is, they were written under the law, not under the gospel, therefore the imprecatory Psalms.

Christ, the "Blessed Man" of the Psalms is revealed therein as Son of God (2:7); Son of Man (8:4); Creator (104); Redeemer (22:1-21); High Priest (110); Judge (9:8); Kings (45).

These divinely inspired songs are grouped in five books, as marked by their peculiar endings (1-41; 42-72; 73-89; 90-106; 107-150).

Book I. 1-41. God's people in the place of testing and trial, but the name "Jehovah" or LORD, the covenant making and covenant keeping God of redemption, is mentioned 270 times, and "God", the Creator, not 50 times (34:1-4).

Book II. 42-72. Israel out of the land, sold into captivity for their sins. The name "Jehovah" occurs here about 30 times, and "God" more than 200 times (44:12).

Promised restoration, with Christ as King ruling in righteousness and grace the hope of the believing remnant (45, 72).

Book III. 73-89. God's unchanging goodness to Israel from the beginning of their history, but it was little understood and easily forgotten because His way is in the sanctuary (77:13). "Jehovah" used about 50 times, and "God" about 60 times.

Book IV. 90-106. Jehovah coming to judge and reign over Israel and the nations in righteousness and peace (96:13;97:1-5).

"Jehovah" named more than 100 times, and "God" about 20 times.

Book V. 107-150. Jehovah perfecting that which concerns His people Israel, by blessing and making them a blessing (138, 145).

"Jehovah" is found more than 230 times, "God" about 30 times.

WHAT IS HAPPENING AT CALVARY CHURCH IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Amelia S. Reynolds, a Member of the Staff

"CHECKING" AND "LETTING DOWN".

A CLERYMAN nearing middle age said at a Thursday night meeting not long ago that he was impressed by two things: the spiritual maturity of the young people who spoke, and the attitude of the whole crowd in seeking perfection of life.

These two things come from a common cause. At Calvary we are not satisfied with ourselves and we don't intend to leave other people in that unenviable position. The first great definite surrender of our wills to the will of God is the starting point, beyond that lie a thousand different and separate surrenders and through these come maturity and growth. We often do not know what is the sin that is hindering us, and there the loving help of other people comes in.

We are told that Mary "kept all these things in her heart". Christ had pointed out to her at the temple in Jerusalem His obligation to do His Father's business. I suppose that she did not understand very well His rebuke but there was no rebellion in her. Now, in the group with which I am working we call this process one of "checking", raising a question mark when we feel one of us has been unguided. Mary may have wanted Christ with her; His place was somewhere else. She was ready to accept and obey God's will.

I know of no place where surrender is more difficult for me than those moments when I must check some one else, or they must check me. But those are the moments of growth.

In a group of women which I was leading a short time ago, we were thinking and talking about surrender and I asked that we each one in turn go back to the time we had made our first complete surrender and share how it happened. In the group was Polly, a very attractive young woman. She spoke easily and well at first, of the surrendered life; then more haltingly, she tried to tell us what had happened to her. It was clear to me that nothing had happened; that the group had taken her for granted and in turn she had so taken herself. She finally said rather doubtfully: "I suppose I have surrendered," and I replied that supposition wasn't possible. All that was involved was a question of face; she either had or she hadn't. Difficult tears came to her eyes. Immediately two older women rushed in where no angel would have trod.

"My dear," said one, "you are a lovely person; of course you have surrendered." Another said:

"Don't worry about it. It will be all right."

This is what we call "letting down".

She was a lovely person and worrying wouldn't do any good: so much was true, the rest was untrue. After the meeting was over Polly arranged an interview with one of our staff for the next day, and it was then that she gave her life and her will to God.

It was pleasant to say to her what the two older women said. It is always pleasant to say the comforting thing, but they didn't help her. By saying this and nothing else, they had let her down. But my job wasn't finished—after the meeting I talked to these two women and told them what they had tried to do to Polly. She needed to go further, they had tried to content her with the place where she stood. If there had been in me any self-seeking, any sense of superiority, any critical spirit. anything but the longing to be used of Christ, nothing would have been accomplished. Before I could go to either of them, I had to be sure that in me was no self-will, no desire to do a job myself. A time like that is a time for prayer.

I am often rebellious. Not long ago a member of the Fellowship came to me and "checked" me by saying that he felt I was parochial-minded: that my concern was for Calvary Church rather than for the whole world. I denied it with heat:

"In separating the sheep from the goats," I said, "I don't put Episcopalians in one place and members of all other denominations in another!"

I elaborately explained that I had interviews with Presbyterians and Methodists! That I went to non-sectarian religious conferences: that Calvary was a piece of the world! That I was on the staff of Calvary so I had to work there! That somebody had to work in local situations. On and on indefinitely I went. He said nothing and I felt triumphant. Who was parochial minded? Not I! But I couldn't forget. He was a man who had gone much further spiritually than I. Presently instead of trying to defend myself against his "check" I began wondering why he had given it. What was there in me that had made him give it? And why hadn't he argued back? Times like that are hard going. It came to me that I was more interested in working through Calvary Church than in anything else. Suppose that God wanted me to work elsewhere? Was I ready? I wasn't. I had to surrender my love of work in that local situation, and be ready from the bottom of my heart to work anywhere for Him, before release came. It seems to be His will for me to work at Calvary. I am thankful, but if a call comes to work elsewhere I am ready And I am only ready because a member of the group was willing to face my rebellious unsurrender and to tell me the truth, to check me.

A young girl, very modern, very gay and pretty, asked an older woman if she might see her alone for a few minutes that afternoon. The older woman, much flattened, kept the appointment. The girl, uncomfortable, on the defensive, blurted out:

"I thought that I ought to tell you that you annoy me excessively!" Now, this is not the kind of being that we expect from the young!

There was nothing for it, the older woman laughed at her own discomfiture.

"I am sorry, Nancy," she said. "What are we going to do about it?"

The laughter was so sincere that the girl laughed with her, and then they talked. The last thing that the older woman wanted was to annoy any one. It came out that she had ignored the girl on various occasions in the stupid way that many of us do when we don't want to be in the way of the young. So much for her part, which she frankly acknowledged. The girl quickly came back with and where she was at fault. She was accustomed to being made much of at home and among her girl friends. She was suffering from hurt pride. They grew to like each other in that interview. On any other basis what most of us are taught to consider courteous reticence, would have kept the girl silent. In the fellowship of Calvary, real and happy relations are possible between all kinds of people and between young and old. The girl had not diagnosed the reason for her feeling, and in doing so with her new friend they found together that they were both at fault. This kind of frankness, or what we call "checking", is one of the priceless rewards of really being willing to be free of any sin as soon as it is discovered, in this case, age, self-consciousness on the one side, pride on the other. Under different circumstances they would have gone on being uncomfortable when they were together. They would never have known each other. As it was, we both went a step forward that day. The first reaction of the reader may be that the girl was rude. We have to take the younger generation where we find them, or we will never get anywhere with them. If we do that, we shortly find ourselves with them in very good places, indeed. Standing on our dignity doesn't get us of the older generation very far, and if we really have dignity, we needn't worry about it. It will defend itself.

The Rev. F. N. D. Buchman defines sin as anything that gets between us and another person, or between us and God. The feelings that these two people had for each other were sin, for annoyance and self-consciousness separated them from each other, and that involves the brotherhood of man.

A young married woman in the group appeared one day in a becoming but very striking hat. She is a beautiful creature, she knows it and plays up to it. One of the men asked her if she was willing to surrender her conspicuous clothes.

"There are people I couldn't send you to to help in that hat," he told her. She came to me and I "let her down".

"It's a fascinating hat," I said, "and I'd give anything to be able to wear it." She wasn't satisfied.

"Why did he say that?" she asked. Then presently:, "I do think too much of my appearance." A silence. "I love to have people notice me." Silence. "I hate it if they don't." Finally: "Oh, darn, I'll never wear that hat again!"

She is as beautiful as ever she was and quite as well dressed, even if she doesn't hit you in the eye when she first appears. Thanks to that "check", she has put her clothes where they belong, into the back of her attention instead of into the front of it. Now she can be sent anywhere, to rich and poor, liberal and conservative, for she creates her own impression instead of letting a hat or a gown do it for her.

This may seem small talk, but such seemingly small things get between us and people and so between us and God. We have to uproot small sins as well as great.

At first I could not see the value of checking. I thought it officious and self-satisfied. Where it is officious and self-satisfied it is not of God. Where it is done in love and only that we may leave behind us something that hinders us, then it is of God, and I must ponder it in my heart.

Book Reviews

FRANCIS ASBURY:: Founder of American Methodism and Unofficial Minister of State: By William Larkin Duren, of the North Georgia Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Cloth. Illustrated. Pp. 237, with appendices and index. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York. Price, $3.

Asbury came to America as a young Methodist preacher shortly before the Revolution, and when Americans turned against British rule it was natural that they should develop a strong prejudice also against the Episcopal Church as the Established Church of the oppressive country, and follow with ready will the leadership of such a zealous evangelist in breaking the religious no less than the political ties with the old country. Though the founder of Methodism, the Rev. John Wesley, never left the Church of England and opposed the schism until his death, yet the inevitable development came in England as it had come in America, but the Wesleyans in England have been far behind the Methodists of America in numerical strength and influence.

While this book is written primarily for the edification of Methodists and from the background of traditional Methodism, yet it is an interesting biography for the general reader as well. E. L. W.

CARDINAL IDEAS OF JEREMIAH: By Charles E. Jefferson. Cloth. Pp. 214, with 100 Questions for Bible Classes. The Macmillan Company, New York, publishers. Price, $2.

This series of addresses attempts to present the Prophet Jeremiah and his message so that their meaning will be effective to men of today. "The Christian Church," says Dr. Jefferson, "is today in lamentable need of the special help which the Hebrew prophets are able to give."

THE NEW MID-WEEK SERVICE: By Edmund E. Prescott. Cloth. Pp. 118, and Bibliography. Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn., Publishers. Price, $1.25.

A small book full of suggestive ideas for city or country churches along social and educational lines. While dealing with the mid-week service of the Methodist Church, there are many good suggestions for all sorts of activities suitable for any church. The Church Forum is a splendid idea and there are some admirable programs and outlines for Bible study. E. L. W.

ILLUSTRATIONS FROM MYTHOLOGY: By William Edward Biederwolf. Glad Tidings Publishing Company, Fort Wayne, Ind.

This book will be welcomed by busy ministers and Christian workers who will find it a valuable compendium of mythological illustration. Not only has the author gathered the best of these old stories that have come down from antiquity, but he has given the heart of the story without wearisome details, but with a lucid brevity and yet with a telling pointedness that makes the illustration forcible. The style is clear and there is a terseness and deftness in the presentation of the subject that especially appeals.

It is splendidly indexed with an alphabetical list of a wide range of subjects, 191 in all, covering duties, habits, and great doctrines of the Bible.

In addition to its excellent typographical arrangement the author has linked the subjects up with very apt Scripture quotations, and an index of these Scripture references is given at the back of the book.

These illustrations will prove helpful window lights to many a sermon and add to its effectiveness. Ministers and Christian workers will find it a valuable addition to their library. P. W. R.

THE PILGRIMAGE OF BUDDHISM: By James B. Pratt. The Macmillan Company. $3.

Perhaps the chief value of this work of 750 pages is its careful and sympathetic presentation, based on personal acquaintance with monks and laymen, with temples and worship, of what Buddhism means to representative living Buddhists in all the Buddhist lands, namely, Ceylon, Burma, Siam, Cambodia, China, Korea and Japan.

For the past thirty years Dr. Pratt has been an interested student of Buddhism. His numerous visits to the Orient have been made for the sole purpose of getting acquainted with Buddhism and Hinduism at first hand. The result is this volume which is quite successful in giving a synthetic view of Buddhism. The author has tried to grasp the situation of Buddhism as it is lived today as a whole. He shows the organic unity of its life and growth and does not fail in convincing us of the organic identity of the Buddhism of contemporary Japan with that which originated nearly twenty-five hundred years ago in India.

The author does not attempt a recitation of the various facts with scholarly exactness and leave the reader at the end wondering how intelligent and spiritual men and women of our day could really be Buddhists. He shows us Buddhism as it is lived in specific places and tries to make it plausible. His effort is to make the reader arrive at a somewhat sympathetic understanding of how it feels to be a Buddhist. R. R. C., Jr.

THE MASTER: By W. R. Bowie. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

In contemplating this book it is quite evident that the author has given his readers a Character which is splendidly human and but slightly divine. As the Character moves through the book, as the author says, he sees him "so fully human that among those same forces by which all lives are shaped he shaped his own". In this estimate of his own labors it is not difficult to discover how he comes to his conclusions as the character moves through the book.

The narratives of the Virgin Birth are discounted, and considered more as the lyric effort to account for history than as being history itself, which "begins not in Bethdehem but in Nazareth. It is 'tradition,' adoration like a prologue spoken in the high rhapsody of the Church's interpretation", by no means historical in character.

Thus discarding the Gospel's way of accounting for the union of the two Natures in one in the Virgin Birth, there is a note of anxiety as the author realizes that necessity is upon him to suggest and supply some other plan which may take its place in the thought and heart of the world. Descriptive words and phrases are sought here and there, but as none are used the second time, it is evident that the quest is disturbing. The author finds himself unable eventually to do better than this, "In transfigured moments of his imagination he beheld a new meaning for Messiah. And in that mystery of his soul's awareness, into which no analysis can follow (black ours), he felt himself to be God's chosen Son through whom the message of the highest should be expressed." And so "the news of John's appearance on Jordan . . . . came to the ears of Jesus like a bell striking the decisive hour". Adopts a mystery, not to be analyzed, in place of one discarded, which has filled the need of the ages these many years. Here we seem to meet the poet in the author, as we shall see again, which seems to justify his apologist who says he is more poet than theologian.

But the Character moves on in the book and having removed the Virgin Birth, the chief difficulty, other difficulties in the way of the author's purpose are boldly, though gently, brushed aside. The Commendatory voices at Baptism and other times are minimized or nullified. This is illustrated in the poetic treatment of the Transfiguration as the movement goes on. "The disciples looked and they never forget what they beheld. There was a light upon his face that made it seem (sic) transfigured. It shone there in the darkness as when the moon is risen" (What a shallow description), cloak about him seemed (sic) to glisten like white flame. Then a cloud drifted over the peak of the mountain. For a moment they seemed (sic) left alone and they said it was as though the voice of God spoke to them out of the dimness. 'This is my beloved Son.' The mist blew by and there again was Jesus—Jesus with something tremendous in his eyes!" A poetical explanation in pleasing language but which can hardly be found satisfying.

This reminds us of the July political orator who soared aloft to such high heights that he did not know how to get down, so he quickly wound up his speech by saying that the bird of Liberty soared aloft and fell and broke his neck.

The treatment of the miracles is not consistent in that some are apparently accepted while others are rejected, unless the reason is found in the fact that the healing miracles —the ones usually accepted, keep the movement in the realms of humanity in that healing miracles are performed by men today as then. The admission of the healing miracles, therefore, keep the movement in proper channels. But the author's estimate of Miracles not of this nature may be found in his treatment of the feeding of the five thousand. Hear him: "When all is said and done, there will always be an element of the unexplained about this account of the feeding of the multitude. . . . He first took all the food the disciples had—five loaves and two fishes—and blessed that, and used it; and then his 'contagious confidence' drew forth from somewhere enough food more to satisfy the hunger of the whole obedient group." To believe which one is compelled to exercise more faith than is necessary to believe the Bible account in the old orthodox way. We don't care for Barmacide feasts. They set very lightly on our empty stomachs.

And thus "the Character moves on through the book" outward and away from orthodox ways to a purpose and a goal all the author's own. The New Testament is shredded of its miracles; the ways and formalations of the Prayer Book are swept away with the sacred hymnology of the church-ages in accumulating—and made a thing of naught, while the earnest believer in things as they were and are is left aghast.

We cannot believe that with all the genial, gentle, amiable qualities which the author has devoted to his Character, that this is our Saviour of the world which stilled the anxious cry of the woman of Samaria, attracting others to Him, as she went exclaiming, "Is not this the Christ?" nor that this is He who stayed Peter in his purpose to go back to the world, and through penitence and prayer, got him ready to preach his great sermon on the day of Pentecost; nor can it be the Christ that has down the ages gone into the hearts and lives of men to remake them, nor can it be the Christ if there is any balm in Gilead who is still the cry of a troubled world today. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

On page 90 of Dr. Russell Bowie's book we find that he refers to our Lord and Saviour of the World as "God's nearest Son". Think of it! and compare Dr. Bowie's description with our great Church Creed:

> "God of God, Light of Light, Very God of very God; Begotten, not made; Being of one substance with the Father; by whom all things were made: Who for us men and for our salvation came down Heaven. And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary."

Bowie's description sounds to us like "nearest" puerile profanity.

In our opinion, any one who writes such a book as "The Master" is far more fit to be a minister in the Unitarian Church than to occupy the position of minister or leader in the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

This book of Dr. Bowie's seems to us to be "elaborately useless and ingenious unprofitable", if not dangerous, in spite of the fact that it is replete with artistic verbosity, but conspicuous by omitting the vital credal principles of our Church.

We are reminded of Shakespeare's statement:

> In law, what plea so sainted and corrupt
> But seasoned with a gracious voice
> Obscures the show of evil? In religion
> What damned error but some sober brow
> Will bless it and approve it with a text."

We can readily believe that this book, "The Master", was written by the same man who issued the statement recently to the effect that our Apostles' and Nicene Creeds were not very vital to religion, but should be considered as "poetic expressions of religious emotion", which would permit us to be led into a maze of ambiguous religious beliefs whose end is destruction.

Our Apostles' and Nicene Creeds give us an accurate description of our Master Jesus Christ, and we advise strongly against any believer wasting his time reading this book called "The Master", published by the Rev. Russell Bowie, apparently for his own amusement and profit. "Hinc haec lacryma."

We strongly commend to the study of Rev. Russell Bowie that great old hymn:

"Lord, forever at Thy side
Let my place and portion be:
Strip me of the robe of pride,
Clothe me with humility.

"Meekly may my soul receive,
All Thy Spirit hath revealed;
Thou hast spoken, I believe,
Though the oracle be sealed."

"Humble as a little child,
Weaned from the mother's breast,
By no subtleties beguiled,
On Thy faithful Word I rest.

"Israel now and ever more,
In the Lord Jehovah trust;
Him, in all His ways, adore,
Wise, and wonderful, and just."

The True Story of a Shut-In

E. C. A. Blackford.

In going to see Queen Victoria's favorite palace on the Isle of Wight, one passes a lowly cottage where, in the latter part of the Eighteenth Century, there lived the daughter of a dairyman, an humble maiden whose life became strangely connected with the great and good Queen.

The girl had little education and was employed as lady's maid in one of the first families of England. In this position she became converted and filled with a longing desire to help others to know and love Christ.

It seemed a hopeless task, for not only was she of obscure station, but her health gave way, and as a victim of tuberculosis, she had to give up her situation, and go back to her father's house, there being much confined to her room for the rest of her life.

She had few neighbors, and could only pray for her friends, as she did most earnestly. She learned that a new rector had been appointed to her parish, who was a stranger to her, but after many prayers she wrote him a note, ungrammatical, ill-spelled, showing want of education in every line, but full of earnest Christian faith, begging him to rouse his people to a nobler life.

With all its peculiarities, it was a striking letter, going straight from her heart to his.

He promptly called on her, talked with her and even asked her advice, encouraging her to write again—which she soon did. So a contact was established between the highborn, gifted Cambridge graduate, the Rev. Legh Richmond, and his lowly parishioner. She wrote to him many times, and became an inspiration to him. After her death he took all of her notes which he had carefully preserved, corrected, and edited them, and sent them forth as a tract—telling their story. They formed the celebrated book, "The Dairyman's Daughter", of which before 1849 four million copies, translated into nineteen languages had been given to the world. No one can estimate the blessing they have been in many lands.

Mr. Richmond wrote several well-known and helpful tracts, but this was the beginning of his work in that time.

In course of time he became chaplain to the Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, and no doubt he had a powerful influence over the young girl—destined to become Queen of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and Empress of India—on whose dominion the sun never set.

Pray, shut-in sisters, is the Lord's arm shortened that He cannot save, or His ear heavy that He cannot hear?

Bishop Freeman, Washington, D. C.—"When we come to study fairly and without bias the attitude of the Church today, what do we find? We discover the loss of definite teaching. For a generation the Church has been in a process of retreating from one position to another, until it is difficult to know what is reasonable, sound, or logical in its stand today on any question of conduct or belief." (Bishop Freeman sees the fulfillment of St. Paul's words of warning: "Evil men and impostors shall be multiplied, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3:13.)—Life and Light.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

AN APPEAL.

Mr. Editor:

Through the courtesy of your columns, may I make an Appeal for Funds for the completion at Oban, Scotland, of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine.

For more than fifty years it has been a cherished hope to realize in this historic diocese a completed cathedral church. The sum of $150,000 is required and this amount we must secure this summer. No appeal has been made since Armistice.

Contributions may be sent to Mary Alice Cisco, Authorized Collector of Funds in America, Farmers Loan and Trust Company, 475 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

(Mrs. G. H.) Mary Alice Cisco.

PROTESTANT.

Mr. Editor:

Enclosed please find my check for $3.00 for one year's subscription The Southern Churchman. I cannot express to you what a help and comfort your stand for Protestantism has been to me, for I was beginning to think I was the only Protestant left in the Church, and as I once said to our rector: "It is not a bit easy to be a Protestant." As soon as I read the articles in your valued paper I immediately sent my dollar and joined The Protestant Episcopal Church League. I think that is the name. My friends who do not like all the Romish practices that have been introduced, do not want to make themselves disagreeable, so they merely stay away from Church, and are not really Protestants.

I hope that you will continue the good work that you have begun and keep at it till our people are convinced that something must be done to stem the tide of Anglo-Catholicism, which threatens to turn our beloved Church into the Church of Rome.

INTINCTION.

Mr. Editor:

Is it not ridiculous and an unseemly use of language, for the minister to say to the communicants holding the wafer ready to dip in wine—"Eat this", when they are not expected to eat them, and especially "drink this" when there is nothing to drink?

A rector who acknowledges Intinction was defeated by two votes, still continues its use. Is this loyal?

"Criticus."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by the Rev. J. W. Ware, of Orange, Va.:

> "Ye . . . took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in Heaven a better and an enduring substance."—Hebrews 10:34.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well very near us?

Italy Presents Gift to Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

In the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City on Sunday afternoon, April 7, at 4 o'clock, Charge d'Affaires, Count Marchetti, presented Bishop Manning in the name of the Royal Italian Government through Premier Mussolini two very beautiful silver candelabra as a gift from Italy to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

In concluding his presentation address, Count Marchetti said:

"The beauty and nobility of this institution are highly valued, not only in this great country, but also abroad. And this is why the Italian Government—though it is the Government of a people catholic in creed, in sentiment and in tradition—has desired to send to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine this gift which represents its tribute and at the same time a token of its appreciation of the work of spiritual assistance which this institution has set before itself and is so nobly accomplishing."

Bishop Manning, accepting the gift in behalf of the Cathedral authorities, and of all concerned, expressed most grateful and heartfelt thanks to His Majesty the King of Italy, to the Royal Italian Government, and to the Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs His Excellency Benito Mussolini.

Referring to the candelabra the Bishop said:

"They will speak always of the fellowship in spirit between Italy and our own land and will tell of that day for which we pray when the broken unity of Christ's Church shall be restored and all Christians shall be visibly joined together in one great family of God."

The great Cathedral being erected in New York has now received eleven gifts from the Governments and representatives of other nations. Bishop Manning said that he believed that no other Cathedral in history has ever received such a succession of gifts expressing the spirit of world brotherhood.

75th Anniversary to Be Celebrated at Sewanee.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the University of the South, which occurs in 1932, will be fittingly observed in June of that year. The Vice-Chancellor and faculty of the University are now engaged in formulating preliminary plans for the celebration.

By 1932 the University expects to have two new dormitories completed and the plans for the greater Sewanee, called for by its Expansion Fund program, well under way. A special history of Sewanee will be compiled covering the growth of the University in all its phases from its foundation up to the present. An alumni reunion will be one of the main features of the celebration.

Dr. Finney hopes to make this observance one of the greatest events in the history of the University, portraying, as it will, the consummation of the unceasing sacrifice and devotion which alone has made Sewanee possible and placed the University where it is today.

The results of the mid-year examinations in the College at Sewanee show an average of 77.74 for the whole student body, with 5 per cent of the students averaging 90 and over.

The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop-elect of Lexington, will preach the commencement sermon at Sewanee on June 9. As Bishop of Lexington, Dr. Abbott will be ex-officio a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of the South.

Communion Hymn.

Mrs. Thomas Fletcher Opie, wife of the rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, N. C., has written the words and music of the very lovely Communion Hymn, which appears below. The hymn has been used at Communion service in the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C. On this occasion the chimes played it over twice before service and a choir of forty men and women sang it. It has also been used at services in the First Presbyterian Church of Asheville, N. C., the First Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and many smaller churches.

The hymn is soon to be published by G. Schirmer, of New York City.

Communion Hymn.

Mary Pickens Opie.

Hungry and thirsty,
Lord, we come to Thee,
Here lowly kneeling
Thy sacred feast before.
Strengthen our spirits
With Thy food divine,
As now Thou feeds't us
With the bread and wine.

Come to us, Saviour,
In this holy hour,
Shed Thou upon us
All Thy wondrous love,
That we may ever
Dwell within Thy light,
And come before Thee
Stainless, pure, and white.

Jesus, our Saviour,
Look with loving eye,
As from our hearts
We make this humble cry,
Give of Thyself,
Dear Lord, that we may be Filled with Thy grace
Throughout eternity. Amen.

School of Recreational Leadership.

R. B. Eleazer.

Blue Ridge Association Initiates Effort to Meet Long Felt Need: In this age of the movies, jazz and the pocket-flask, there is perhaps greater need than ever before for a widespread program of wholesome directive recreation. Parents have been especially conscious of this need for the recreational life of their children, and the churches are now beginning to take serious note of it. Religious workers with young people are coming to see that the only means of dealing effectively with the recreation question is by substituting something good for that which is questionable or admittedly bad.

But how to do it! Most parents throw up their hands in despair and admit that they do not know, while the young people go their own way, sometimes by the easy road. Practically no parent and very few religious and social workers have any special training in this field.

A notable effort to meet this need is to be made next summer at Blue Ridge, N. C., which for many years has been one of the great conference centers of the South. Beginning July 18, there will be conducted a School of Recreational Leadership, giving courses in boys' work, girls' club work, Sunday-school activities, Scout leadership, indoor and outdoor play, nature study, and, indeed, almost everything, either general or special, which a worker with young people would need. Thus each one taking the courses will have opportunity for whatever specialized training he may desire. Among those who have been engaged to teach classes are Prof. W. L. Stone, Dr. R. E. Baber, Dr. J. L. Kester, Miss Ruth Coble, Prof. A. B. Miles and others, each a past master of his special field.

Beginning July 18, the school will cover a three weeks' period, and if the demand justifies, it will be repeated during the three weeks beginning August 9. Any individual interested, or any church, club, or other agency which needs the services of a worker trained in this field, would do well to write for particulars to the executive of the school, Dr. W. D. Weatherford, whose present address is Y. M. C. A. Graduate School, Nashville, Tenn. It is believed that individuals and groups will wish to take advantage of this opportunity and that the new school from the outset will make an important contribution to the social and religious life of the South.

Interest in St. Luke's, Tokyo, Spreading.

The Church throughout the country is keenly interested in the campaign, now in full swing, for St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan.

The progress of the fund (as of March 23) is as follows:

Toward Construction (the $2,656,500 fund):

Cash and definitely listed pledges	$745,019.28
Unofficially reported	12,000.00
Total for construction	$757,019.28

Toward Endowment of College of Nursing:

From the Rockefeller Foundation	$400,000.00
From the Charles M. Hall Estate	100,000.00
Total for endowment	$500,000.00

Sixty committees of women now are working for St. Luke's fund in various Episcopal dioceses the country over.

Meetings in the interest of the campaign have been held recently in Boston, Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco, Newark, Poughkeepsie, New York City.

Los Angeles and vicinity proposes to raise $200,000 for the St. Luke's International Hospital fund, James R. Page, Los Angeles banker and acting chairman of the committee for that city, announced at the conclusion of a dinner at the Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles, March 11, at which Dr. Rudolf Bolling Teusler, Director of the Hospital, Honorable Charles MacVeagh, American Ambassador to Japan, and Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, spoke in behalf of the campaign to obtain funds for the rebuilding of the Hospital and training school in Tokyo. One hundred and twenty-five persons, leaders in the social and philanthropic life of Southern California, were present at the dinner-gathering.

At the conclusion of his plea to make provision for the continuance and development of the work that Dr. Teusler has carried on for twenty-seven years Ambassador MacVeagh made this declaration: "To have the gift of this Hospital come to Japan from the American people would be the most fruitful gesture towards world peace that has been made in our time. The peace of the Pacific rests upon the friendship of the United States and Japan. Once peace between thees two great nations is firmly established, the peace of every other nation whose lands are lapped by the Pacific will be assured. And with the peace of the Pacific assured we may confidently look forward to what we have long dreamed of, the nations of the world at peace with one another."

Dr. Pritchett, who as one of the chief administrators of the great Carnegie benefactions has been responsible for the distribution of millions to public causes, urged the American people to take advantage of this opportunity to reaffirm their long-standing friendship for the Japanese, and to remove in some measure the hurt that the Oriental exclusion act had inflicted on the feelings of the Japanese. "Our present state of medical knowledge and the efficiency of our American hospitals and clinics," he declared, "is the heritage of the past thousand years, for which we are greatly indebted to Paris, Berlin and Vienna. It is highly appropriate that we repay this debt in some small measure by passing on to the people of the Orient the fruits of our medical heritage."

Dr. Mabel E. Elliott, head of the children's department at St. Luke's Hospital, who arrived from Tokyo on March 2, was given an ovation when she was introduced by Chairman Page.

The hosts were Henry H. Robinson, Harry Chandler, James R. Page, James R. Martin, G. W. H. Allen, Edward A. Dickson, John McWilliams, Jr., Henry W. O'Melveny, Russell H. Ballard, Andrew M. Chaffey, G. G. Young, H. I. Stuart, Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens and William F. Knight. Twenty-two prominent women acted as patronesses.

Scientists Win in War on Leprosy.

Most inconspicuously published in the quarterly survey of The Church Overseas is this cheering note about leprosy:

After more than ten years' investigation British scientists have found that hydnocarpus oil—the dried fruit of hydnocarpus tree—is a certain cure for leprosy. It is hoped that in ten years' time the disease will be almost extinct.

Sir Leonard Rogers, honorary secretary of the British Empire Leprosy Relief Association, said recently that there are four million lepers in the world. "At least 416,000 are in the British Empire, and there are 150,000 in our African possessions alone. Already vastly increased numbers are coming for the new treatment, and in Uganda 2,000 are expected to be under supervision by the end of the year. Hydnocarpus trees are being planted in all suitable countries, so that ample supplies of the cure will be at hand. Doses can be had for a year for half-a-crown. . . . In Nigeria a year ago there were 350 patients; now there are 840. Our Association is supplying hut accommodation and drugs to the missionaries. Ten years ago the great difficulty was that before effective treatment we could do nothing but the wretched segregation, which meant imprisonment for life, with the result that we got only advanced cases. Now that we can treat them as out-patients they are coming forward in the early stages."

Another report from the Association says:

"Excellent work is being done, especially by missionary doctors, in some of the places we visited. The most pressing need is for the establishment of treatment centres, where lepers will voluntarily settle for a time. Such centres already exist in the Southern Sudan, in Uganda, in Kenya, in Tanganyika, in Zanzibar, and, most of all, in Nyasaland. Good work is also being done in Rhodesia. Government medical officers are keenly alive to the hopefulness of the situation, and if funds are available for government and missionary work there is no reason why many thousands more lepers should not be treated within the next year or two."

An Associated Press dispatch from Carville, La., where is located the National Leprosarium of the United States, says:

"Science is taking the terror out of one of the world's most dreaded diseases.

"Regarded since the dawn of history as a living death, leprosy apparently is being brought within the list of curable maladies, and the leper is being given firm ground for hope.

" 'Unclean!' the cry of fear, horror and revulsion has come down the centuries. The fear has always been exaggerated to a greater or less degree, but has been none the less real in the minds of victims and those about them.

"Within the last few weeks eight patients have been released on probation from the National Leprosarium here, sent back to their homes no longer a menace to the public health. Since the institution was established by the United States Public Health Service seven years ago thirty-seven have been released, and only one has suffered a relapse. Those released recently had been under treatment from two to seven years, and about 400 others remain.

Many of the bacteriological, chemical, pathological and clinical studies which have contributed to the advances made in treatment of the disease in recent years have been conducted by health service workers in Hawaii. Their principal achievement has been the development of chemical derivatives from chaulmoogra oil, obtained from an Oriental tree, which have increased its effectiveness in combatting the leprosy germ. The treatment was rather painful, however, until the specialists here developed a method of administering the injections with a local anesthetic.

"The scientific studies also have established that the disease is communicated only by direct and usually prolonged contact with the victim. Casual contact, the investigation found, is not so dangerous as it has been regarded, and they suspect that nasal secretions probably have most to do with transmission of the germs.

"These germs, in form and appearance, are extremely difficulty to distinguish from those of tuberculosis, another plague which has beset mankind—and to a much greater extent—as far back as history goes, and has begun to yield to the advances of science only in recent years. The resources of a skilled bacteriologist are required to identify them.

"Statistical studies conducted in connection with the scientific work indicate that the number of cases of leprosy in the United States exceeds 1,000. The disease, it has been learned, is most likely to appear in tropical climates, although a number of cases have been recorded in Norway."

Convocation of Missionary District of Mexico.

The sixteenth Convocation of the Missionary District of Mexico opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion in Christ Church Cathedral on January 30, at ten o'clock. Bishop Frank W. Creighton officiated and was assisted by the Rev. Messrs. J. L. Perez, J. A. Carrion, Dean F. W. Golden-Howes and Prof. Antonio Romero. Prayers and sermon were by the Rev. Josue Miranda. There were seventeen clergy and twenty-three lay representatives present.

After this service the Bishop called the meeting to order. The various report and appointments were made, including the appointment of an official interpreter, and Bishop Creighton made his annual report and address.

The Bishop characterized the year past as one of activity and advancement.

During the year twenty-two candidates were confirmed.

On June 3, 1928, the Bishop said he had the pleasure and privilege of instituting the Rev. Frederick W. Golden-Howes as rector of Christ Church.

The Mexican Government has granted permission to the Bishop to minister to the English-speaking colony at Guadalajarce, a great step forward in cementing the bonds of international amity.

Two devoted missionaries, the Rev. Eugene F. Bigler and the Rev. Harry O. Nash, resigned during the year to accept calls in the United States and have been greatly missed. Though four deacons were to be advanced to the priesthood the following day and were to be assigned immediate posts, Bishop Creighton said that the missionary work was faced with a dearth of candidates which was distressing. He made an appeal for men, but he said they must be "God chosen", consecrated men on fire with desire for souls for Christ. He said that standards in Missionary Districts are notoriously low.

Under education, the Bishop said that all the schools were progressing under efficient direction. Thanks were due the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., and Miss Frances Withers for their successful efforts in procuring for Hoolsen School the Children's Offerings of $33,000 at the General Convention. Since religious instruction cannot be a part of the curriculum efforts must be continued to raise funds to build a chapel for this purpose.

Under Social Service was reported the successful efforts of Mrs. Earl Harding and a group of New York ladies in raising the funds for an infirmary on Hooker School grounds.

The Bishop announced his intention of appointing a Commission to cooperate with similar commissions for Latin American dioceses to begin at once the translation of the New Books of Common Prayer adopted by the General Convention last October. The Bishop said that when this revised book is received it and no other liturgy must be used throughout the District.

Concluding his address the Bishop emphasized, as was emphasized in the Pastoral Letter, that Unity must be the keynote of Christendom if the world is ever to be won for Christ.

His final plea was for consecrated efforts towards evangelization.

"Let our watchword this year be: 'More souls for Christ'. More lives purified and strengthened and made honest and loving by His life as we transmit it. Then and then only can we expect that blessing on the Church of Mexico (which we have too long refused to accept), which will make us strong in numbers, in Spirit, in determination and in ability to do that which God has given us to do for the people of this great Nation. God grant that we may deserve His blessing."

Hobart College Adopts Resolution On the Passing of Bishop Brent.

On Easter Sunday the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Hobart College met at the residence of Mr. Thomas Hillhouse Chew, Geneva, N. Y., to take action with regard to the great loss suffered by the College through the death of Bishop Charles H. Brent, who for ten years had been Chancellor and President of the Board of Trustees of the College and under whose direction every important step in the recent history of the College has been taken, including the selection for President of Dr. Murray Bartlett, who had been associated with Bishop Brent in the Philippines.

The policies of the College during the past ten years have been carried out with the counsel and under the leadership of Bishop Brent. He was particularly interested in the relationship of Hobart College to the Episcopal Church and was instrumental in associating the five Colleges affiliated with the Church in an organization with common policies and aims. Since the formation of the Church Executive Association in 1920 he has been its president.

In spite of the very marked progress made since the Centennial Fund Campaign of 1921-22, a period in which the College has been without deficits and has made material increase in faculty salaries, Bishop Brent was not satisfied with the situation at Hobart. He insisted that a determined effort should be made to place Hobart upon a permanent foundation with the highest academic and physical efficiency. At his continued insistence and under his leadership, the Trustees decided to enter upon the campaign to provide an adequate physical plant and to accumulate additional endowment. Before leaving for Europe he presided at a meeting of Hobart Trustees and Alumni held in Washington during the General Convention, at which he strongly urged the undertaking of a fund-raising appeal. The effort was immediately inaugurated, and has been in process of organization since. Bishop Brent had been appointed Honorary Chairman of the campaign. Up to two weeks ago he had been in constant touch with the movement and had written letters to those who had been selected as chairmen.

Under these circumstances the Bishop's sudden death presented a critical situation and the meeting of the Executive Committee at the home of Mr. Chew was therefore called.

After viewing the question from all angles, and after consultation with the Rt. Rev. David Lincoln Ferris, Bishop Brent's successor, the following resolution was drawn up and approved:

Whereas: The Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, Chancellor of Hobart College, was chiefly instrumental in the initiation last fall of the Hobart College Building and Endowment Fund, and

Whereas: Letters received from him in the last days of his life and after his death showed his deep interest in this movement; be it

Resolved: That we, the Executive Committee of the Trustees of Hobart College, while acknowledging the irreparable loss of Bishop Brent's leadership, after mature deliberation, do decide that we are under a sacred obligation to carry forward the movement to a successful conclusion in accord with the expressed wishes of Bishop Brent and to make the Endowment Fund a memorial to our beloved Chancellor.

LAYING UP TROUBLE FOR DECEMBER.

Allowing one full month lee-way for the collection and remittance of money there should be in the hands of the National Treasurer by April 1 one-sixth of the budget quotas or at least one-sixth of what has been promised.

Actual receipts are less than one half the minimum due on the basis of the quota and only 60 per cent on the basis of pledges. Receipts are $53,574 behind last year. Only four dioceses on the honor list as compared with thirteen on April 1 of last year. Thirty dioceses and districts have sent in nothing or only small individual gifts.

Trouble for the closing days of December is starting right here and now.

Let us urge Diocesan Treasurers everywhere to do these reasonable things:

1. Remit the full proportion of money due the National Council on all collections.

2. Urge Parish Treasurers to remit to you monthly all missionary money.

3. Urge all Parishes to take steps now to keep all pledges paid up to date. Remember that an unpaid pledge is often a reason for staying away from services.

Faithfully yours,
LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

Recent Trends in the Girls' Friendly Society as Seen in its Conferences.

The National Conference for Leaders of the Girls' Friendly Society, now meeting in Kansas City, Mo., brings out certain very interesting developments in that organization. In the sessions of this conference the leaders are considering how to re-interpret the age-old principles for which the Church stands in such a way as to meet the needs of girls today.

Because the Girls' Friendly Society includes girls of all ages, people generally do not realize that two-thirds of the members are under eighteen years of ago. Consequently, in this, as well as in other conferences, the leaders are working on programs that will interest the typical alert girl of today who is used to self-government and to self-dependence in her school. They are trying to find what activities appeal to all girls, as the branches are growing increasingly democratic with girls of every sort of home background represented. They are studying recent trends in education, both religious and secular, and are utilizing the findings of modern psychology in their attempt to understand girls better.

Another important development within the G. F. S. is the fact that, giving its hearty approval to those organizations in which boys and girls meet together, it is re-defining its own contribution to girls.

That it has a distinct contribution is evidenced by the fact that many G. F. S. trained girls are leaders in such organizations and that the girls themselves enjoy a group in which they can meet separately from the boys to discuss their personal problems and to carry on certain activities of interest to girls only. In all this, the girls are assuming more and more of the actual planning and conducting of their meetings, while the leaders are gaing a new conception of their function.

The Kansas City Conference for leaders will be followed by one for the girls themselves. From June 28 to July 5, about seventy-five girls from all parts of the country will meet together with adult leaders in one of the G. F. S. vacation houses at Delaware, N. J. The program for this conference was planned by a committee of girls, representing fourteen dioceses, meeting in November, 1928. For those girls who cannot go to the national conference there will be similar conferences in the dioceses of Los Angeles, Michigan, New York, Maryland, Olympia, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

Another trend in the G. F. S., as shown by the discussion at these conferences, is the movement toward self-support. Heretofore the society has been on the budget of the Church. Its appropriation is, however, being gradually decreased and within the next few years it hopes to become practically independent financially. The problem now confronting both leaders and members is that of bridging over the first year or two of decreased funds from the National Church.

A Delightful Gift.

One of the most delightful gifts ever made to the Church's mission work is recorded by Bishop Norris, of North China, in the quarterly paper of the North China and Shantung Mission. It refers to the Chinese Church's own "home mission field" in the Province of Shensi, where Sian is the probable see city of the future.

About eighteen months ago, when the Dean of Westminster was still Dean of York, and they were planning the thirteen hundredth anniversary of York Minster, it was very happily suggested that part of the thank offering should be sent to some corner of the mission field, if possible, to build a church on the site for a future Minster, if it could not be itself a Minster.

I really do not know from whom the suggestion originally came, but the Dean wrote to me and asked whether I could suggest a destination for this gift. I replied that the Nestorian Tablet at Sian commemorated the first arrival of the Nestorian Mission in that place approximately thirteen hundred years ago. It seemed peculiarly appropriate, therefore, that such a gift from York, part of their thank offering for thirteen hundred years of diocesan life, should go to another place where Christianity first came thirteen hundred years ago. Moreover the infant Mission of our Church in Sian lacks a church building.

There was, of course, an obstacle. The Sian Mission from the first has been manned and supported only by Chinese Churchmen, and I myself have been the protagonist in keeping this rule inviolate. However, I was prepared to be inconsistent, and the Chinese president of our Board of Missions welcomed the idea with enthusiasm.. It was naturally rather disappointing when I was given to understand that there would be nothing available beyond the sum of £25, which I have already received from our good friend, the Rev. A. G. Braund, of Goodmanham, the offertory at the special service held at Goodmanham. Imagine then my joy to hear from Canon Hicks that the Dean and Chapter of York have paid £463. 10s. 5d. for this object. With the £25 from Goodmanham, we ought to realize $5,000, and that should be sufficient to build a little church large enough for our present needs. Shensi has been for four years a missionary district of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, but is still waiting for its missionary bishop. However, I hope that we shall not have to wait many years longer, and it will be delightful to think that his first cathedral, however temporary in its nature, has been built by the generosity of the Diocese of York under such unique conditions.

Another historical coincidence, though a slight one, is the fact that Bishop Norris' letter was dated last November 14, the one hundred and forty-fourth anniversary of the consecration of the first bishop of the American Church, Dr. Seabury. Bishop Roots, President of the Chinese Synod, continues to be the only other bishop whose consecration took place on that day of the year.

Great Congregations for Good Friday and Easter Services.

There is no doubt that certain customs of the Church are gaining favor amongst those who formerly decried them. On Good Friday, at services under the auspices of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches, three large congregations were gathered in Albee's Theatre, as the culmination of a series of mid-day Lenten services under the same auspices. At eight in the morning, an hour selected experimentally for the benefit of working people who might not be able to come at mid-day, several hundred came, and the experiment was considered very successful. At ten-thirty the Rev. Dr. Cadman spoke to an assembly that filled the theatre, and another capacity crowd was present at mid-day when the Rev. Dr. Miller of the Central Methodist Church spoke. At the "Easter Dawn" services under the same auspices, which was held at the Prospect Park Plaza, eight thousand people assembled, though the morning was gray and foggy. Recalling that even a few years ago few Protestant churches observed Good Friday at all, and Easter was but little more than an ordinary Sunday, the following editorial in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle of Easter Monday, seems justified: "Those who think that devotionalism is waning in many of the churches should take note of the attendance at Lenten services in Brooklyn and elsewhere. Worshippers not only thronged the churches, but taxed to the utmost the capacity of theatre auditoriums, which were pressed into service because they provided more room than the church edifices. Whatever may be the varying views of the Lenten season among denominations, the recognition of it as a time for spiritual examination, worship and uplift is undoubtedly growing. And today the Easter festival that marks the ending of Lent, will show, as always, churches packed with people. That the occasion inspired all of these alike need not be claimed and cannot be proved. But that Easter, like Lent, has come to have a continually broadening significance, cannot well be denied, no matter what conflicting opinions may be held, even among Christians, as to the story of the Resurrection."

Dinner in Honor Bishop Larned.

A dinner to Bishop Larned will be tendered by the Church Club of the Diocese on Tuesday evening, April 23, at the Leverich Towers Hotel. Speakers, beside Bishop Larned, will be Bishops Stires, Bishop Lloyd, and Mr. Mortimer W. Byers. The Hon. Stephen Callaghan, Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, will be toastmaster. The Church Club lately elected new officers for the coming year. They are: Wm. S. M. Edlin, President; the Hon. Stephen Callaghan, Mr. Howard D. Joost, Hon. Wm. J. Tully and Mr. Clarence H. Wandel, Vice-Presidents; Christopher Joost, Treasurer, and Varnum S. Henderson, Secretary. New trustees of the Club are: Wm. F. Leggo, E. A. Marschalk, Hon. Chas. H. Fuller, Dr. C. R. Love, Dr. Wm. S. Hubbard, and Frank Gulden.

Financial Progress.

Financial progress in a down-town Brooklyn Parish is by no means impossible. The Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, in a recent issue of its parish paper, says: "In 1924 the Redeemer had 300 communicants, no endowment, and a mortgage of $18,500. In 1929, we have 242 communicants, no debt and an endowment of $41,029." Such financial advance in the face of a waning constituency and a changing neighborhood certainly reflects credit on the rector, the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Ph. D., and his faithful people.

MARYLAND.

Rt Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

The New St. George's Church, Dundalk, has been completed and first services were held on Easter Day. Work has formerly been carried on at the Chapel of the Incarnation, St. Helena, but with the opening of the new church the 100 per cent increase in all the activities is very encouraging. The Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley is rector.

A New Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been organized at the Church of the Messiah. The Rev. Jas. Archibald Mitchell is rector.

Bishop Murray celebrated the Holy Communion at the Pro-Cathedral, Baltimore, on Easter Morning and confirmed a class of eighteen there in the afternoon. He preached at Memorial Church at the eleven o'clock service.

On Easter Monday he made his annual visit to the United States Naval Academy and confirmed a class of sixteen.

Massing of the Colors Service.

Notices have been sent to the several patriotic organizations in Washington, asking that they participate in the second annual "Massing of the Colors Service", to be held in Washington Cathedral Open Air Amphitheatre on Sunday, May 26. The announcement and invitations are sent out by the District of Columbia Chapter of the Military Order of the World War. One of the military bands will furnish instrumental music and the Cathedral choir, augmented by other choirs, will lead the singing. A feature of the occasion will be the procession of massed colors, headed by Victory Post Drum Corps of the American Legion. All organizations intending to participate are asked to signify such intentions by notifying Captain George F. Unmacht, Chairman of the Committee in charge, 3510 Munitions Building.

Dr. Phillips Under Doctor's Orders.

The Rev. Z. B. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, has been obliged, under doctor's orders, to give up all active work for a while, and has been for a week or more confined to his bed. He has shown encouraging improvement, however, in his condition and he and his family hope to be able to go abroad some time during the summer. The trip to the Holy Land, which they had planned to take, has, of course, been cancelled. The vestry of Epiphany Church has granted a six months' leave to Dr. Phillips and all of his many friends in and outside of the parish, wish for him a speedy recovery and return to his usual vigorous life of usefulness.

Cathedral Building Age.

The Washington Cathedral Committee held its regular winter meeting in Washington, at the residence of Mrs. Alexander Mackay-Smith, and the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington, presided. The Rev. Caleb R. Nelson, D. D., rector of Trinity Parish, New York, was the principal speaker. Dr. Stetson outlined the spiritual as well as the physical fabric of a Cathedral and illustrated his address with lantern slides. As chairman of the building committee of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Dr. Stetson has studied closely the problem of Cathedral Building and presented his subject in an interesting and helpful way. He said that this is peculiarly a cathedral building age, to an extent which has not been equalled since the middle ages. He also said that the three greatest cathedrals now being built are Liverpool Cathedral, Washington Cathedral and the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Liverpool Cathedral he characterized as the most original in type now being built, the Cathedral of St. John the Divine of the most majestic proportions, and Washington Cathedral as the most beautiful of all. Dean Bratenahl, when introducing Dr. Stetson, acknowledged much in the way of advice and counsel for Washington Cathedral from the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Church Music in New York City.

Bach's Passion Music had an unusually fine presentation in New York during Lent, placed, as it should be, in a religious and reverent setting, when it was given in St. George's Church by the Friends of Music, a New York choral society, and members of the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera, with Arthur Bodansky conducting and Lynnwood Farnam at the organ. The service was partly a thanksgiving for the organ, which is new and one of the finest. Throngs of people filled the church and chapel and many were unable to get in.

Members of leading New York orchestras assist each year at another glorious service, which takes place in Trinity Church on Ascension Day, when Henry Hiles' exquisite Crusaders' Hymn is sung as a prelude to the choral Eucharist.

Trinity Church has recently completed five years in which organ recitals have been given after the noon-day service on Wednesdays and Fridays

LIFT UP YOUR EYES.

Lillie Vass Shepherd.

Lift up your eyes unto the hills—
I seem to hear Earth say—
Behold the miracle of Spring
My yearly Passion-play;
Here where you stand is holy ground,
Fall on your knees and pray.

Mine but the voice of one who cries
"Prepare the Lord a way!"
My symbol hath Reality;
My dawn, an Easter Day:
The focus of the soul is God—
My hills are only clay!

A Lilving Christ.

The world needs a living Christ. A missionary once was approached by a Mohammedan who said to him something like this: "We Mohammedans have one advantage over you Christians. When we go to Mecca, we find a coffin, but when you go to Jerusalem, you find nothing but an empty grave." It is the empty grave that gives to Christianity its power. "Behold I am alive forever more" comes sounding in thunder tones from that empty tomb. Dr. Dale tells of his experience when first his heart laid hold of the truth that Christ is alive. He was half way through the writing of an Easter sermon when he said to himself, "Christ is alive, alive". Then he paused and repeated again, "alive!" "Can that really be true? Living as really as myself am?" said Dale. He arose from his chair and walking about his study kept repeating, "Christ is living, Christ is living". At first it seemed strange to him and scarcely true, but at last said he, "It came upon me as a burst of sudden glory that Christ is living. I thought all along I'd believed it, but not until that moment did I feel sure about it." It is indeed a wonderful truth. It is the living Christ that commands the homage of the Christian. There were two pictures that were exhibited some years ago. In one a king is represented as lying on his bed the moment after his death. This king was the mightiest monarch of his day. His scepter had just fallen from his relaxing hands. The servants, who an hour before trembled at his look, were grimacing. Beneath were written these words, "The Conqueror". Two thousand years ago on a Roman cross a Jewish peasant died. Today that peasant rules the policies of empires and is swaying the destiny of a world. He is no dead Christ. On the third day He arose triumphant over the grave and lives forever more. The world needs a living Saviour.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Star in the Mud.

Margaret McIlvaine.

A throng pouring into the city streets. A mill city at five o'clock, on a Saturday afternoon. Crowds. Men, women, girls, lads, children old and young. Trolleys loading at station for suburbs.

A conference of Church workers had met at a North End Parish to consider efficient methods of reaching the masses. They were here, the masses. The workers having chosen the rush hour of Saturday for disbanding, found them annoyingly massive, wanting seats without reserve of personality.

One of us, after our band had been added to the jam, kept giving up her place to first one and then another. Oh, she was just a crank, one could see.

As she left to cross the aisle the vacancy was quickly accepted. Soon she rose again to give her narrow space to a new arrival. This passenger, pressing through the standing crowd was a very stout and dirty woman steering with one fat hand a little girl, while with the other she clutched at successive straps that dangled tantalizingly overhead, swinging fairly out of reach until a favorable moment permitted one to be siezed. The Fat One lodged herself upon the bordering space holders who by judicious shrinking permitted her by time and gravity to subside to their level.

A Christmas shopper, loaded with the tangible expressions of goodwill, had the good luck to leave the car within a few blocks. She had but a moment in which to express her mind facially, and she did it.

An old and also dirty man slipped into the seat left vacant by the eloquent shopper, and the little child was snugly wedged in between the two.

Hardly a workman, for he seemed too unkempt and decrepit, and too dejected for an honest son of toil. The reading of his face was all forlornity. What were his thoughts? He was beyond thought-activity even. The dull apathy of failure had settled upon him. Was he going home? What home had he to go towards as night drew on? Clearly there was no inspiration in the vision of it. Not the glimmer of a hope of even creature comforts, warmth and food, lightened his faded eyes. Nothing worth saving there.

The Fat Woman was perceived to be a kind, indulgent soul. She had provided the Dirty Little Girl with a cone of ice-cream just before boarding the car, and now, in the warm human atmosphere, the cream was oozing, oozing—There!—running down over her dirty little fingers, which she licked —upon her dirty little frock—upon her shoes—the floor, despite her rapid and rapturous licking. The woman got, out of some pouch, a dingy handkerchief or rag, and dabbed the child's face and hands. They remained sticky.

Soon the last dripping crumb was gone. The child, compressed between the fat woman and the dejected old man, sat, contented, with her two little shoes out straight in front of her; and the old man, glancing down at her, laid one faded sleeve around her shoulders, and with feeble hand patted the little arm.

Snuggling to this support the tiny one placed her two, sticky, rosy hands outward, palm to palm, and lifted up shining eyes and red cheeks to gaze at the lights that swung far above. What ecstasy of still rapture!

A wonder! At once one could see again the Miracle that men call Love, of which some had lost sight between the Conference and the car. There, before all, was Love. Mother-love, protecting love, and the clear high love that is worship. As a star may be perfectly reflected in the tiniest pool on a muddy sidewalk, and the down-bent head of the wayfarrer be lifted to forgotten skies, so, right through the dirt, the sordid weight of humanity, shone the Divine. A painter would have seen a Samuel, a Sanctus, or the Christ-Child Himself in the round, upturned, baby face. A Jesuit might well have dreamed a-new the mystery of Redemption in the change upon the old man's countenance.

What matter age, and cold and hunger, since that night his dreams were sweet?

And to us came home the truth that man was made in that Image Ineffaciable, of that Substance Indestructible and shall persist to the purified personality. That whether or no man believes in Him, God believes in man and is able to reveal Himself not only to him, but through him, to his kind, when we are clean of vanity and sin.

Two Common Objections to Foreign Missions.

During a journey from Cincinnati to Nashville on the train about a year ago I had the pleasure of talking to two men, men of the world we would call them, who looked at foreign missions from a somewhat different angle from my own. I was much interested in their viewpoints.

In the course of my conversation with the first of these two men, who proved to be a doctor, some casual mention was made of the fact that I had for several years been a missionary in Japan, whereupon my companion turned to me and said, "You know, there has always been one question that I have wanted to ask about this foreign mission business. I wonder if you would mind if I asked you with perfect frankness something that has been on my mind and heart for a long time?"

"Why, no," I replied, "go ahead and I will do the best I can to answer it."

"Well," he said, "it has always seemed to me to be highly presumptuous for a people of a young civilization like our own to go over there to China, and Korea, and India, and Japan, nations whose civilizations were thousands of years old before ours was even born, and presume to tell them what they are to believe concerning God and religion; especially when we all concede the fact that these peoples have a genius for religion, and that every great religious system under the sun of which we have any knowledge, has come to us from the East. I have a nurse working for me in my hospital in Louisville, who has traveled somewhat extensively in the Orient, and she shares with me the views that I have just expressed. What do you think about it?"

"Well," I said, "before I make definite reply, may I beg the privilege of asking you a question?"

"Certainly," he replied, "what is it?"

"Doctor," I said, "it has been a common custom until very recently in many Oriental countries, and one that still persists in some, whenever a person was suffering from certain diseases, to take a long needle, perhaps eight or ten inches in length, and plunge it into the body at various places, with the idea that the whole cause of the trouble was demon-possession, and that the only way to get rid of it was to make it so uncomfortable for the evil spirit that he would have to get out. Now," Doctor," I said, "they have been practicing these methods of cure for thousands of years—long before what we call scientific medicine was ever known in this country. Now, the question I want to ask you is this, 'Would you count it presumptuous in you yourself to leave your home and your friends and every traditional tie and go across the ocean to these far away lands, at your own expense, at no cost whatever to the people whom you go to serve; to spend your life in exile, so to speak, among a strange people, binding up their wounds, comforting their hearts and suggesting to them that there are more effective, less painful, ways of treating simple human maladies than by means of these drastic methods that they employ? Would you count that presumption, or would you consider it a kindness?"

The Doctor replied, "I believe I see your point."

A little later I was talking to the second of the two men to whom reference has been made. In the course of our conversation he turned to me rather suddenly, and said: "What's your line?"

"I travel for the Presbyterian Church in the U. S.," I said. "My business is to go from church to church and see if I can keep our people interested and informed about foreign missions."

"Foreign missions, did you say?" the man inquired with an incredulous inflection.

"Yes," I said, "foreign missions."

He turned to me and said, "You know I have never been exactly sold on this foreign mission business."

"Well," I asked, "what's the matter with it?"

"It has always seemed to me," he replied, "to be an inexcusable waste of the Church's money to send missionaries all the way across the Pacific or the Atlantic Ocean to Africa or China or Japan, as the case may be; to set them up in housekeeping over there, and give them schools, hospitals and chapels, and all the other equipment they need for their work at an enormous cost to the Church, when we still have hundreds of thousands and millions of heathen right here at our own door. Why don't we finish the job here first and make every man in this country a Christian? Then there will be time enough for us to consider those nations across the sea. Frankly, I would like to know what you think of that."

"That's a fair question," I answered, "and I am going to do the best I can to answer it, but first let me ask, 'What's your line?' "

"I sell cigarettes," he said. "My business is to go from town to town and introduce our brand of cigarettes into the market."

"That's very interesting to me," I replied. "Have you sold your brand of cigarettes to every living American?"

"By no means," he said. "There are millions in our country who don't smoke at all, and millions more who don't smoke our brand."

"Why is it, then," I asked, "that when on your own admission there are still millions here at your own door who do not smoke your brand, your firm insists on sending her salesmen all the way across the Pacific Ocean to China, putting up expensive posters all over that enormous country, sending her representatives to the most far off places, where even missionaries have seldom gone, and giving away hundreds of thousands of free packages of cigarettes each year in an effort to induce the Chinese people to smoke? Why don't you put a cigarette between the lips of every living American first? Then there will be time enough for you to consider those nations beyond the sea."

"You don't understand business," he replied.

"Well, I will admit that," I agreed. "But what's the matter with my argument?"

"Well, you see, we are looking for business expansion," he explained. "The markets in this country have been well worked over. Every man who walks the streets finds advertisements of a dozen different brands of cigarettes flaunted in his face every day of his life. But over there in China is the biggest undeveloped market in all the world, four hundred millions of people as yet scarcely touched, and we want to get in on the ground floor before the competition becomes too keen."

"Friend," I said, "in my opinion, that is an unanswerable argument; and by reason of that same argument, we who are interested in the expansion of the Kingdom of Christ, can never rest so long as there are whole areas of human life, where not even one hint has ever gone that a Saviour came and bled and died, that man might be saved."

"I believe I see your point," he said. —C. D. Fulton, in Presbyterian of the South.

THE HOLY GARDEN.

Julian R. Meade.

These's a legend in Nazareth of a Carpenter's Son
Who made a garden ineffably fair;
In the cool of dusk when His work was done
He would rest with His mother there.

The breath of lilies suffused the night
With sweetness unexcelled.
And the Boy spoke in the twilight
As the darkness fell.

"You'll care for the roses when I am gone?
And the lilies so silver-white?
You will see them by moon or at dew-kissed dawn
And recall this blessed, tranquil night."

Mary smiled and nobly quelled her tears
And the surging in her breast.
"Serene I shall be, my Son, without fears,
For I know His will is best."

Some say those roses still are growing
And more lovely as the years pass by:
In the garden the wind is softly blowing
And placid blue is the Nazareth sky.

Mrs. Smith took her list of numbers and seated herself at the phone, and said: "7369-J—Is this Mrs. Lighthead? This is Mrs. Smith, the custodian of the United Thank Offering . . . No, THANK Offering, T-H-A-N-K Offering . . . Yes, you have heard of it! we collect it twice a year . . . No, it wasn't last week, it was last spring . . . Well, you're supposed to place an offering in it every time there is something for which you are especially thankful—No, you put it in the little blue box . . . I gave you one last April . . . Lost it? Well, I'll bring you another . . . Yes, there are lots of demands made upon us, but this is different; it's a thank offering; and it isn't a demand anyhow, it's a privilege . . . You say you'll give a dollar? . . . Yes, I'll call for it about three . . . Good-bye."

Then Mrs. Smith called up Mrs. Great heart, who said: "Hello . . . Yes, this is Mrs. Greatheart . . . Oh, Mrs. Smith, I was just going to call you . . . Yes, I know; I heard the rector give it out last Sunday . . . Oh, we will do better I'm sure; mine seems quite full . . . He's much better now; the poor man might have been killed . . I was so thankful, I put a dollar in my blue box; I told John he was worth more than a dollar to me, but that was all I had in the house at the time . . . Yes, First in her class; I was so proud, and thankful, too, so I put in fifty cents for Mary; I can never give as much as I would like to . . . Wasn't that terrible? I feel so sorry for them . . . Yes, the sparks were flying all around and if the wind hadn't changed, I think our house would have burned, too . . . I certainly did; I made everybody make an offering that time . . . No, I'll bring it myself; you have enough to call on already. I hope you collect the biggest offering we've ever had."—St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, Va.

I'VE LAID THEM DOWN TODAY.

"Well, I am done. My nerves were on the rack.
I've laid them down today.
It was the last straw broke the camel's back;
I've laid that down today.
No, I'll not fume, nor fret, nor fuss, nor fight;
I'll walk by faith a bit, and not by sight.
I think the Universe will work all right.
I've laid it down today.

"The dread of sorrows I may have to sup,
I'll lay that down today.
The circumstances which rubbed me wrong way up
I'll lay that down today.
It will not matter in the age to come,
Whether I sucked the stone or had the plum,
But it will make a difference to some,
If I keep nice, today."

Undevout Worship.

The captain of a whaler went ashore one Sunday, and entered a little Chapel. After the Service the Minister spoke to him, and found that no impression had been made on the man's mind. "The fact is, sir," said the captain, "all the while you were preaching I was thinking about where I should be likely to find a whale. There is no room in my heart for anything but whales." If all were equally honest, they would confess that the real reason that the Services of the Church did them no good was that their hearts were too full of business to listen—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Great faith is not simply to trust God to do great and apparently almost impossible things. But it also to trust God in the very little things, as not beneath notice. Some are straining to trust God in great things who do not trust Him in the ordinary affairs of life."

RESURRECTION.

Maude Mumma.

The Resurrection, and the tomb,
How nearly one they seem;
For in the night of Death's dark gloom,
Heaven's light shall gleam.

The morning of eternal life,
Shall dawn beyond the grave;
From toil and struggle, sin and strife,
Jesus comes to save.

For life and death will ever go
Hand in hand, as one;
Today we see the shadows low,
Tomorrow, see the sun.

Then labor with each fleeting breath,
Till life's short day is done;
For Life will triumph over Death—
Salvation will be won!

The Men God Wants.

When God wants a worker, He calls a worker. When God wants a great servant, He calls the busy man.

Moses was busy with the flock at Horeb. Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the winepress. Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts. David was busy caring for his father's sheep. Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's wine cup. Amos was busy following the herds. Peter and Andrew were busy casting the net into the sea. James and John were busy mending their nets. Matthew was busy collecting customs. Saul was busy persecuting friends of Jesus. Wm. Carey was busy making shoes. John Milton was busy mastering the classics. John Bunyan was busy tinkering pots and pans. Martin Luther was busy performing penance. Adoniram Judson was busy investigating religious truth. Charles Spurgeon was busy as a preacher. Roger Williams was busy as a stenographer.

God never called an idler into His service. The indolent young man who looks longingly toward the gospel ministry will never get a call from God. The busy workers are the men who God wants.—H. L. Hastings.

Lucille Finds a Way.

Lucille reread the letter she had been holding in her hand from the first word to the very last one. "It is very evident," she said, "that mother wants me to come home at the end of this quarter, and how can I go when this has been something I have wanted to do all my life?"

Lucille was finishing her sophomore year at the Monroe Teachers' College. Her parents had put her through high school, but at the end of that time had told her that she must work and take care of herself. If there was any more school for her, she must earn the way to it herself. So far three years she had labored at teaching in a rural school, going early each morning to make fires, or maybe sweep and dust the room, because she had been too tired to do it the night before.

There were days when her twenty-eight pupils of all ages would just not see that each one could not do just as he or she pleased, just because they did at home. There were days when the stove that was in the schoolroom seemed to delight in dropping its old grate and putting out the fire.

Good days or bad days, these were past now, and she had saved money enough to finish her sophomore year in college, her freshman year having been done in the summer at summer school.

Now she would teach in town school. No more cold rooms, muddy floors or long walks in all kinds of weather.

The second quarter of school was drawing to a close, and, although mother had hinted in several letters that she thought Lucille should quit, she had never exactly said so until now. She had written thus: "Dear Lucille: Your second quarter is almost nished, and your father and I feel that you should quit going to school, and try to find a position. Your account is getting low. You will spend most of it this quarter, and will have nothing with which to buy necessities this summer. Please think diligently of this, and remember, we cannot help you in a financial way."

Take a position, leave now, when she had always wanted to spend a whole year in college? She felt as if she could not leave all her friends and beloved teachers now. No, she would not, either. There must be some way for her to earn money in her spare time so that she might stay.

Till late that night Lucille was wide awake, conjuring in her mind how she might earn money. What could she do? There were no babies to take care of; or, at least, all those near were taken care of very well by her friend, Mary Dagger, who needed the money to help her through school. She couldn't clerk in a store, because all the stores seemed to have a superabundance of clerks.

When at last Lucille fell asleep, it was not to sleep deeply, but to dream and toss fretfully.

The next day Lucille went to school, but between her and her books seemed to come mother's words: "We cannot help you." She was still thinking of these words when a bunch of lively girls coming up behind her shouted: "Come on, Lucille; we are going coasting. Go with us."

In a minute Lucille's mind was made up. "Of course I will," she answered.

The gay crowd started at a brisk pace for the hill, which was just back of the railroad station.

"Look, girls!" cried Margaret Weston. "See that old woman over there? She looks as if she were lost. See, she doesn't seem to know which way to go."

"Oh, well, let's hurry on!" exclaimed one of the girls. "We'll not get to coast very much. Let's go."

This voiced the sentiments of the whole crowd—that is, all except Lucille. "Oh, girls," she said, "I expect she is a stranger here, and doesn't know which way to go, and I believe I will go help her."

"Oh, don't bother. Come and go with us. You know it will be lots of fun."

"Yes, I know," said Lucille, slowly; "but she must be some one's mother, you know," and, turning swiftly, she walked with sure steps toward the old lady, while the gay crowd resumed its way.

"Is there something I may do to help you?" asked Lucille, as she came up to the old lady.

"Oh, if you please!" answered that person. "I am really lost, I believe. I have never been here before, and I do not know which way to go. Perhaps you can direct me."

"Of course I can," said Lucille, "if you will tell me where you wish to go."

"Well"—and the old lady brightened visibly—"you see, I have come to stay all winter with my son. They do not expect me until later. Now that I have gotten here, I don't know the way to reach his home, for he only moved here in December."

"Yes," said Lucille, patiently. "If you will tell me his address, I will take you there."

Lucille gave a start when the old lady named one of the most fashionable streets in the little college town, and thought surely the old lady must be mistaken. However, she started toward the address given, and in about a quarter of an hour the two were walking up the stone steps of one of the nicest homes in the village.

"I will see you safely inside," exclaimed Lucille; "then I must go." So, giving the bell a vigorous ring, she turned to say good-bye.

The door opened almost immediately, and a slender young lady gazed for a second at Lucille and the elderly lady, and then exclaimed in one breath: "Why, mother, how did you happen to come so soon? Why didn't you tell us you were coming? We would have met you. Oh, how glad John will be."

When they had satisfactorily exchanged greetings, the old lady said: "And now, Della, I want you to meet this girl, who has been so nice to me. I do not know her name, but she is my friend, because she left a party of friends to show me the way here. Come, dear, you must come in, tell us your name, and rest a bit."

"Yes," interrupted the daughter-in-law, "you and mother may get acquainted while I make a cup of tea for you both."

So Lucille found herself seated in an artistically furnished living room, chatting away to the dear old lady she had befriended.

When asked what she was most interested in, Lucille promptly said "Books". And with this thought came back those words of her mother: "We cannot help you." Before she realized it, she had told the whole story to her new-found friend. There was only time for a few words in return when Della entered the room with the tea. They drank tea, chatted awhile, and then Lucille left, after having given the older lady her address. "Because," she said, "I might want you to come to see me again, you know."

Lucille went home, and tried to forget her troubles by study. It was late that night before she retired.

She had almost forgotten the incident of the old lady. When she returned to her room at noon there was a letter addressed to her in an unfamiliar hand. Opening it, she read: "To the dear girl who was so nice to me:—During my stay at my son's home this winter, I will be left alone quite a good deal, because my son and daughter-in-law are often away. There will be nothing heavier to do than read to me or help me with crochet patterns. If you can come over soon, we will talk it over. I will be glad to pay you (here was named a sum that made Lucille's eyes sparkle). If this will not interfere with your work, I am sure you are the girl I want. Yours sincerely."

Interfere with her work? Of course not. She would arrange her course next quarter so it could not. Wasn't it wonderful?

Writing to her mother that night, she said: "Mother, do not worry any more. I have found a way to earn money for at least part of my expense." Then, happily to herself: "I will graduate in June."—Girlhood Days.

GIVE AND LIVE.

I looked upon a sea
And lo! it was dead,
Although By Hermon's snows
And Jordan fed.

How came a fate so dire?
The tale's soon told.
All that it got it kept
And fast did hold.

All tributory streams
Found here their grave,
Because that sea received
But never gave.

O sea that's dead! Teach me
To know and feel
That selfish grasp and greed
My doom will seal.

And help me, Lord, my best,
Myself to give,
That I may others bless
And like Thee live.

The Sociable Lion.

This afternoon mother had gone shopping and left Harry all alone in the big house. He felt very lonely and hoped that she would return as soon as possible. Every little noise that he heard frightened him, for it was such a great big house and he was just a lonesome little boy.

Suddenly he heard a curious scratching noise at the front door, and, thinking that it was mother trying to open the door, he hurried downstairs to let her in. As the door swung open Harry received a shock that he will never quite forget. Instead of mother, he found himself gazing into the fiery eyes of an enormous lion. With a cry of terror, Harry sprang back, and, leaving the door open, ran half way up the stairs. His strange and most unwelcome visitor, purring in a very friendly manner, walked into the house just as if he had lived there all his life, looked around, growled softly to himself and then walked into the parlor, where he lay down and seemed to sleep.

When Harry discovered that the lion did not intend to chase him upstairs he hurried on up and then locked himself in the library, very much out of breath and exceedingly nervous. Harry loved all kinds of animals, including lions, when they were in cages, but he could truthfully say that he was not fond of them when they came so unexpectedly and visited his home.

"I wonder where he came from?" exclaimed Harry to himself, very much puzzled and still exceedingly frightened, for he knew that big lions did not walk around the streets like human beings did. "He must have escaped from some circus or the park. How can I ever get rid of him? If mother dear should return suddenly and find him in the parlor she would be frightened to death."

Just then Harry happened to think of the telephone, which was in the same room. He decided that central would be able to help him, so he lifted the received off the hook and cried to the puzzled central: "Oh, Central, there is a great big lion in my house. Will you please help me get rid of him before mother comes back?"

Harry had to repeat his strange request several times before central fully understood him, and then she told him not to worry, but to remain locked in the room where he was and that she would send help to him as quickly as possible. Harry hung up the receiver and then crept to the door to listen if the lion had come upstairs, but, hearing no noise, decided that he must still be in the parlor.

It seemed ages to Harry before he saw three big policemen and another man enter the house. Then it was not very long before he saw the lion being led out of the house by the man, evidently his trainer, with a rope around the lion's neck. The lion was still purring in a very contented manner. Then one of the policemen came up and knocked on the door and told Harry that he was safe now. Harry unlocked the door and let the policeman in.

"You must have had a good scare, young man," laughed the policeman. "I don't think that I would care very much myself to open the door and find a big lion facing me. However, this one is absolutely harmless, for he is very old and has no teeth. He got away from a circus and was just wandering around, looking for some one to make friends with."

The big policeman remained with Harry until mother returned, and when she heard what had happened she gave Harry a big loving hug and declared that she would never leave him alone in the house again. Harry soon recovered from his curious experience and also received a reward of fifty dollars from the circus people for the recovery of the lion.

Now, when Harry opens the door he always asks first who is on the other side of it.—The Child's Gem.

Lucky "Lindy."

"Lindy" is a little gray kitten who lives in a grocery store in the Fenway section of Boston. Like his famous namesake, he seems to find life quite adventurous. Of course in the city a little cat has to make his playground on the sidewalks and in the street, espea little store cat. So from the very first day that the spring weather was warm enough to permit the store door to be left open, Lindy found it highly exciting to dash out upon the broad sidewalk, and in and out of doorways, dodging the canine promedaners, who liked nothing better than to engage him in a lively marathon.

Lindy discovered that another door further down the block often stood invitingly open, and it was there he made friends with Bill, the taxi-man. Kind-hearted Bill enjoyed the antics of the playful little Lindy cat, and his visits became a daily affair. The children also enjoyed playing with Lindy, and although the genial grocer tried to persuade the little fellow to keep inside his own store, there were too many interesting things out on the broad sidewalk, and Lindy ran about so much he got a little careless, as very little folk sometimes will.

One evening, just at dusk, when the gay lights began to shine along the street, Lindy was on the sidewalk playing with a piece of paper. He pranced about and tossed the paper, and then chased it, and in his play came suddenly to the edge of the curb. Now all the city children know that the edge of the sidewalk is about six inches above the street level, and at intervals there are sewer inlets which make openings in the curbstones. These inlets drain off the rain water which falls in the streets, and while that part of the opening that is in the street is protected by an iron grating, that part which is in the curbstone is uncovered.

Little Lindy-cat didn't know that there was one of these inlets in the very curbstone on which he was madly chasing his piece of paper, and when it fell off the sidewalk, he dashed after it, but it had fluttered through the inlet. Lindy was a very little kitty, and he didn't know that this hole under the sidewalk had no bottom, and he was so excited about catching his bit of paper that he wasn't very careful, and somehow he slipped and fell right through the inlet into the sewer. My! what an excitment there was. Of course he mewed and wailed, and the children who had watched his play and his sudden accident wept and wailed, too, when they heard him splashing in the water several feet below, and realized that they couldn't reach him.

They ran and told the grocer. They appealed for help to the passers-by, but although willing hands were ready, there didn't seem to be a thing they could do.

Just then Bill, the taxi-man, came driving by, and seeing the crowd he asked a few questions and soon discovered the plight of his little friend. Now a taxi driver has to know how to think quickly and act quickly in an emergency, and Bill did some quick thinking now. He thought of a bar to pry up the street grating, and some one thought of a ladder in the school-yard across the street. The ladder was put down into the sewer, but the opening was rather small, and Bill was a big man. So he asked one of the small boys to volunteer to climb down the ladder. It was already quite dark, and of course it was very dark down in the sewer. It took a good deal of courage for a small boy to voluntarily go down there, but a Boy Scout did it. There was no sound now from the little victim in its depths, and they had to light matches and hold them down to see, but very soon a dripping, muddy little form, apparently lifeless, was laid on the sidewalk, and the valiant Bill and his helpers proceeded with first aid to the drowned, until, lo! and behold! the litle cat breathed again.

Having accomplished this, Bill carried the scrap of a kitten on one hand to his office, where willing hands cleansed the mud from his eyes and ears and his little fur coat, and warmed and dried him until he was revived sufficiently to be restored to his own little box in the grocery store.

In a couple of days Lindy was dashing about as full of play as ever, but although he doesn't realize what it was all about, he knows that something very disagreeable happened to him at the edge of the sidewalk, and now he keeps a safe distance away from the street edge, when he arches his back and humps his saucy tail, and prances down to the taxicab office to visit his friend, Bill.—A. M. Lord, in Our Dumb Animals.

Juanita's Gardens.

Her name was Juanita, but her eyes —well, they were as blue as the bluebells of Scotland, and her hair, perhaps some people might have called it red, because at times it looked as if some of the rays of the setting sun were imprisoned in it. However, the little girl, Juanita, thought little of all that. What was worrying her most, one beautiful morning, as she came rushing down the broad stone steps, her cheeks aflame, was her quick temper. She hated it very, very much, and was trying her best to keep it under control. So Juanita kept two gardens, and the one that she found herself in that morning was the one she called her ugly garden. Nothing grew in it at all; it was just a small enclosure, where the earth showed black and dirty-looking, and where there was nothing attractive to look at. It had to be hidden from the eyes of passers-by.

Here Juanita came to fight down bad feelings. She had, a few minutes before, spoken some very ugly words, and now, on reaching her garden, sat down to think it all out. Juanita shut her eyes tight; she did not want to see the lovely sunlight that crept even into her small garden of ugly thoughts. Gradually the minutes passed by, until at last the deep pink in her cheeks paled into the tint of a wild rose, and her hands, instead of being clinched tightly together, lay quiet in her lap. Then Juanita opened her eyes. "I'll do it," she said aloud, jumping quickly to her feet. "If you did get the better of me again, old temper, I'll get it back on you now, because I'm sorry for what I said, and I'm going to say so, too; so there!" Of all things Juanita hated to do, it was to say that she was sorry, but she was a brave little girl, and she knew that she had been in the wrong. As quickly as she had come into her ugly garden Juanita rushed out again and back up the steps and into the house. Then, a few minutes later, she again came out, with her blue eyes shining and a smile on her lips. This time she turned in another direction, and fairly flew into her garden of good thoughts. Row after row of bright pansy faces greeted her; pretty butterflies circled in and out, and altogether it was the loveliest little garden that one could wish to come upon. Juanita sank down and clasped her hands joyously together. Here it was that she came to plan good deeds and think only good thoughts, and so no wonder that the little spot grew very beautiful.

And by degrees Juanita's visits became fewer and fewer into her ugly garden, and more and more frequent into her pretty garden of good thoughts, where the bright pansy faces and the butterflies always greeted her, and where the sunlight shone warmly in and welcomed her, too.

Will you try, as Juanita did, to turn the key on your ugly garden, and keep it locked? Then the little gate to your garden of good thoughts, too, will stand open and ready to welcome you in The other can then be forgotten.—Kathleen Hay, in Child's Gem.

The Little Girl With the White Coat.

This Little Girl lived quite near a big city park. It was a beautiful park with flower beds of tulips and daffodils in the spring, and evergreen trees that looked like fluffy snow balls in winter.

In the park there were some squirrels and the Little Girl used to watch them. At first they would scamper away and run up the trees, and she could only look up at them and call, "Come down, little squirrels, I won't hurt you." Always she talked to them with a soft voice and gradually the little squirrels began to watch for the Little Girl in the White Coat. She nearly always wore white. The squirrels noticed that none of her clothes were trimmed in the skins of their fathers or mothers that they had loved, so she never reminded them of guns or nets when they looked at her. One day her father suggested that she take nuts along for the squirrels, so she began to fill her pockets with them. When she went to the store she would think about the little squirrels that liked nuts as well as she did and would buy nuts for them. Each sunny day when she and her father walked in the park, he counted as the best part of the walk the calling of the squirrels and feeding them.

"Why do the squirrels come to me, father? They never used to come," queried the Little Girl in the White Coat.

"Because they have learned to know that you love them. Even with people, if you want them to come to you, you must love them."

That was a good answer from her father.

"But don't you think they come for the nuts I give them?"

You see, the Little Girl really wanted to know.

"Yes," was the wise answer of her father, "but you gave them nuts because you love them, don't you? Now, when you grow up, if people get from you gentleness and kindness and graciousness, you will find them coming to you."—Our Dumb Animals.

We sometimes hear it declared that "time is the test of all things". Nay, not so. It is eternity that is the test.

"No man could tell me where my soul might be;
I searched for God and God eluded me;
I sought my brother—and I found all three."

A clergyman one day announced from the pulpit: "Next Sunday I shall preach on 'Liars and Lying', but meantime I wish you would all study the seventeenth chapter of St. Mark."

The following Sunday when he arose to give the sermon he inquired: "How many of you have studied the seventeenth chapter of Mark?"

Half of the congregation held up their hands.

"You are the ones I mean to preach to," declared the clergyman. "There is no seventeenth chapter of Mark."—Selected.

WHAT A LITTLE GIRL HEARD.

I just ran away to the buttercup lot
When mamma told me I'd better not,
And a little brown birdie up in a tree
As true as you live kept a-saying to me,
"Naugh-tee May ran away!"
Till I didn't know what to do.
Now how do you s'pose he knew?

And once we went to the meadow brook,
Josie and me, with a fishing hook,
And the very same birdie sang again
Over and over just as plain,
"Naugh-tee May ran away!"
And Josie she heard him, too.
Now how do you s'pose he knew?

Josie she guesses what I heard
Was just my conscience 'stead of a bird,
But the water looked so scowly and black
We took hold of hands and ran right back.
And all the way we heard it say:
"That is the best thing to do."
And mamma she said so, too.

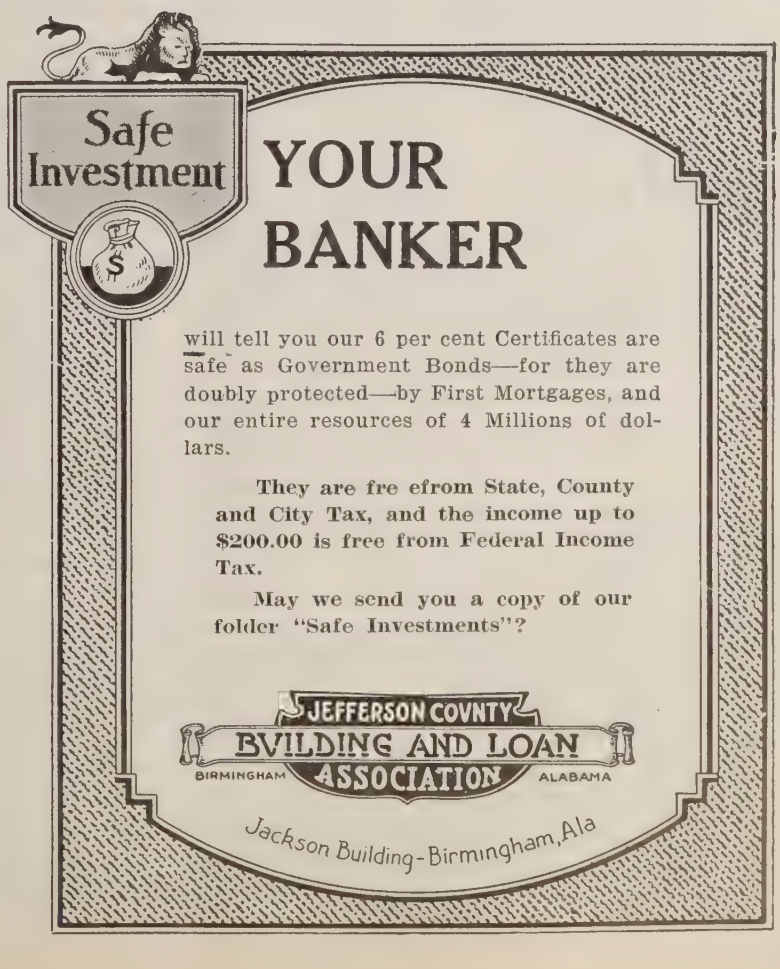
OUR PLAYROOM.



It's strange that what is taken
Inside our playroom door
Is sure to turn to something
It never was before.

My grandma's shawl, like any Old-fashioned shawl, of course,
Becomes a tent for gypsies
And every chair a horse.

The bed and crib are wagons
In which we children race,
Or else they're puffing steamboats
From some queer foreign place.

And when we go a-fishing
Our pole is papa's cane,
And all the floor is water—
Till we get home again.

Deaths

MONCURE: Entered into life eternal Sunday, February 24, 1929, MICHAEL WALLACE MONCURE. Born at "Belle Fonte", Stafford County, Virginia, June 16, 1861. He is survived by his widow, Bettie Ashby Moncure; one son, Michael Wallace Moncure, and two daughters, Elizabeth Ashby and Virginia Buchanan Moncure.

"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Micah 6:8.

HATTON: Entered into rest, 6:45 A. M. Tuesday, April 2, 1929, at the residence, 421 North Street, Portsmouth, Va., GOODRICH HATTON, son of the late Edward Alexander and Susan Rebecca Nash Hatton, aged 66 years. Funeral from the residence, 3:30 P. M., Thursday, April 4, 1929.

PICARD: WILLIAM HOWARD PICARD, son of the late Rev. William Thomas Picard, of Jackson, N. C., fell asleep in Jesus March 15, 1929, in Colorado Springs, Colorado, leaving a widow and two daughters of that city and one sister, Mrs. B. H. Hardy, of Jackson, N. C.

MINNIE EMILY ASHCOM.

In Baltmiore, Maryland, March 6, 1929, MINNIE EMILY ASHCOM entered upon the great adventure of the higher life.

Always devoted to the Church, the last ten years had been given generously to the Girls' Friendly Society in Maryland. She had been a Vice-President for ten years, Head of the Holiday House for six years, was Head of the Housing and Activities Departments and had many contacts with the Church and the Girls' Friendly Society beyond the Diocese.

Her quiet power of leadership, her unremitting efforts for others won for her a place in her work and in the hearts of her friends that can never be filled. An ardent Churchwoman, of deep spirituality, she has left a priceless heritage in her constant effort to measure everything in which she took part, as she did her whole life, by the standard of Jseus Christ.

The Church has lost one of its strongest supporters. The Girls' Friendly Society has suffered an irreparable loss.

The funeral services were at the Church of the Ascension, conducted by the Right Reverend Edward Trail Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor, assisted by Rev. Robert E. Browning. A celebration of the Holy Eucharist, in memory of Miss Ashcom, was held at St. Paul's on March 25, with Father Hughson as Celebrant, assisted by the rector, Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

throughout the year. Over 290,000 persons have attended. The rector and Mr. Channing Lefebvre, the organist, have received hundreds of letters in gratitude for these half-hours of tranquil beauty, freely provided in the midst of the turmoil of Wall Street and Broadway.

The first church organ made in this country was for Trinity Church. When the church was first built in 1696 it contained no organ, but when it was enlarged for the second time, in 1737, one was installed.

CALIFORNIA.

Rt., Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop.

"The Building of the Ship."

The young people of the Church School of St. Mark's Parish, Berkeley, Cal., took part in a unique Easter Festival Service on Easter afternoon at five o'clock in the Church. Mr. R. L. Hirst trained the school for the service called "The Building of the Ship".

The whole school participated in it. The Rev. Penrose Hirst acted as Master Builder; the boys brought each separate part for the building, presenting it with an appropriate recitation. It was a real ship, built of wood, and was put together from keel to masts and sails, right before the eyes of the congregation. It was five feet long from bowsprit to stern. It was a most interesting service, and quite different from the usual Easter Festivals. Special songs went with it, and the Church School choir led the singing, in which all boys and girls of the upper division of the school joined. The younger children helped in the loading of the ship with the Lenten Offering boxes.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Bishop Tucker Improving.

As announced last week, the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, was operated on for an emergency case of appendicitis, April 2, at the hospital in Alexandria. It is reported that from the condition of the appendix the Bishop must have been suffering for some time without mentioning it. If the operation had been delayed two hours there might have been very serious consequences. It is, therefore, a great relief and source of thankfulness to the Bishop's many friends, within and without the diocese to learn that his condition is as well as possible, and that he will probably leave the hospital in about a week or ten days.

Record-Breaking Offering.

The Sunday School of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, of which the Rev. W. R. G. Irwin is rector, has reported an Easter offering of $1,600. This surpasses contributions of any other parish the contributions of any other parish in the diocese and is thought to be a record-breaking contribution in Virginia diocesan history.

St. Thomas' Sunday Schools holds second place in Richmond with a contribution of over $1,100.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

An Unusual Story.

At the close of the Easter morning services at St. Peter's Church, Michigan and Trumbull Avenues, Detroit, gifts aggregating $200,000 were promised to the parish. The announcement was made by the rector, the Rev. Robert B. Kimber, at a parish meeting and dinner held Thursday evening, April 4.

The story is an unusual one. Three years ago a discouraged vestry met to review a situation whose main features were a little old stone church, much the worse for wear, a dilapidated parish house and an ancient dwelling which was being used as a club-house, and a congregation almost at the vanishing point. Mr. Kimber, who had just taken charge, asked what could be done in the way of raising money for better equipment. The answer was: "Possibly $15,000 or $20,000 at the outside. A month later, however, $67,000 was pledged for a new parish house, and a year later $64,000 more was pledged towards a new church. A splendidly-equipped parish house was erected, and there was also built the "undercroft" of the new church. Thus the foundations of the church were built, and nearly all the heating equipment that will needed in the whole building when completed was installed. A rapidly growing congregation took fresh heart of courage and set to work under vastly improved conditions.

Nevertheless there was a heavy burden of interest charges, and a review of the finances during Lent show arrearages on the pledges of $32,000. Now comes the other good part of the story.

After church on Easter Day a gentleman who prefers to be anonymous for the present approached Mr. Henry Otis, the Senior Warden of the Parish, and said: "Mr. Otis, this old church building is not an adequate setting for the splendid work being carried on here by the rector and this loyal congregation. If you will contribute one-half of the cost, I will pay the other half so that the new church may be erected fully paid for and consecrated on Easter Day, 1930." Mr. Otis agreed, and the joint offer of the donors was presented to the congregation at the parish meeting referred to above, the only condition being that the present arrearages on pledges shall be made up, and that a further $15,000 be subscribed so that the church may not be left with interest charges too heavy for it to bear.

The two donations provide for the completion of the church building, the equipment of the new sanctuary, a new organ, and an endowment fund of $120,000.

The final unit of the new parish house, an endowment building five stories high, with stores and offices, will not be erected until the completion of the widening of Michigan Avenue.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial to Bishop Weed.

On Sunday, March 3, the Bishop dedicated a tablet, erected within the sanctuary, by the congregation of Trinity Parish, Saint Augustine, as a memorial to the Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed, D. D., the third Bishop of Florida. This tablet is of pure white marble and identical in design with the memorial to the former Bishops, erected in the same church.

Colored Congregation Build New Rectory.

In the presence of a very large gathering of Negroes, Bishop Juhan opened the new rectory of St. Cyprian's Colored congregation, in Saint Augustine, on Sunday afternoon, March 3. This rectory is a modern stucco cottage and was built through the efforts and largely at the expense of St. Cyprian's congregation. The cost of the structure being $5,000. Archdeacon Wm. T. Wood, in charge of this, and other Negro missions, has taken residence with his family in this new and attractive home.

Jacksonville Noon-Day Services.

The Churchmen of the Jacksonville parishes prepared and organized so well for the Lenten Noon-day services that the attendance and appreciation of the public reached a new high-water mark.

These services were held for two weeks only, March 11-22. They were conducted in one of the down-town theatres and the preachers were the Rev. Willis G. Clark, of St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, Fla.; the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina, and Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism; the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Columbia, S. C., and the Rev. Julius M. Schaad, rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Ga.

Educational Institutes.

Under the direction of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, of which the Rev. Ambler M. Blackford, of Jacksonville, is the Chairman, a very successful series of Educational Institutes were held in Florida during the Lenten Season.

Miss Annie Morton Stout, of the Department of Religious Education of the Province of Sewanee, was the leader of these Institutes, and has expressed herself as being most pleased and satisfied with the attendance and results obtained.

In St. John's Parish, Jacksonville, where Church School teachers from all of the city parishes, and several of the nearby congregations, met for a course on "The Teacher", some thirty teachers were regular in their attendance and some eighteen of this number took examinations for credits in the National Accredited Teachers' Association.

In St. Mark's Parish, Palatka, among the thirty teachers who gathered for five consecutive evenings, were the teachers of St. Paul's Mission, Federal Point. This mission is twelve miles distant from Palatka, but this was no hindrance to the devoted body of teachers of that little school—100 per cent of whom were present every night. Some eighteen of these students likewise have taken their examinations for the N. A. T. A. credits. This time the course taught was "The Curriculum". The closing Institute of the series was held in St. James' iMssion, Lake City. Here, too, "The Curriculum" was taught. Eleven teachers attended from the local Church School, and five have taken their N. A. T. A. examinations.

In addition to the above mentioned Institutes, Mission Study Classes have been very generally held throughout the diocese, both among the women of the Auxiliary and the Church School Service Leagues. The New Africa, The Program of the Church, and Building the City of God were the predominant subjects under discussion.

Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville.

A very complete and modern, as well as beautiful church structure was opened for its first service in Jacksonville, Fla., when the Easter services were held in the new Church of the Good Shepherd.

The building is the final unit of a group of buildings which have been under construction for some nine years, the first completed being what is now the gymnasium, which has been in use for Church services, and the swimming pool with its accessories, the two kitchens and serving pantries, the guild rooms, and men's club room, the Boy Scout Rooms, Sunday-school departments, and chapel.

The new church, which was designed by Corbusier and Foster of Cleveland, and Mellen C. Greeley, of Jacksonville, associate architects for the entire group, is the dominating feature because of the materials used, its great height and size. The whole group is of Gothic design, leaning somewhat to the continental. There has been invested approximately $600,000 in this group of buildings.

On Easter the attendance was good at the 6 A. M. service, more than 500 made their communions at the 7:30 service, and, though provision had been made for about 1,200, the church would not accommodate the crowd at the 11 o'clock service, and the same was true of the Sunday-school celebration in the afternoon.

The furniture of the new church is in keeping with the beautiful building, many pieces being memorials. The Rev. C. A. Ashby is rector of the parish; the building committee are W. M. Stockton, E. Vivian Toomer, Harry E. Osborne, C. H. Lloyd, C. S. L'Engle, R. D. Knight and Walter Hawkins. The builders are A. Bentley Sons Company.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Josiah R. Ellis is now living at Amherst, Va., and may be addressed there.

The Rev. Samuel S. Marquis, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., has returned from Summerville, S. C., where he has been recuperating during the winter from the effects of a serious operation. He was in his own pulpit April 7.

The Rev. John S. Wellford has accepted the rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, Va., as of September 1, 1929.

The Rev. Wolcott Coit Treat has become rector of the Church of the Atonement, Westfield, Mass., instead of Vicar.

The Rev. Phillips Brooks Franklin, formerly rector of Christ Memorial Church, North Brookfield, Mass., has accepted a call to St. Alban's Church, Marshfield, Wis.

The Rev. Charles F. Brooks has resigned as Curate of St. Stephen's, Pittsfield, Mass., to become Curate of Trinity Church, Wilmington, Del.

The Rev. Henry Gleaser has accepted a call to St. Stephen's Church, Pittsfield, Mass.

The Rev. Bayard H. Goodwin, formerly rector of St. Philip's Church, Easthampton, Mass., has accepted a call to St. Mary's Church, Amityville, Long Island.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. John Alexander Betcher, Ph. D., formerly a Methodist minister, was advanced to the priesthood on the Fifth Sunday in Lent, March 17, 1929, by the Bishop of Springfield, the Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., in St. John's Church, Decatur, Ill.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Stanley Allan Macdonnell, rector of the parish; the Litany was said by the Rev. Robert Hall Ratchison, rector of St. Paul's, Alton, who with the Rev. Mr. Macdonell, united with the Bishop in the Laying on of Hands.

The Rev. Dr. Betcher was formerly a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, where he was very highly thought of and has done splendid work in his various charges in Illinois. He became rector of Trinity Church, Lincoln, immediately upon his ordination to the priesthood. He has served that parish during his diaconate and candidateship.

The Proof of Easter.

The best evidence for the resurrection of our Lord is the resurrection of His Church. It is possible for scepticism to make much, if it will, of the fragmentary records of Christ's risen life, and the apparent discrepancies between the records that exist. But the change that passed upon the mind and outlook of the disciples is past the power of scepticism to obliterate. Who can deny the grief and despair of the little mourning company who followed Joseph of Arimathaea in paying honor to the Dead? But just as little can be denied the joy and triumph into which they were quickened after a few short hours had passed. The attempts to give a naturalistic explanation of that change have ludicrously broken down. There remains only one reasonable and adequate explanation of that revived faith, that overflowing gladness, those trumpet-toned proclamations. It is that when they said "The Lord is risen indeed" they spoke what was true. The resurrection of the Master is needed to account for the resurrection of the Church, and the resurrection of the Church is only explained by the resurrection of the Master.—J. M. E. Ross.

GOD'S TEMPLE

When we take up the Bible we enter in spirit . . . a temple built, not out of stone and marble, but with human words, yet enshrining within it, for the comfort and warning, the correction and encouragement of every human soul, no other and no less than the holy and eternal Spirit. Of that temple the Old Testament is the nave, with its side aisles of psalm and prophesy; and the Gospels are the choir—the last Gospel, perhaps, the very sanctuary; while around and behind are the apostolic epistles and the Apocalypse, each a gem of beauty, each supplying an indispensable feature to the majestic whole. With what joy should we daily enter that temple! With what profound reverence should we cross its threshold! With what care should we mark and note—where nothing is meaningless—each feature, each ornament that decorates wall or pillar or window or roof! How high should be set our expectations of the blessings that may be secured within it! How open, and yet how submissive should be our hearts to the voices—they are not of this world—that might touch and change and purify them!

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There is no unimportant member in the Church.

The purpose of prayer is not to get God to see things as we see them, but to get ourselves to see things as God sees them.

In the alchemy of the strength of the Infinite, a sodden sorrow has time and again been transformed into loving sympathy for all who suffer.

Nothing is ever done beautifully which is done in rivalship; nor nobly, which is done in pride.—John Ruskin.

There is no greater mistake than to suppose that Christians can impress the world by compromising with it.—Selected.

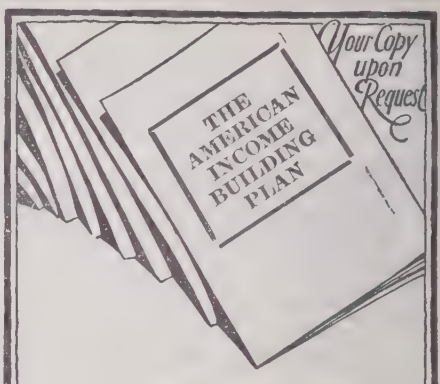
"Why shouldst Thou fill the day with sorrow,
My heart?
One watches all with gaze most tense;
Doubt not that He will give thee too
Thy part."

"He will guide us in a sure path, though it be a rough one; though shadows hang upon it, yet He will be with us. He will bring us home at last."

When persons are brought into pews not otherwise used, they are in position to receive the Word of Life. They are guests at the table where the Bread of Life is given them. No other form of hospitality is the equivalent of this act of neighborliness.—Lutheran.

You never get to the end of Christ's words. There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolation, but they never pass away.—Dean Stanley.

What does the apotheosis of the Cross mean if not the death of death, the defeat of sin, the beautification of martyrdom, the raising to the skies of voluntary sacrifice, the defiance of pain? By long brooding over this theme—the agony of the just, peace in the midst of agony, and the heavenly beauty of such peace—humanity came to understand that a new religion was born, a new mode, that is to say, of explaining life and of understanding suffering.—Amiel.



When the bitter trouble or a dark perplexity is spread out before God in prayer, it has the bitterness taken out of it or the darkness enlightened. Over its narrow, thorny path the high stars shine in peace. The pain may not be taken away, but power to bear is given. —Young People.

FRATERNALS

Rough but fairly accurate estimates give the United States sixty-eight million legal voters. The number is stated in words because we Americans are so accustomed to long rows of figures that they are meaningless. Official statements show that thirty millions of us, nearly half our possible voters, far more than half our actual voters, are members of fraternal orders, not including the vocational bodies, like the labor unions and farmer co-operatives, nor the political, like the Ku-Klux. This is a feature of American life and progress to which, considering its importance, remarkably little attention is given. No other country has such a condition. No nation of the past has had anything approaching it—half the adult population enrolled in organizations, members of which are pledged to mutual helpfulness, fraternity, recognition of the brotherhood of mankind, to united action, influence and giving for benevolence, alleviation of human miseries, service to God by obedience to the Golden Rule expressed for us by the words and life of His Son. All these organizations, by their declaration of principles and the teachings of their rituals, inculcate the lessons and spirit of the New Testament. Most of them, wisely, disclaim special allegiance to denominations or to Christianity; but their purposes, proved by act, and precepts, put to shame the type of professed Christian who, like Scribes and Pharisees, endeavor to bargain with the Almighty, offering so much morality, compliance with the laws, lip service and carefully measured contribution in exchange for redemption and eternal life.

In a recent number of the Saturday Evening Post John Chapman Hilder, managing editor of the Elks' Magazine and, therefore, in intimate touch with the subject, says more than 800 fraternal orders, or societies, of varying extent of scope and membership, exist in the country, a number of them having branches in our dependences and Canada. "The basic admonition in every ritual," Mr. Hilder writes, "is, Be kind to your fellow man." The Free Masons, of course, have the oldest order and, in some respects, the strongest. According to the testimony of Masons who join other orders, much of the ceremonial, "secret work" and ritual of all are based on Masonry. Masonic literature, accessible to all, states the fundamentals thus—

"There is one God, the Father of all.

"The Holy Bible is the great Light in Masonry and the rule and guide for faith and practice.

"Man is immortal.

"Love of man is, next to love of God, man's first duty.

"The cornerstone of the Masonic spirit is Charity."

Three and a quarter million men are organized and held together by solemn obligation and mutual fellowship on this faith. This number includes the degrees above the Blue Lodge, known as "Christ Masonry", because belief in the Saviour is understood to be essential to membership. So-called Masons in Europe, reputed to be atheistic and to be perverted to political agitations, are repudiated by the Masons of this country and Great Britain. They are few, but their conduct in the past has brought on nearly all secret societies the ban of the Roman Catholic Church. Most of the most numerous and widely spread orders in the United States follow the Masons, it is understood, not only in principles and ritual, but in excluding women, for whom, however, special branches—like the Eastern Star in Masonry and the Rebekahs of the Odd Fellows—are established, with many thousand members, entitled to all the benefits accorded men.

The value of the fraternities to the country and religion is incalculable. They make an enormously powerful, organized, underlying force for the prevention and destruction of atheism and anarchy and the dangerous forms of socialism. Thirty million men instilling and cultivating among themselves belief in God and immortality and loyalty to law and government make potent defence we do not see and which few of us comprehend, far more effective than any army of soldiers. The good these orders do in protecting the helpless, preventing and relieving poverty and suffering and educating and training to good citizenship is beyond estimation. We are moved to wonder how we would do without the fraternities when we consider some of the figures and facts of their activities. The beneficiary orders have ten billion dollars of life insurance, a large part of of it held by and for those who would not or could not carry policies in the regular companies. The Odd Fellows, numbering two and a half millions, maintain sixty-four homes for the aged and disabled and contribute, through local lodges, liberally and systematically to all local welfare work. Woodmen of the World, half a million, maintain a $1,000,000 hospital for tuberculosis victims. The Modern Woodmen, more than a million, have a $2,000,000 tubercular hospital, which they maintain at cost of $400,000 a year. Their special work, however, is Americanization, development of love for country, constitution and flag. The national flags given by it wave over thousands of schoolhouses from sea to sea. The Shrine, the high degree of Masonry, supports ten hospitals, with total of 600 beds, for crippled children of poor parents. More than 7,300 such children had been sheltered and treated at last obtainable reports. The Elks, composed largely of theatrical, newspaper and sporting people, with 800,000 members, spent last year nearly three millions in such work as summer camps for poor children, caring for crippled children, providing Christmas bounty for the poor, sending flowers to hospitals, contributing for special needs, such as flood and storm relief. This was in addition to maintaining a beautiful home for aged and indigent members at Bedford, Virginia. The Loyal Order of Moose has a home for children and widows of deceased members on a thousand acre farm, with comfortable and attractive cottages, vocational and other schools, in which 2,000 boys and girls are taught to be good and useful citizens and to believe in God. Mr. Hilder names eleven other orders supporting free hospitals, including Maccabees, Knights of Columbus (affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church), Tribe of Ben Hur, Foresters, Ancient Order of United Workmen. Masonic homes for the aged and poor and orphans are scattered widely. All these are in addition to constant and countless benefactions and charities by individual members and lodges. Workers for charitable purposes and relief for emergencies and disasters testify that their calls on lodges and members of the fraternities for aid are rarely in vain.

We read with delight and admiration of the magnificent benefactions of our rich men. There is yet more delight in thought of these millions of ordinary citizens, most of them far from rich, going on year after year unostentatiously doing beautiful things in recognition of their duty and obligations to God and brother man. There is infinite comfort in realizing, amid all the wickedness and crime and vice and darkness in high places, of which we see and hear so much, how many really good people there are, many of them making little show of goodness.

There is an old story of Sam Jones, said to have been told, with much gusto, by that evangelist himself. It is that he and a friend found themselves hopelessly stranded in a strange place. The friend proposed to seek the local Methodists.

"Methodists nothing," Jones replied. "They want too many credentials and references. I'm going to hunt a Mason. All I need for him is a grip of the hand and a dozen words." Results proved Jones right.

The secret orders are apart from the commercial organizations, like the Kiwanis, 100,000 strong, and Rotary clubs, boards of trade and chambers of commerce, but, in the last analysis, all these millions of Americans really are working, thinking and giving, concentrating their vast united strength for the same great general purpose of making the world and their own parts of it better to live in, increasing opportunity for hope and happiness, uplifting and cleansing mankind and leading us to mutual usefulness. All alike, too, are objects of the derision and sneers of the professionally Superior Persons, the ultra artistic and refined and aesthetic, dilettante talkers and writers to whose transcendental taste all who are practically useful are abhorrent and despicable. Yet the thirty million real and really working and doing people go on, preparing behind the lodge doors kindly benevolences and enterprises for the general welfare, seen and felt by thousands every year, drilling their members to be deligent factors in promoting and upholding the decencies, sustaining honesty and all the basic virtues, the sanctity of the home and the stability of civilization and orderly government. To occasional enjoyments for themselves in parades, demonstrations, frolics, conventions and wholesome fun they surely are fully entitled while they continue to constitute, as surely they do, safeguards from dangerous internal strifes among us and a huge, living, impregnable fortification against agencies of decay and destruction.

The real importance to religion, the churches and communities, the government and our national life, of the fraternal societies and orders is not understood nor appreciated properly even by their own membership. Many Episcopalians, including bishops and clergymen, are active and earnest and always welcome and honored brothers of some one fraternity or of several of them. It is a live question, however, whether our Church, as a whole, and rectors and laity individually, co-operate with, help and encourage the fraternals as cordially and consistently as wisdom requires. The Christian religion is the great conservative influence in this republic and the world. In our country the fraternal orders may be regarded fairly as ranking next to the churches as influences for good. Close alliance and association of the two vast powers will be for the advancement and strengthening of both, and powerfuly in making this country of ours more than ever the dominant force among the nations, successful leader and guide in honoring and serving the Almighty and establishing peace and good will among men.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE FULFILLMENT OF A STRANGE PROPHECY

Daniel's Prediction of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat: An Interpretation of Daniel 2:33, 41-43

By Dyson Hague of Toronto

IN many respects there is no more remarkable prophecy in the Bible for today than the words of Dan. 2:32, 33, 42, 43, with regard to the great image seen in a dream by King Nebuchadnezzar: "This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

Now, the arresting thing is the element of clay; "his feet part of iron and part of clay" (v. 33); "the iron mixed with the miry clay" (v. 42); "the toes and the feet, part of iron and part of clay" (v. 42); "thou sawest iron mixed with the miry clay" (v. 43). Read in the lurid light of the events of the last few years, these verses are arresting to a degree.

Of course, no true believer can afford to accept the interpretations of the Pagan infidel, Porphryry, popularized by modern German rationalists, that the Book of Daniel contains no prophetic elements, and was written by some literary forger in the days of the Maccabees. With a myriad of other Christians, the writer believes that Daniel's great image represents monarchy during the Times of the Gentiles, and also delineates the gradual tendency through the ages to the principles of democratic right in government. The gold head (Dan. 2:32-37) represents monarchy absolute, a sole autocracy; the silver breast and arms, the Medo-Persian phase, monarchy plus the aristocracy; the body and thighs of brass, the Macedonian phase, monarchy plus the aristocracy, plus the military, a new phase emerging; the legs of iron, and the feet part iron and part clay, the Roman Empire, with monarchy, plus aristocracy, plus the military, plus the people, as set forth in the Latin symbol, S. P. Q. R., Senatus Populus Que Romanus, the Roman senate and people, the rights of the people being politically recognized.

Down through the ages, and through the ten (more or less) kingdoms in which, as was notorious, the Roman Empire was divided, and is divided today; the eastern and the western sections representing the two mighty divisions of the thighs, and being broken into the various kingdoms into which the face of modern Europe has been divided. As the eye of the prophet became illumined by the Holy Spirit, he saw in the wonderful vision the final phase of the Times of the Gentiles before the Coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And there he saw—what? He saw what we see with eyes of amazement today—the coming into view of the clay, as a ruling power, in the place of autocracy, monarchy, and the might of emperors and kings.

The Rise of Bolshevism.

Now, the marvelous thing to the writer is this. Not that the clay stands for democracy in the sense of the people coming into the rights of liberty, justice, and a living wage, free education, better housing, voting privileges, and the like. Not merely that the prophet here saw the tumbling of crowns, and the crumbling of thrones, and the displacement of ancient kingdoms and kings, and the unbelievable rise in a day of republic after republic, which is indeed marvelous. No one could ever have believed that within the last few years the face of Europe would be fairly evenly divided between five republics and five monarchies; Britain, Belgium, Holland, Spain, Italy, still have kings, and France, Switzerland, Portugal, Germany and Austria now being republics.

But the more marvelous thing seems to be that the prophecy of Daniel refers to the clay taking the position of monarchy, and the autocracy of a ruling power. In other words, what Daniel foresaw, was the menace of Bolshevism, and communistic tyranny. He saw the people, not merely claiming their rights as people, as subjects obedient to law and rejoicing in liberty, order, and legal rule; but rather a mysterious uprising of the people in their strain after rule —their claim to the right of the sceptre of dominion, and of world dominion. In one word, the clay, as a part of the monarchic image, seems to represent the noisy, truculent, uncontrolled dictatorship of the proletariat. If Daniel had lived in 1917 and 1928, he could not have more literally described that strong uprising of the clay into its place of power, with its cry: "Down with all authority and law."

The writer had in his hand as he wrote a pamphlet, circulated through some of our largest cities, in which the writer made a fiery appeal to the working classes to unite with the soldiers to overthrow the capitalists of the world, and to take all power from existent government bodies. That these sentiments today are menacing the future of the world, no thoughtful man can deny.

Their objective is to divide mankind into two warring classes; ultimately to destroy all classes of society, save the communist working class, and in place of the nations of today to have a world combination of working class republics, dominated by the proletariat, and they by the central Bolshevistic government in Moscow, the capital of the world. And so in the name of the brotherhood of man, they would fain destroy all brotherhood, reduce to poverty and slavery all classes of people higher than the so-called laboring classes, and propagate the hideous doctrine of communistic murder under an anarchistic socialism which has its basis in atheism, and whose basic principles are: No Bible, therefore no rule nor authority; no Law, therefore no order, no obedience; Communism, therefore the destruction of the rights of man and the claims of God.

It was this Twentieth Century vision that the Spirit of God, the Revealer, gave to Daniel (Dan. 2:19-22, 28-30) about twenty-five hundred years ago, and if the writer's exegesis is correct—and he suggests it, not as final or exclusive, but as an interpretation for consideration—it looks as if we were in the final phase of the Times of the Gentiles. The next thing in the Divine program is the setting up by the God of Heaven "in the days of these kings", the monarchic kings, the iron, and of the communistic kings, the clay, of "The Kingdom which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. 2:44; Dan. 7:14)..

THE ONLY ALTERNATIVE

By A. Z. Conrad D. D.

TAKE it or leave it. There is no other alternative. Christianity is not the complicated thing many would have us believe. It professes to be a revealed religion. As such it is nowise conditioned on human opinion. It is revelation or it is not. If it is, then it is not a matter for discussion except as to application. If it is not, then it can make no claim to recognition. If it fails to be what it pretends to be it is unworthy of further regard. It is utterly beyond the influence of mere human opinion. Its pre-eminent claim to acceptance is that God has spoken. Has He? Either He has or He has not. If He has, that settles it. If not, then why consider it at all? Now, the fact is, Christianity is all false or it is all true. It is no fanciful thing to be juggled with or to be used as a conjurer's wand.

Eccleticism has no more place in dealing with Bible Christianity than it has in dealing with the law of gravity. Christianity is not fanciful, it is factual. By no law of true thinking can the New Testament story of Jesus be made to be conditioned upon human acceptance. Either Jesus lived taught, worked, and died as the Gospels declare, or He did not. Either we have Salvation through the voluntary Sacrifice of Jesus Christ or we have no Salvation whatsoever, either from the guilt of sin or the love of sinning.

Either Christ was born of a virgin precisely as the Inspired Narrative proclaims, or no such person as Jesus is known to be historic. Either Christ rose from the dead or there is no guarantee that death does not end all. Juggling with words and trying to accept a part and deny the rest according to preference or caprice is simply ridiculous.

The erudition and the intellectuality of any man or any group of men does not qualify for an interpretation of the supernatural. It is not a question of what God Almighty might have done; the question is what did He do to save a lost world.

The Gospel is good news or the world has no good news. The very significance of the term itself would indicate that a message of extraordinary import and incomparable satisfaction has been given to the world. There it stands despite the caviling and contentions of men. Take it or leave it. Not even God can compel acceptance of it, against predetermined and persistent opposition.

There,too, Christ stands. Take Him or leave Him. It is just as simple as that. What you cannot do is this: you cannot take the Gospels in part and reject them in part. They constitute a unit of truth. This unit is unbreakable. The moment you repudiate the authority of the Bible you have no Christianity. It stands or falls with the credibility and the reliability and the authenticity of the whole.

Christianity presents the conditions and the provisions of pardon for sin. Take it and be saved, leave it and be lost. Now that is the hard, cold, simple fact. No living mortal ever did or ever will guarantee Salvation apart from Jesus Christ.

If you do not believe the Bible, then make no claim to being a Christian. You may make a claim to being religious, but not to being a Christian. Christianity is wholly identified with the Gospels just as we have them. If you reject Christianity yourself, which has been such an unspeakable comfort and source of power to accounted multitudes, why is it necessary to go about unsettling the faith of those who do find salvation and peace in the acceptance of the Word at its face value?

So far not one thing has ever been presented by scientists or philosophers that has in any degree met the deep want of the human soul, conscious of its own transgressions.

When praised by the Athenians, Pericles said: "The most praiseworthy fact of my life you have not mentioned; it is this: no Athenian has ever been caused to put on mourning through any act or word of mine." There are thousands of men, blind guides of the blind, who have caused their fellowmen to put on mourning because they have robbed them of their faith. Of all banditry the very worst is that which robs a man or woman of saving faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour.

A deleted Gospel is not merely a diminished Gospel, it is a destroyed Gospel. A Gospel without the supernatural is like a watch without a mainspring. It may retain the outward form, but is not rythmic with the spheres. It does not do the one thing a real watch does, viz., keep time.

The Christ of the Gospels is not "the Man that nobody knows". The Jesus of that book is utterly fictitious. Nobody knows such a Jesus because he never existed. The Jesus whom regenerated disciples do know is the Christ who was born of Mary, supernatural as the true Son of God; who wrought miracles, who died voluntarily on Calvary; who redeemed a lost world, who rose again from the dead, just as He had predicted, and who ascended to "The Glory which He had with the Father before the world was". This same Jesus is today the intercessor of believers, the strength of the sad, the comfort of sufferers and the companion of all who are willing to obey and trust Him. He is not the Man that nobody knows. Every one whose life has been trustfully surrendered to the Jesus of the Gospels, "Knows Him".

And how is He known by His disciples? From the fact of His indwelling in the soul and the fact produced in life and character. "His Spirit witnesseth with our Spirit that we are the Sons of God." You can no more reject miracles and keep Jesus Christ as a Saviour, than you can reject the sun in the heavens and keep the solar system. Artificial light, however brilliant, is not sunlight. It is utterly futile to waste time arguing with men who deliberately mutilate the Word of God until it is eviscerated, emasculated and fragmentary.

The gospel of modernism is no more a gospel of salvation than is Buddhism or Mohammedanism. It is merely the shell of the acorn with the potential oak missing. Until the grace of God has done its regenerating work in the heart, man is no more able to pass on the Christian doctrines than a deaf man is to pass on an oratoria, or a symphony. Neither philosophy nor science can ever give to the world healing for its hurt, nor balm for its wounds.

Speculation about the possibility of forgiveness without an atonement is just as valuable as a dissertation on the kind of a world God might have made, but did not. The fact is unalterably true, that God did provide an atonement. The atonement He provided is clearly revealed in God's Word. It is adequate. It works. Take it or leave it. If you take it you have peace and assurance of life everlasting. If you leave it, you leave sin with its virus, leading steadily toward wreck and nothing can eliminate it or change the fact.

Could not God have forgiven sin without the death of Christ? Certainly not, or He would have done so. There was a moral necessity. Only that moral necessity ever lifted Calvary's Cross. The fact of the Cross is incontrovertible. The full and final meaning of it is hidden within the counsels of the Infinite. No explanation beyond that of the Gospel as we have it satisfies. Jesus Christ does not need fully to be explained. He does need to be savingly known. Trust and acceptance of the Jesus of the Gospels results in clarity of vision, whereby He is spiritually visualized and sufficiently known to meet every spiritual requirement.

Once more, let us say Christianity is not theoretical, but factual. There it stands in all of its completeness and beauty. It is subject to neither revision, modification, nor improvement. It is perfect in all of its provisions. It is adequate to every human requirement. You can no more tamper with it and still leave it affective than you can qualify or limit the Infinite Personality. You may deny it if you will, but "God manifest in the flesh" and the fact that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures" are unalterable facts constituting the very essence of Christianity. Take it or leave it. You cannot change it, you cannot improve upon it. It stands.—Bible Champion.

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

XII.

HAVING asked some pertinent question regarding those who may not be embraced in the translation of 1 Thess. 4:13-18, we are now to consider what awaits those who have shared in that honor. We have emphasized the dignity of standing before the Son of Man as disclosed in Luke 21:34-36. There is ample room for our contemplation of this wonderful privilege in the various passages which imply its verity and significance. In 2 Cor. 5:10, we have a sound platform upon which to stand as this perspective opens to us. A permissible translation of this text would read, "We must all be manifested before the Bema of Jesus Christ that every one may receive in his body (the resurrection or translation body of vs. 1-4) the things he has done, whether good or worthless." Let us strongly urge that this is but a tribunal for the bestowment of rewards. The word Bema may be construed to mean the raised dais on which sat the superintendent of the Grecian games, when conferring the laurels upon the successful competitors. St. Paul has this scene in mind, when expatiating on the winning of the crown, he pleads, "Lest having preached to others I should be rejected (a castaway)", 1 Cor. 9:25-27. There is also in his commentary of the gain or the loss of reward in 1 Cor. 3:11-15 a like comprehension of the responsibility of being a believer. He shows how a man may be saved, and yet miss the joy of meriting the highest honor which the King longs to confer. Herein lies the significance of our Lord's parables of the talents and the pounds (Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 19:12-27). We do well, then, to appraise our position and responsibilities as related to this judgment seat.

Not a judgment for sin,

Once more, let us assure our hearts that we do not stand before the Bema of Jesus Christ that our sins may be exposed and our guilt determined. For, to the spiritual Christian,

The judgment for sin is forever past.

It was met on Calvary's cross by the Judge Himself. This is a marvellous mystery; and in our weak understanding we are slow to apprehend it. Traditionally, we have been taught that when He comes, He will scrutinize our unhappy past and punish us according to our deserts. If such were the revealed truth, we should have ground for dreading His coming; and in that case, it would cease to be a "blessed hope" (Titus 2:13); and we should have scant impulse to "love His appearing" (2 Tim. 4:8). No. Thank God. Our sins are done away through His meritorious redemption. Let us apply our hearts to this marvellous provision:

Even in the Old Testament, the saints of God obtained a vista of the greatness of God's mercy. David exclaims, "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us" (Ps. 103:12). Hezekiah triumphed in the truth that God had cast his sins behind His back (Isa. 38:17). Micah rejoices that our sins are sunk into the depths of the sea (Micah 7:19). Through the prophet Isaiah we discern the divine provision that as a thick cloud on a summer day, our sins are blotted out (Isa. 44:22). And in the light of the incarnation, the glory of this benign attitude of Deity becomes more lustrous. The trumpet call to freedom is sounded by the Apostle, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 8:1). This is an echo of our Lord's promise, "He that heareth my words and believeth on him that sent me, shall not come into condemnation" (John 5:24). To Him there could be only one sin that could defeat this great heartedness; and that, the rejection of Himself (John 3:19). Again we hear the exultant call of the Apostle, "God hath made him (our Lord Jesus) to be sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in him" (2 Cor. 5:21); which is taken up by St. Peter, "He himself bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin should live unto righteousness" (1 Peter 2:24). And the paen is continued by St. John, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7); and again in the Revelation, "Unto him that loved us and washed (loosed) us from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. 1:5). The song of the rejoicing hosts is, "Thou hast redeemed us by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation" (Rev. 5:9, 10). And we are further emboldened to stand upon a firm foundation when we aver that the inner impulse of salvation lies in

The longing of God to forgive sinners.

In the incomparable parables of Luke 15, the pity-love of God for the lost sheep, the possessor-love of God in the lost coin are surmounted by the parental-love of God for the lost son. If a current writer makes bold to declare that "repentance is the sick-bed of the soul", we respond to the affirmation, that the secret of repentance should not be a cause of a cowardly fear of reaping the fruit of our guilt if we are not forgiven, but that it affords supreme gratification to the heart of God that we should be thus disposed towards His desire to restore us to Himself. That was not a superficial orientation of our Lord Jesus which moved Him to say, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke 15: 7, 10). May this soul-warming truth challenge our thought and dedication.

And still more, the portraiture of the "tender mercy of our God" (Luke 1:77, 78) is enhanced by the evidently superlative purpose of God in that

He not only forgives, but forgets sins, impossible as this may seem to us. Jeremiah, speaking for God in the contemplation of the ultimate restoration of the nation, echoes Isaiah's prediction (Isa. 43:25), "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more" (Jer. 31:34; 50:20). And the writer of the Hebrews carries this truth over into the New Testament, transferring the provision to the life of the individual Christian (Heb. 8:12; 10:17). Can it be possible for me? may every child of God exclaim. To question it in the spirit of unbelief must be a grief to Him. So appreciating and appropriating our exalted estate, we go a step further and ask, as we perceive the revelation of the divine affection for all penitents, forgiven, restored and born-anew,

"What does God think of me?"

Our first vision of His great-heartedness is in that matchless declaration of Jer. 29:11, "I know the thoughts I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil to give you an end and expectation". David had already discovered this perspective of the love of the Deity in Ps. 40:5; 139:17, "Thy thoughts which are to usward cannot be reckoned, they are more than can be numbered"; "How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God; how great is the sum of them."

We must admit the testimony of our Lord's mind concerning us, when in His prayer to His Father, He premises our superlative accession to the very love of the Father which He Himself enjoyed (John 17:20-23). And the outflowing of grace on Pentecost confirms and enlarges this perspective.

Forgiven sinners are partakers of the divine nature by this completed relation (2 Peter 1:4). We are called "holy brethren" (Heb. 3:1), "dear children" (Eph. 5:1); and because we are translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of the Son of His love (Col. 1:13), we are made complete in Him, in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwells (Col. 1:19; 2:9, 10). And all this, waits not until we have left our bodies and entered into Paradise, but is our present calling and privilege.

We have purposely entered upon this excursus that our faith may be more deeply settled. For while, as by nature we are alien to God, essentially the "children of wrath" (Eph. 1:1-3) and may most properly in that category call ourselves "miserable sinners", our position in the Son of God as children of God exalts us to the heavenlies with Him (Eph. 2:4-10). Let us remark concerning this provision, that we "sit with Him". Angels are said to stand in the presence of God (Luke 1:19). Can we rise to the altitude of this provision? If we do, we shall grow more and more humble, as we confess how utterly unworthy we are of this ennoblement.

And we have traversed this territory of truth that may be able to disabuse our minds of our inherited notion that we shall have to answer for our sins at the tribunal of which this section of our study treats. So, since on the cross our sins were put away (Heb. 9:26); since by the resurrection of the Son of God we are partakers of His life and honor, there is room for the final brief word that Stewardship for the King demands an accounting.

We belong to a working family (John 5:17) and reward for service is consequential. That is the meaning of this judgment seat of Christ which is the focal point of our present study. The portraiture of the passage in 1 Cor. 3: 11-15 is illustrative. Upon the foundation we must build something. It is for us to say whether it shall be wood, hay or stubble; or gold, silver or precious stones. The fire of His scrutiny will try our work. We cannot escape it. We may, like the man rushing from a burning building with nothing but his clothes upon his back, be saved from the fire of utter condemnation; we may, as the Apostle admonishes us, obtain an "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:10, 11).

THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EASTER

COLLECT.

Almighty God, who showest to them that are in error the light of Thy truth to the intent that they may return into the way of righteousness; Grant unto all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion, that they may avoid those things that are contrary to their profession, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same; through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ALL those who are sworn under Christ's banner," not only for us older ones do we pray, who have been long sworn to obedience and allegiance to the great Captain of our salvation, but also, and especially, for you younger soldiers of the Cross, that your consistent Christian lives may be a light to those in error, and lead them also to follow Christ. The burden of this Collect is Christian consistency, and it comes from the Epistle, in which St. Peter very earnestly urges us to walk worthy of our calling (Eph. 4:1). "Almighty God, who showest to them that are in error the light of Thy truth". Light is one of the most common symbols of truth in all literature, and especially in the Bible. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus tells His disciples (Matt. 5.14): "Ye are the light of the world."

Observe in this our Collect for third Sunday after Easter a good definition of the Church of Christ, into which we have been admitted by baptism; "the fellowship of Christ's religion". 'Tis a "Fellowship" binding us together, and it is a "Religion" from the Latin word, religio, a binding fast; what binds us fast to Christ. And let us bear often in mind, to help us in leading the new life, the consistent Christian life, for which we pray in this Collect, the prayer offered for us in our confirmation by the Bishop and congregation; "that we may be defended with Thy heavenly grace, and may continue Thine forever, and daily increase more and more in Thy Holy Spirit, until we come to Thine everlasting kingdom".

THE Epistle is St. Peter 2:11-17.

As in the Collect we have prayed that we and all who are admitted into the "fellowship of Christ's religion" may lead a life consistent with our profession; so here St. Peter gives us wholesome instruction how to live "a godly, righteous and sober life", to the glory of His holy name, and so we pray, after confessing our sins, in "General Confession" at Morning and Evening Prayer. The glory of His Holy Name is to be our chief object in all things; so here St. Peter assures us that if we lead such a life, glory will be given to God by them "in the day of visitation", i. e., when God the Holy Ghost shall visit them, and they, too, be converted, and glorify God. St. Peter seems here to be recalling the words used by Jesus, when He taught Peter and the other disciples on the Mount, telling them that they must be light-bearers for the world (Matt. 5:16), and so shine before men that they seeing the good works of Christians (their "conversation", Peter calls it) may glorify, not the Christians, not the light-bearers, who shine only so far as they reflect the light of the Sun of righteousness, but Him who is the source of all light and truth, our Father in heaven.

Our Epistle begins with St. Peter's instruction how to live the Christian life. "Dearly beloved (he says); I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul," or (as in R. V.) as sojourners and pilgrims. I like the word "sojourners" here, because it is the word used by David in his last prayer and thanksgiving, a short time before his death (as given in 1 Chron. 29:15), where he dwells upon the vanity of human life; saying, "We are strangers before Thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding". And in same prayer our entire dependence on God is forcibly set forth in the sentence (the last of the offertory sentences): "All things come of thee (O Lord), and of Thine own have we given Thee." No stronger motive could be given by the Apostle to keep us from "fleshly lusts which war against the soul", than to bear in mind always this great truth that we in this world are "sojourners and pilgrims", not yet at home.

The Christian has a far stronger motive than self-interest to lead him to "abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul"; it is love, not self-love, but "the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge: that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that He died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again". The latter part of our Epistle (more than half of it) is St. Peter's instruction to guide our behaviour toward the civil authority: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." We miss the full force of this injunction, unless we bear in mind that this letter of St. Peter's was written about A. D. 60, in the reign of Nero (54-68), sixth of the twelve Caesars, and the last of Julian blood, one of the worst emperors, and, perhaps, one of the worst rulers that ever lived, and written, too, in the latter part of his reign, not in the first five years ("Quinquennium") of it, in which his rule was just and clement through the counsels of Seneca and Burrus. It was from this teaching of St. Peter, and like teaching of St. Paul to Titus (Tit. 3:1), and Jesus' submission to Jewish magistrates, and to Roman authority under Tiberias (as cruel a tyrant as Nero), that the clergy under the Stuart kings of England deduced their teaching of "passive obedience", however great the tyranny to which the Christian is subjected. Macaulay shows to what an extreme this teaching was carried.

And Macaulay goes on to show how under certain degrees of tyranny obedience to "the powers that be" ceases to be virtue. Yet, it is difficult to draw the line where the obedience commands by Paul and Peter to the ordinances of man should cease, and (human nature being what it is) lest we refuse obedience too soon. But this difficulty arises only as to unjust laws and ordinances, like King James II's order to the clergy to read the Declaration of Indulgence to their people (for refusing which the seven bishops went to the Tower), and the Stamp Act of King George III, and Lincoln's Proclamation calling for 75,000 men to force the seceding States back into the Union. As to immoral laws, like those of the Jewish Sanhedrin, forbidding the Apostles "to speak in the name of Jesus", there can be no doubt; Peter and John's reply to this command rings out clear: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than uoto God, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (Act 4:19-20). But in questions not moral, as a general rule, the two short sentences with which our Epistle ends, are a good guide: "Fear God; Honor the King," so far as we may do so in the fear of God; but no further.

THE Gospel is St. John 16:16-22. A very beautiful and touching Gospel it is, being taken from our Lord's discourse in the Passover chamber, on the night before His Crucifixion. The burden of it is, "a little while", which occurs seven times in this Gospel. They were to lose Him for a little while, only three days, the three most eventful days of the world's history, in which were His death and Resurrection, and He tries to comfort them; for they would not have the Comforter in all the fulness of His power to comfort, till later, when He should come at Pentecost to comfort them for that second departure of Jesus, at His Ascension, a far longer one than these three days, to be with His Father and their Father, at His right hand in glory. Now, this great loss, which was to be their great gain (and ours), was a mystery to them, not to be fully understood, till the Holy Ghost should fill their hearts.

Jesus now comforts them by an assurance of His Father's love for them.

Jesus tells them, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full (John 16:23-24). And He tells them also, "The Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God". (John 16:27.) Then His disciples declare their full belief in Him: "By this we believe that Thou camest forth from God", and a belief most comfortable, and in which they must have found at least some measure of the comfort their Lord sought to give them. But why does this loving and gracious Lord dash their joy so quickly by saying, "Do ye now believe? Behold the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every one to his own, and shall leave me alone". An answer to this question is to be found in the words of Psalm 119:75, "I know, O Lord . . . that Thou of very faithfulness hast caused me to be troubled". Looking into their hearts Jesus must have seen the real ground of their joy; that their Lord being One who came forth from God, must be a conquering, not a suffering Messiah, and so once more, and for the last time before His crucifixion, Jesus tries to make them understand that this, His first coming to the world, was for their Redemption from sin, not from Roman tyranny; and the last verse of the chapter sums it all up in words which have comforted many thousands, nay, millions of His faithful servants: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace; in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

In the next three days two great victories will be won: over Satan and over the grave, and these disciples, now so sad, can sing.

"Satan conquered and the grave, Jesus now is strong to save."

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

PSALMS.

Purpose.

The purpose of this precious portion of God's Word, the "Psalms", is to reveal to us the experience of Christ, and our experience in Him.

The experience of His people, individually and nationally, as far as they walked by faith, typifies the experience of Christ, because "in all their afflictions He was afflicted" (Isa. 63:9). He wept with those that wept, and rejoiced with those that rejoiced (Ps. 147:11; Rom. 12:15).

Christ was the Blessed, Righteous One, who experienced fully Ps. 1:1, 3; 3:2; 4:1; 8:2; 15; 31:15, 19; 34:6, 7; 37:4; 40:8; 119:11; 121.

The eye of faith beholds the suffering and glory of the Redeemer in the Psalms, as well as in every other portion of the volume of the Book (Ps. 40:7; Luke 24:44).

Book I. 1-41. Here we behold the "Blessed Man" walking in a path of separation unto God (Ps. 1:1-3; 4:3); enjoying the victory of faith (Ps. 8:2); laying down His life for others vicariously (Ps. 22:1-21); and raised from the dead to live forever in the presence of the Father for us (Ps. 16:10, 11; Heb. 9:24).

Blessed of God in Christ we cannot help but walk with Him in a path of separation unto God (Eph. 1:3; 5:1); there we enjoy victory as we trust and obey (Rom. 12:1, 2; 1 John 5:4); gladly we lay down our lives for others (not vicariously) (1 John 3:16; 2 Cor. 5:14); and knowing the power of His resurrection life, we are filled with joy unspeakable in the fellowship of His presence (Phil. 3:8-10; 1 Peter 1:8; 1 John 1:7).

Book II. 42-72. The longing for God of believing Israelites when in exile from their land was a Spirit begotten desire which was answered by the promise of restoration, when they turn to God with their whole heart (Ps. 43; 50:15; 51:12; 57:2; 60:1; 63:1; 66:10-12; 69:35, 36).

The experience of Israel in their afflictions pictures the experience of Christ who was afflicted in all their afflictions (Isa. 63:9; Ps. 66:11; 59:13-21; 70).

That we may be delivered from walking in our own way, and learn to walk in fellowship with the Lord in His way, He permits chastening to come upon us (Heb. 12:1-11; Amos 3:3; 1 John 1:7).

Book III. 73-89. This record of Israel's experience of forgetfulness and unfaithfulness to God is like a dark background that causes the unchanging and unchangeable love of Jehovah to stand out very prominently (Ps. 74:1; 77:7, 9, 10, 13; 78:11, 32, 38; 79:8; 81:11-16; 85:10; 89:1-4).

This book of the Psalms reveals the experience of the Son of David, the One who enjoyed the sure mercies of David (Ps. 73:1, 23-28; 74:10, 12; 75:1, 9; 77:1; 80:17; 84:5; 86:1-3; 89:27-37).

Great as were our sins, greater was the mercy of God which forgave them (Eph. 2:1-4). Great as is our sin of ingratitude and forgetfulness, greater far is His unfailing faithfulness to love and care for us, His own purchased ones (Heb. 13:5-8; 10:23; Rom. 8:37-39).

Book IV. 90-106. "Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him; I will set him on high, because he hath known my name" (Ps. 91:14).

This key verse reveals the purpose of God toward Christ, toward the believing remnant of Israel, and toward every member of His Church.

Christ set His love upon the Father, therefore, He delivered Him by raising Him from the dead (Ps. 40:8; Isa. 50:7; John 8:29; Acts 2:24).

The Father has exalted the Son to the highest place in the universe because He knew the Father's name, and was willing to humble Himself for us (Phil. 2:5-11; John 1:18; 17:6, 11, 12; Eph. 1:19-21).

This exalted One must come and reign over all the earth in righteousness, but not until He has a company of glorified ones to rule with Him (Heb. 2:5-8; 10:12, 13; Rev. 1:5, 6; 5:9, 10; 20:4, 6).

We will be exalted with Christ, and will rule with Him because we love Him, as the One who first loved us, and because we know His name (1 John 4:19; Acts 4:12; Rom. 8:29, 30).

The remnant of Israel will not worship the Antichrist because they will love and look for Jehovah to come, whose name they know.

Therefore, He will deliver them and set them on high as kings and priests to rule with Him on earth in the "age to come" (Zech. 2:13; Ps. 97:10; 103:17; Dan. 7:18, 27; Isa. 61:6).

Book V. 107-150. God's great purpose to bless the Seed of Abraham, and to make his seed a blessing, is first fulfilled in Christ (Gen. 22:17, 18; Gal. 3:16; Ps. 110).

Then in us, who are one in Christ, God will accomplish His purpose to His praise, by causing us to enjoy His blessings in Christ, and by making us a blessing (Heb. 6:13, 14, 16; Eph. 1:3; Rom. 8:1; 7:4).

From the day that the Lord took Israel by the hand to lead them out of Egypt, He has sought to bless them in such overflowing measure that they could not help but be a blessing to the nations of the earth.

This purpose He will perfect when He restores the remnant of Israel to the place of blessing, then the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea (Jer. 31:31-34; Ps. 144, 145, 147-150).

THE FOOL'S PRAYER

The royal feast was done; the king
Sought some new sport to banish care,
And to his jester called: "Sir Fool,
Kneel down and make for us a prayer."

The jester doffed his cap and bells,
And stood the mocking court before:
They could not see the bitter smile
Behind the painted grin he wore.

He bowed his head and bent his knee,
Upon the monarch's silken stool.
His pleading voice arose: "O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart
From red with wrong, to white as wool.
The rod must heal the sin, but, Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!

"'Tis not by guilt alone, the swing
Of truth and right, O Lord, we stay;
'Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from Heaven away.

"These clumsy feet, still in the mire,
Go crushing blossoms without end:
These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept.
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The words we had not sense to say,
Who knows how grandly it had rung?

"Our faults no tenderness should ask,
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
But for our blunders, Oh! in shame,
Before the eyes of Heaven we fall.

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes,
Men crown the knave and scourge the tool
That did his will, but Thou, O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
The king, and sought his gardens cool,
And walked apart and murmured low,
"Be merciful to me, a fool!"

WHITHER MANKIND? A Drama of Modern Civilization: By fourteen well-known writers, among whom, Hendrik W. Van Loon, Bertrand Russell, Emil Ludwig and John Dewey. Cloth. Pp. 408. Published by Longmans, Green and Company, New York City. Price, $3.

The mention of the above authors will at once establish the character of this remarkable production. Ludwig's penchant for history in his "War and Peace", is ably illustrated. John Dewey is at home in his treatment of "Philosophy". Bertrand Russell, who followed Aristotle in his search for the secret of life, once voiced his convictions in the statement that "mathematics, rightly viewed, possesses not only the truth but supreme beauty", is still in the field of inquiry as he discusses "Science". And Hendrik Van Loon, self-poised and ever self-sufficient, masterfully discusses "Ancient and Medieval Civilizations"; Havelock Ellis treats of "The Family" and deals with frankness the ever-present sex problem. All of the writers are strong in a sense of the doubtful trend of mankind. Hence the title. We who are simple enough to take God at His Word, know what is the future of mankind. But it is interesting to see how these knowing men state the perplexity and leave the solution uneffected. A good book to have, though. For it is packed full of valuable information.

THE IMPATIENCE OF A PARSON: By H. R. L. Sheppard. Doubleday, Doran Company, Garden City, N. J. Price, $2.

To young people for whom Church has become naught but pious phrases pronounced with neither understanding nor sympathy for the younger generation's point of view, and to older people for whom Church has no more appeal, who feel that Christianity should have been a good thing, but where is it to be found and really what is it after all, this book should bring a glorious awakening, to the reality of Christianity, to the Christ's powerful, forceful vitality, to the joy of fellowship with Christ.

The book was evidently written as a plea for applying the Christian ideals of love and self-sacrifice at the next Lambeth Conference, but first it is a plea to apply Christ's Gospel of love to our individual lives.

Mr. Sheppard has advanced some theories which by no means have to be accepted in order for his readers to receive his great teaching.

In spite of them, "The Impatience of a Parson" should prove a stimulant and a blessing to us all. We so-called Christians need more and more impatience in finding and following Jesus Christ. S. C. W.

THE ORIGINS OF SYNAGOGUE AND CHURCH: By the late Dr. Kaufmann Kohler. Cloth. Pp. 297. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City. Price, $3.

An epochal contribution to the religious literature of the day. Dr. Kaufmann is at home in the critical study of the New Testament, as in his own field as a Jewish rabbi with the books of the Old Testament and the voluminous writings supplementary to it. He carries us through the interesting spheres of development of the synagogue life, consequent to the dispersion of the Jews in Roman colonies and on to the days of the restored temple which lead to the period of our Lord's dwelling among men.

The origin and growth of the sects with whom our Lord came into contact is here traced with fidelity; and the Christian reader comes to understand much that, unaided by this profound research, he would miss. And with remarkable facility, this learned Jew goes into the discussion of the birth and development of the early Christian Church, related especially to existing Jewish spirit and order.

His statement, "Jesus was by no means a social reformer," is a quiet rebuke to professing Christians who constantly harp upon this one string. Spiritual Christians regard Him as the incarnated Son of God, here on earth, first to do the will of God and then to meet the powers of darkness on the Cross for the redemption of the world. Wherever He touched social problems, He evaded any suggestion to become an instrument for upturning the social order. The rather, He would purify the old without disrupting it. Here Dr. Kohler is wiser than many Christian sociologists.

What cheers us most in this truly remarkable book, is the evidence of the approach of the Jew to the Son of David. For many Jews are now reading enquiringly, the New Testament. We may not now see him acknowledging the Messianic claims of our Lord; but he is getting ready for light; and is showing a commendable spirit in the ardor with which he pursues his quest. What the Holy Spirit will do with individuals who are thus disposed to surrender ancient race prejudices and hatreds, the prayers and attitude of devout Christians will determine. For God cannot work without our cooperation. May we sincerely accept the challenge in this day of vital, thrilling transformation. For "with God all things are possible".

We could wish that in addition to the valuable appendix, there should have been an informative and suggestive index. The work is worthy of such a channel of information, heightening its interest and effectiveness.

HENRI BERGSON. By Jacques Chevalier. Translated by Lilian A. Clare. Cloth; pp. 351. Published by the Macmillan Co., New York City. Price, $2.50.

Those who have read Will Durant's The Story of Philosophy will be acquainted with Bergson and his ideality. This larger contribution to the man and his message will invite a closer study.

The chapter which most engrosses us, as believers in the Word of God, and the longest, is that relating to his book, Creative Evolution. Some of us have been told to claim that creation, involving intelligent purpose, and evolution are determinedly opposed. All radical evolutionists have urged that there is no possible affinity by which they can be reconciled. Indeed, the first announcements of evolution were coupled with the slogan that it would be the death-knell of Christianity.

Bergson, while not taking a distinctive Christian attitude, has the prevailing notion of Theistic evolutionists, that God and evolution can be harmonized. However, Bergson avers that evolution is not a fact but a hypothesis. And, true to the philosopher's method of reasoning, he would ascertain upon what facts the hypothesis may rest.

Still, he confesses that when he has correlated species and forms, they do not appear to be derived from one another, even by sudden leaps, in a continuous line. He cannot find continuous development, for it is impossible to connect them with a common trunk; and that, of the origin and derivation of all these forms, we know nothing. And there is just where evolution has stood all through the more than half century of its turbulent life. The author's testimony is striking, "Pretending to reduce life to physics and chemistry in the desire to avoid the mysterious, has not only multiplied it, but has infinitely augmented its complexity and its irrationality". To our comfort, he declares, in summing up Bergson's ideality, "Bergson has provided fresh reasons for faith and hope; he has imparted to our minds a fresh impetus towards truth". But how much more alluring is the vital assurance of the Lord Jesus, "I am the way, the truth and the life". As we wade through these ponderous tomes, enriched by scholarship and evidencing indefatigible pursuit, how simple and satisfying is the cheering declaration of the Apostle, "In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (John 14:6; Col. 2.3).

The author has displayed a loyal attachment to the man whom he reveres as putting philosophy upon a new footing, wherein the purely mechanistic interpretation of creation is counter-balanced by a spiritual concept of life and its ultimate destiny.

A valuable index closes the book, by which the reader may select for special reference those topics most desired for enlightenment.

WITH AND WITHOUT CHRIST. By Sadhu Sundar Singh. Harper Brothers, New York City. Price, $1.50.

To one who has read with very real pleasure and interest the story of Sadhu Sundar Singh's life, telling of his wonderful Christian experiences, "With and Without Christ", written by himself, is a real spiritual treat. One feels the inspiration and elevation of thought which comes from association with a genuine child of God. All he says breathes such an unshakable faith in God our Father and Christ our Saviour that one cannot fail to be impressed. Not to read this book is to miss a great opportunity.

FUNDAMENTALISM VS. MODERNISM.

Mr. Editor:

I am enclosing my check for $3.00, paying up my overdue subscription. While I often disagree with a lot of views spread in print in the Southern Churchman, I am an old-fashioned Virginian, and can't very well have a satisfied feeling when the paper is not in my home each week.

Our Diocese (Northern Indiana) is rated, I guess, as "High Church", "Catholic", etc. We have a dandy good young Southerner (Campbell Gray) for Bishop. I guess he's rated "High Church". I, myself, am "Low Church"—just as low church as you can find. The services here at Christ Church, Gary, when Bishop Gray comes to officiate are about like what I was accustomed to thirty years ago at St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, Virginia. Sometimes when I visit back at Haymarket nowdays I am inclined to think that they are more "High Church" there than we are here in Gary.

Out here we sort of respect each other, the high church and the low church, and I think that the result is we have thereby a greater appreciation of the ESSENTIALS, and a realization that the superficialities are not the whole thing worth "hollering about" as we go along trying to be Christians. I like my Bishop. I think that he likes me. I suspect that he is a good Democrat. I get along fine with him.

And this brings me to the point of saying something about things I read in the Southern Churchman—about "Modernists" and "Fundamentalists", the Episcopal Church vs. "unholy Romanism".

I take it that the Southern Churchman aspires to a place of leadership in church periodicals for the so-called fundamentalist group, as against the present day modernist. And I want to be listed as a rock-ribbed fundamentalist. I approve what I read in your paper concerning those who apparently are seeking to shake the faith of Christians, and cast doubt in the minds of those who receive religious comfort from the teachings set forth in the Apostles' Creed.

And if such is our common goal, i. e., to hold the faithful true to the Church's teachings of fundamental belief as set forth in the Apostles' Creed—do we not make a great mistake when we do and say and put to print things which are calculated to disparage, perhaps, the greatest FUNDAMENTALIST GROUP of Christians? I refer to our Roman Catholic brethren.

Show me another Christian group with a more simple faith of acceptance of the Triune God, the conception of the Virgin by the Holy Spirit, the resurrection and the ascension, the Communion of Saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the dead and the life hereafter. And the Bible? Don't overlook the fact that Catholic children are getting the teaching of the Bible. It wonder if Protestant children are getting much of the Bible taught them nowdays? I wonder if they are going to any church on Sundays?

And so I maintain that all this fuss that we read so much about in your paper; all this dissertation concerning the "horrors of Romanism" is improper in us low church Virginia Fundamentalists. It is just a case of one fundamentalist crowd saying mean things concerning the greatest fundamentalist group of all.

And it makes poor reading for the people in Virginia. They need better leadership in these times. Somethings's wrong down there. It's embarrassing to me making apology for the intelligence of Virginia. * * *

Please publish this communication, as I think that the reading of it will serve a very real purpose.

HAVE PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIANS NO REDRESS?

Mr. Editor:

I am receiving a great many letters from laymen residing in different sections of the country. Among them is one which I quote below, omitting names, as I do not have permission to publish the latter. I wonder if it will suggest anything to Bishops and Clergy. Here is the letter:

"March 28, 1929.

Mr. C. L. Marsilliot,
National Secretary,
Protestant Episcopal Church League,
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Sir:

I am disgusted with the way and manner in which our Bishop ———— of ———— Diocese, with his Clergy, are putting over the High Church, or Romish, innovations all around us here, and particularly at ———— Church, in this city, where the rector persists in carrying out what appears to be a definite plan, to which he says he got the Bishop's consent before he accepted the call to this Parish. He has had put in an Aumbrye in the church of which I, at the time, was a vestryman. I strenuously objected to the reservation of the Sacrament. Three weeks ago he had Bishop ———— consecrate a statue of the Virgin Mary in the sacristy. He holds regular confessions every Saturday afternoon, and many other minor usages, crossing himself, bowing to the altar cross, prostrating himself during parts of the Communion Service and many other unnecessary motions.

To all of this I protest. In fact, I will not go to my church, and have not been for over one year, nor do I intend attending, because it is not the Protestant Episcopal Church I joined forty years ago in ————, under Bishop ————. I am, therefore, following John Wesley's way by attending the Methodist Episcopal Church. But I did love my dear church before this High Churchman rector came here. There is no other Protestant Episcopal Church here. I have been seriously considering taking my name from the list of ———— Church's membership, as I see no hope, under our present Bishop and rector, of a change being effected.

Wishing you success,

Yours very truly,

————."

This letter comes from a man of prominence in his community, a member of the church for forty years, who, not only as a vestryman, but in many other ways, has been active in its service.

This letter is typical of many coming from widely separated communities.

Is it possible that this sort of thing is to continue until every loyal Protestant Episcopalian is driven from his Church, leaving control of it in the hands of those who say their purpose is to "Catholocize" and unite it with Rome?

Have Protestant Episcopalians no redress against this sort of thing, except to seek some other Church affiliation?

Are the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church to be cast aside in order that loyal Protestant Episcopalians may be driven from it?

C. L. Marsilliot.

OF MY FOREFATHERS.

Mr. Editor:

Enclosed please find my cheque to your order for $6.00 in settlement of my subscription to your paper.

I certainly enjoy reading the Southern Churchman, and would not be without it for anything in the world. It has been the paper of my forefathers, and I insist on my family reading it every Sunday.

ST. STEPHEN'S SOURCE OF RELIGIOUS INSPIRATION.

Mr. Editor:

In the Southern Churchman of February 23, 1929, there was published an extract from a letter of one of the readers stating that St. Stephen's College is a place where young men lose all their belief in Christianity, and that the president is a radical. I am writing in order that I may correct the entirely wrong impression given by that poorly informed individual.

My ambition is to be a scientist, and I would like to remind this "reader' that contrary to all laws of correct thinking he has drawn a general conclusion based on two individual cases. St. Stephen's does not believe in tying a blindfold over a man's eyes and then leading him into the ministry, she does not believe that the ministry is the place for those who are unfit for other situations in life; she believes in showing all the facts that science can offer, all the sociological problems that are to be confronted, and by daily chapel service to instill in a man the love of Christ. Then if the candidate is man enough he can go forward as a real power to aid the Church.

I came to college without feeling one way or another about Christ and the Church. I have been able in my four years here to conquer doubt, and next month I am to be confirmed. I attribute this firm religious foundation which I have now to two things: first, to the religious atmosphere at St. Stephen's; and, secondly, to the stimulating and helpful teaching of Dr. Bell. Those who feel that he is a "notorious radical" had better look to themselves as the source of the Church's ennui.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11).

This week the following verses were submitted by Miss Ellie D. Bouldin, of Washington, D. C.:

"Teach me thy way, O Lord, and lead me in a plain path, * * * "—Ps. 27:11.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."—Proverbs 3:6.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

Church Intelligence

The American Library of Munich.

The following is a quotation from the Easter letter of the Rev. James Sheerin, rector of our church in Munich, Germany. Besides the church there is a good sized library and reading room known and loved by all visiting tourists as "The American Library". As the church's income, now increased threefold over what it was two years ago, is both inadequate and precarious, it is thought that some former users of the library might care to become contributing members at an annual payment of five dollars. They could in that case have all the privileges when visiting Munich without further payment, or they could give a card to some traveling friend securing for him or her the same advantage. There are nearly 10,000 books in English, besides daily papers and magazines.

Students from a score of universities in England and America are greatly interested in the library as a social centre, from fifty or sixty of them coming together to tea Sunday afternoons, and a goodly number appearing regularly in the church services. This is a good work, justifying alone continued outside support, as the average student is not able to help much in meeting necessary expenses.

"I have felt that a simple service, depending chiefly on congregational singing, with no elaborate music, but hymns and sermons stressing only the note of personal comfort and social helpfulness, aiming to be so genuinely and simply Christian as to be appealingly helpful to Christians of all names—I was convinced that this would be by far the best plan. It is consoling to have people say, Sunday after Sunday, that the plan has had some success. Personal words and letters from many parts of the world testify to a success in this respect that encourages one to keep on trying.

"The three elements that should be reached and helped in a church like this are, primarily, the traveler who can be here only a few days or a few weeks and months, and is delighted to find the old Gospel words and ways available; the students of many universities and colleges, American or English, who find their way to the Munich university, and with them the many others, not university students, who are in Munich to perfect themselves in German or in the various esthetic arts; and then, lastly, the comparative few who have their homes here, and do not want to lose touch with the religion and language of their 'old home'."

Program Suggestions for G. F. S.

Two new booklets containing program suggestions have been issued by the Girls' Friendly Society in America for use throughout the country. "Life situations", problems that children have to face in every-day life, games, stories, suggestions for handiwork, and worship services are included in Ourselves and Our Neighbors, the program suggestions for work with girls from six to twelve years old. In the booklet for girls in their teens and older, Program Suggestions for Every Branch, the programs are grouped around three main projects: Personal Problems of Girls, The Girl and Her Community, and Africa. There are discussion topics, worship services, plays, games, stories, and service enterprises suggested under each project.

Although planned originally for the branches of the Girls' Friendly Society, these program pamphlets are equally suitable for any group or organization of girls. Each pamphlet costs twenty cents and may be had by writing to the G. F. S. National Office, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Rural Church School of Vanderbilt University.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Episcopal Church has again been the beneficiary of the Rural Church School of Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., which closed here April 12. This school, which brought together some 400 rural clergy from Southern States and from twenty-six Protestant bodies, is one of the most significant movements for the betterment of rural life in the South.

Due to the generosity of Vanderbilt University and more particularly of its School of Religion, these clergy were brought to Nashville from all over the South, at no expense to themselves or to their church. A faculty of national prominence offered courses in almost every conceivable subject having to do with country life and the making of the rural church more effective.

The Rev. F. D. Goodwin, former secretary for rural work, and Professor C. J. Colbert, a prominent layman of Wisconsin, represented the Episcopal Church on the faculty. Twenty-three of our clergy were in attendance, from Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and one from New Hampshire. The Rev. V. G. Lowery, of Alabama, was dean of the Episcopal group.

One of the most helpful features of the school was the daily conference of Episcopal clergy, in an effort to relate the work of the school to their own work. The Rev. H. W. Foreman, secretary for rural work, was present for two days, as was Miss Eastwood, secretary for work among the isolated.

Liberia Begging for Schools.

Behind Cape Mount, a day's march back from the coast in the African bush, a big-hearted Churchwoman is holding alone one of the front line trenches. She is well past the retiring age. That was true when she insisted on returning to her station a year ago. She is not ready to give up yet, largely because there is no one to carry on in her place. She is the only white person in a wide area. She carries on hopefully with her girls' school, although she says she has reached the limit because she has made herself responsible for double the number of pupils that the appropriation contemplates. She says:

"There can be no boys' school because of lack of funds and lack of teachers. One chief at Borah, a day's walk beyond here, has been begging for a school in his town for several years. He is here in Bahlomah just now, and tells me that he is still praying for that school.

"St. John's, Cape Mount, is full, and I understand from both Mr. Reed and Miss McKenzie that they cannot take any more boys at present, unless they are civilized and can pay tuition, which means full as to supporting more boys."

Returning to the needs in her girls' school, she writes:

"I know that appropriations are being cut rather than raised at present, but if not too soon, I would like to put in a plea for next year for about $200 more. Then the number could reach to twenty-five or possibly thirty."

The woman from whose letter I have quoted is Miss Emily DeW. Seaman, of Flushing, N. Y. She has served in Liberia for eighteen years.

New Chapel in Japan.

It is good to learn of the completion of a new chapel in Japan. Mr. R. Ishii, of Tokyo, is a leading Japanese authority on the care of mentally defective children. Holy Trinity School, carried on by him and his wife, has done a fine work for many years. When the earthquake of 1923 destroyed St. Margaret's School for Girls, Mr. Ishii placed most of his buildings at the Bishop's service, and St. Margaret's used them for over a year.

The only building connected with Holy Trinity School that was damaged beyond repair was the chapel. This was included in the schedule of churches whose rebuilding was to be aided by the Japan Reconstruction Fund, $5,000 being allotted to it.

Meanwhile the valuable property of Mr. Ishii's school in the crowded city was sold and the school moved out to a suburb. Now Mr. Ishii writes:

"We like our new place very much. Already its peculiar quietness, its good air and its ample space for playground for the children is favorably telling on their health. There are much fewer epileptic seizures since we moved out.

"It is with great joy and a sense of deep gratitude that I write to tell you of the completion of the chapel. It is a reinforced concrete edifice after a plan drawn by Dr. Bergamini, a plain simple church, but a lovely little house of God, in which our home group daily enjoy the worship of our heavenly Father with much inspiration and heartiness."

The International Fishermen's Club.

With the modest purpose of receiving Biblical instruction and inspiration for the winning of souls, seven young men, on Monday evening, April 24, 1906, assembled in Immanuel Presbyterian Church, Los Angeles, under the leadership of the Rev. T. C. Horton. The now famous "Fishermen's Club" is the direct outgrowth of this nucleus.

The object of the club as given in its Constitution in Article 2 is as follows:

The object of this Club shall be (1) to study God's Word and to create an interest in and love for the Bible especially among young men; (2) to do active, aggressive personal work for Jesus Christ and in addition to the regular week-night meetings of the Club, hold Sunday afternoon meetings and engage in other active, aggressive evangelistic work for men whenever and wherever practical; (3) to uphold the fundamental and evangelical doctrines of the Bible and the Church as follows:

We believe:—

The Trinity of the Godhead—Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

The personality and Deity of Jesus Christ, begotten of the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, truly God and truly man.

The personality of the Holy Spirit.

The reality and personality of Satan.

The supernatural and plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, that they are inerrant in the original writing, and that their teaching and authority are absolute, supreme and final.

The origin of man as recorded in the opening chapters of Genesis.

The sinfulness of man.

That Jesus Christ became the sinner's substitute, before God, and died as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sin of the whole world.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ; that His body was raised from the dead according to the Scriptures and that He ascended into Heaven and sitteth on the right hand of God as the believers' Advocate.

The premillennial and personal return of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The necessity of the new birth.

The evangelization of the world. The supreme mission of the people of God in this age is to preach the Gospel to every creature.

The resurrection of the body, both of the just and the unjust.

The everlasting blessedness of the saved and the everlasting punishment of the lost.

All applicants for membership shall be between the ages of sixteen and thirty years, inclusive. There is also a provision for honorary membership.

Applications for charters are being received from many different places and new Clubs have been formed. Mr. W. R. Hale, formerly Assistant Superintendent of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, is now giving his whole time to this work, as Field Secretary.

The Primary Purpose of the Fishermen's Club is the saving of the souls of young men. Its motto is the command of our Lord Jesus Christ: "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men". Soul-saving is the greatest need of the day. The Lord gave it first place, though too often in church and school it has the second or no place. In the Fishermen's Clubs has been demonstrated what can be done.

The report of practical work done during one year by the Fishermen's Club of Cicero, Illinois, is as follows:

Gospel meetings conducted	3,126
Gospel meetings assisted in	1,680
Persons dealt with	16,332
Personal calls made	13,545

Hobart College's Memorial to Bishop Brent.

Gifts made to the Bishop Charles Henry Brent Memorial Foundation at Hobart College planned to commemorate the services of Bishop Brent as chancellor and president of the Board of Trustees from 1918 to the time of his death now total over $100,000, it was announced today by Rev. Murray Bartlett, D. D., president of the college. The Foundation is a part of a $2,000,000 Building and Endowment Fund, which was initiated largely by Bishop Brent before his departure for Europe last fall, and in which he had planned an active part on his return to this country. The names of donors were not revealed, but it was stated that the gifts had come in without solicitation.

The funds of the Foundation would be used, Dr. Bartlett stated, to carry out development plans which Bishop Brent was instrumental in drawing up. They include the erection of a new science hall, an extension to the library and a new gymnasium for William Smith College, Hobart's co-ordinate institution for women. They also include endowment of professorships in Art, Education, Government, History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Philosophy, Psychology and Science—subjects in which there are now no endowed chairs. Each $100,000 subscribed to endowment, it was said, will establish one of these professorships as a part of the Brent Foundation, and a tablet so stating will be erected in the class room principally used by the holder of the professorship.

The Opening of St. Luke's Church.

Although it has been in use for the past three months, the formal opening of St. Luke's Church, South Richmond, took place April 14. The occasion marked the completion of the furnishing of the church and choir. The services were largely attended both morning and night. The choir repeated a part of the Easter music and the rector preached the sermons.

For many years the congregation of Meade Memorial Church have desired a new church and Sunday-school building. The old building, erected sixty years ago, was not provided with a Sunday school and class-rooms. Ten years ago a legacy from Mr. John Charleton began the building fund which grew until two-thirds of the amount needed was raised. A large lot had been purchased on Cowardin Avenue and paid for, and in May last construction was begun and the church was received from the builders in December and used with chairs until the pews arrived in April. The total cost of the church and lot will be about eighty-five thousand dollars, all of which has been paid except fifteen thousand dollars.

The vestry chose a very simple plan of the New England colonial type. Outwardly the building presents a very attractive appearance, cruciform in shape. The church, choir and chancel are on the main floor, and at either end the class-rooms are arranged on three floors. Under the church the social and Church school room, with ample stage, will seat three hundred persons. Back of this room a large, well-equipped kitchen is placed for social purposes. The vestry decided to call the new church St. Luke's.

Many memorials have been given. The principal one is the chancel window, a triple stained glass picture of "The Resurrection". Two other windows have been placed on either side of the church. The Holt memorial, "The Good Shepherd", and the O'Brien memorial, "The Ascension".

The rector announced that over fifty persons have been added to the church in the past year by confirmation and transfer, and that the Church school attendance had doubled. Among the congratulations and messages received was a series of commendatory resolutions sent by the largest and oldest Baptist church on the Southside.

Service of Light.

A service of light, which was the occasion of the rededication to their task of the members of the Washington Branch of Toc H, was held in Washington Cathedral, by the courtesy of the dean and chapter, on Wednesday, April 10, at 8:15 P. M. About fifty Toc H men marched in procession following the Cathedral choir and took special seats assigned them. A regular Toc H ritual followed, and music consisted of inspiring hymns sung in an unusually beautiful way by choir and congregation. An impressive feature of the service was the lighting of the Toc H lamp, from which each Toc H member lighted his taper, and with all other lights out, raised them high and rededicated themselves to their task.

The lamp was held and the service was led by the Rev. M. P. G. Leonard, D. S. O., chaplain to Toc H. Bishop Freeman, who was expected to make the address, was detained unavoidably out of the city, and in his place Rev. Edwin Niver made an address, bringing out the significance and symbolism of light. The lamp was brought in and carried out by Mr. Craig Wylie, the first to bring Toc H to America. On the following day Mrs. Wylie entertained in her home on Thomas Circle a group of people who listened to the Rev. Mr. Leonard in an address which explained Toc H as a "world-wide fellowship of service for youth".

Diocesan Sunday-School Institute.

The monthly meeting of the Diocesan Sunday-School Institute was held on Tuesday, April 16, in St. John's Parish Hall, Sixteenth Street, at 8 o'clock. There was no principal address, but a general discussion of summer schools under the heading, "Which Summer School Shall I Attend". Those who had attended summer schools in recent years described the advantages of their particular school, and others who had never attended a summer school, but were interested in various forms of church work, were present to learn more of the summer schools. The schools discussed were Ocean City, Md., June 23-28; Sweet Briar, Va., June 24-July 5, and Fredrick, Md., July 8-19. Mrs. Mary C. D. Johnson was in charge of the meeting.

Choir Sings in Jail.

The choir of Christ Church, Georgetown, assisted the Rev. Mr. Dow, Episcopal City Missioner, in his service at the District jail by singing a group of Easter anthems on Sunday afternoon, April 14. Mr. Dow has services there on the second and fourth Sundays of the month and Christ Church choir has sung on these occasions several times before.

Church Bequests.

Mrs. Rose J. Coleman, of Washington, D. C., who died recently, left $25,000 for installation in the Washington Cathedral of a window in her memory. She also bequeathed $25,000 to be used toward the building of a cathedral at Baltimore, $150,000 to Union Memorial Hospital, Baltimore, and $50,000 for the Women's Hospital of the same city.

Mrs. Rose Keeling Hutchins, of Washington, bequeathed $51,700 for the Episcopal Church Home, Washington. The fund will be used for a proposed home for elderly women. The present Home was opened in 1924 with five guests, the money with which it was organized being given by Mrs. Cornelia B. Jones. It has expanded until now it cares for thirty-one women.

Easter Greetings from Byrd.

At the evensong service at Washington Cathedral Easter Sunday Bishop Freeman told of having received Easter greeting, by radio, from Commander Byrd and his comrades at the Antartic. The Bishop sent a cordial, affectionate reply, assuring the party from the capital of their nation of earnest prayers for their safety and success.

In March 39,921 persons visited Bethlehem Chapel in the Washington Cathedral. The visitors represented every State of the Union. The number was more than 25,000 in excess of that of March of 1928.

Historical Interest in New Memorial Window at St. James'.

Historical significance attaches to the memorial window dedicated on Sunday morning, April 14, at St. James' Church, New York City, by the Rev. Dr. Frank Warfield Crowder, the rector. The window is in memory of Edith Henderson Sutro, and is the gift of Victor Sutro, her husband, and Victor Henderson Sutro, her son.

Three figures notable in the history of the Episcopal Church in America are the theme of the window, which is the last in a series of twenty-one chancel and nave clerestory windows in the church, all of them designed and executed by Henry Wynd Young, Inc., of New York. One figure represents the Rev. Robert Hunt, who was the first on this continent to celebrate the Holy Communion according to the Anglican liturgy. The occasion was the landing of the colonists at Jamestown in 1607, and at the simple service a board between two trees served as the altar and a common sailcloth stretched overhead answered as protection from the weather. The second figure is of George Washington, who was a staunch churchman and who served as vestryman both at the Pohick Church, Virginia, and at Christ Church, Alexandria, Va. The third historical character is the Rt. Rev. William White, first Bishop of Pennsylvania. Bishop White has been called the Father of the Episcopal Church in America, and was considered more influential than any other individual in its organization in the United States.

Marble tablets have been placed at the west end of the church bearing the memorial inscription for the series of eight nave clerestory windows now completed by the Sutro memorial. All of them represent great religious leaders, both men and women, in the history of the Christian Church since Apostolic days.

St. Paul's School Alumni Hold Annual Service at St. James'.

The alumni of St. Paul's School, Concord. N. H., held their annual service at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, April 14. at St. James' Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, New York City. Rev. Samuel S. Drury, L. H. D., rector of the school, preached The choir of St. James' sang special music, including the famous selection, "O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem", the school anthem which was written years ago by Dr. James Carter Knox, who has been the organist at St. Paul's for the past forty-six years. The clergy assisting Dr. Drury at the service were the Rev. Sidney T. Cooke, curate of St. James', and the Rev. G. H. Brinley, a graduate of the school and a master there, who read the Scripture lessons.

St. Paul's is one of the oldest school for boys in the country, having been founded seventy-three years ago. The alumni number more than 4,000, of whom more than 1,200 reside in the Metropolitan district. The alumni serving on the Committee of Arrangements for the annual service included Bayard Dominick, chairman; George S. Brewster, Phineas H. Adam, Henry McS. Bangs, Joseph H. Coit, Arthur E. Neergaard, Bernon S. Prentice, Lawson Purdy, Reeve Schley, Winfield K. Shires, Jr., and Carll Tucker.

"From Prize Ring to Pulpit."

"From Prize Ring to Pulpit" will be the subject of the address at Calvary Episcopal Church, Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, on Sunday, April 21, at 8 o'clock. Theodore H. Dorsey, who will give the address at this special service, is a young layman who is studying for the ministry at Berkeley Divinity School. Since he left his home in Maryland ten years ago for a life of wandering dissipation, he has been known to the sporting public of the South as "Chick" Dorsey. With a sparring partner he gave sparring exhibition matches wherever a small sum of money could be picked up. His conversion, which occurred ten months ago, completely changed his life. In addition to his work at the Divinity School, he is preaching daily on the green at New Haven, where amplifiers carry his voice at noon each day to a great crowd. He will tell at this service his own personal experience.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop-Elect Visits Diocese.

The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop-elect of this Diocese, with Mrs. Abbott, was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Hunt, of Lexington, for three days the week of April 1. They were entertained with a reception at the Hunt home for the clergy and their wives, the cathedral vestry with their wives, and all officers of the Diocese of Lexington. They were also entertained at two small dinners, to which prominent church people were invited.

During his stay in Lexington Dr. Abbott became familiar with the beautiful old cathedral, in the parish house of which he will establish his office, planning to keep regular hours when in the city. He also visited the Diocesan School for Girls, Margaret Hall, Versailles, and informed the principal, Miss Sara McDowell Gaither, that he was so pleased with the school he and Mrs. Abbott would enter their little daughter, Faith, as a freshman in the fall.

Dr. Abbott was most enthusiastic over the cordial reception he received in the Blue Grass, and he is already making many ambitious plans for his new Diocese. Among them will be the creation of several archdeaconeries with the hope that services may be held regularly in many points not now having that privilege. As he expressed it, "the field is white unto harvest". Bishop Burton labored for thirty-three years to give his Diocese a strong foundation, and upon this foundation Dr. Abbott plans to erect a splendid structure.

News from all over the Diocese shows that the Lenten season increased spirituality and enthusiasm to a great degree, and the personnel of fine clergymen in the Diocese, backed by their congregations, are ready to give to their most energetic new Bishop their full cooperation and loyalty.

Dr. Abbott will remove to Lexington early in the first week of May. His consecration will occur on the fifteenth of May. Cards of admission, given on a pro rata basis among the congregations, have been mailed by the Rev. C. S. Hale, secretary of the Standing Committee, and a full representation from all over the Diocese is expected. Letters of consent from the various Standing Committees were received by the middle of April.

Theatricals in the Churches.

Two Drama Leagues have recently been organized in the Diocese of Lexington: one at St. John's, Versailles, Mrs. J. C. Branham, president, the Rev. Robert J. Murphy, advisor; one at St. Paul's, Newport, under the direction of Miss Bessie Thompson. For some time the Young People's Service League of Christ Church Cathedral has presented various beautiful pageants under the direction of Mrs. W. W. Anderson.

Cooperating With Other Denominations.

Christ Church Cathedral, the Church of the Nativity, Maysville, and Trinity Church, Covington, cooperated with clergymen of other denominations during Lent, notably at the three hours' Good Friday services.

Diocese Loses U. T. O. Worker.

Deaconess Gertrude J. Baker has left her position at Harlan, Ky., to become a teacher in the Deaconess School, Berkeley, Cal., April 15.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop.

Honoring a Venerable Church.

The annual service at St. James' (Goose Creek) Church, near Charleston, S. C., was conducted Sunday, April 7. The old church has been abandoned practically many years, except for these annual services, attended usually by descendants of the wealthy rice and cotton planters who constituted a flourishing congregation before the Civil War. These descendants are scattered widely, but all for whom the journey is possible gather once a year at the ancestral altar, hallowed by so many memories and traditions, family and historic, of the vanished past.

The congregation this year was larger than in a long while—perhaps the largest since the old days of family coaches. The service was read and the sermon preached by the Rev. Harold Thomas, rector of St. Luke's Church, Charleston.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Convention.

An address on the Program of the Church, delivered by the Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, D. D., was the outstanding feature of the one hundred and seventh annual convention of the Diocese of Georgia, held in the Church of the Good Shepherd (Rev. H. Hobart Barber, rector), Augusta, April 9, 10 and 11. Seldom has the cause of missions been so ably and thoughtfully presented in the Diocese. Dr. Schmuck built up a strong background for the cause by bringing forth all of the characteristics of this age before he showed how these forces have their bearing on Christian missions. "Christ told us to go into all the world," he said, "but He is not waiting for us, He is forcing us to do His work, and all of these things are becoming channels in His hands." Few resolutions were passed, but one, making the Episcopal Orphans' Home for Girls, which has been under the Bishop's supervision in Chatham county, a diocesan institution, received the sanction of the convention. All of the officers of the Diocese were re-elected, as were the members of the Standing Committee, but changes were made in the Executive Council, the members of which were elected as follows: The Rev. J. A. Schaad, of Augusta, and the Rev. Royal K. Tucker, of Brunswick, re-elected, and the lay members re-elected are: Messrs. J. Randolph Anderson, W. W. Williamson and O. T. McIntosh, of Savannah, and Roy E. Breen, of Jesup. The new members are: Rev. Jackson H. Harris, of Augusta; Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, of Savannah; Rev. C. H. Lee, D. D., of St. Simon's Island, and Rev. David Cady Wright, D. D., of Savannah, and Messrs. G. Morton Jones, of Augusta, and George W. Urquhart, of Savannah. Four trustees were elected for the Board of the Fort Valley High and Industrial School, which the Diocese has agreed to help sustain with the Diocese of Atlanta, and these are: The Rev. Dr. Lawrence, the Rev. Dr. Lee, Mr. J. A. Davis, of Albany, and Mr. Frank Harold, of Americus. The delegates elected to the Provincial Synod are: Clerical—Rev. Lloyd W. Clark, of Waycross; Rev. R. K. Tucker, of Brunswick; Rev. Bobb White, Jr., of Thomasville; Rev. Dr. Lawrence, of Americus; Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, of Savannah, and Rev. S. B. McGlohon. Lay—Messrs. W. W. Williamson, of Savannah; W. J. Pamphlin, of Waycross; W. E. McKee, of St. Simon's Island, and John D. Twiggs, G. Morton Jones and Dr. W. J. Cranston, of Augusta.

In addition to his inspirational address, Dr. Schmuck, representing the National Council, gave an excellent talk at the afternoon session on Wednesday, followed by a conference which was spoken of on the floor as one of the most important matters to come before the conference, and this was followed by an address on "Jails", by Mr. Thomas B. Mimms, Director Adult Division State Department of Public Welfare, who was presented by the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Service. At the evening service the Diocesan Department of Religious Education held a short conference, at which time the Bishop's Banner offered to the Church school which has the largest per capita Lenten Offering was presented to Stanley Cousins, representing St. Andrew's Mission, Darien, and having a per capita offering of $1.56. It was announced, due to the failure to secure a site, the Annual Camp for young people cannot be held

COLLECT FOR THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

Almighty God, Who showest to them that are in error the light of Thy truth, to the intent that they may return into the way of righteousness; Grant unto all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion, that they may avoid those things that are contrary to their profesison, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same; through Our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. MARK'S DAY.

O Almighty God, Who hast instructed Thy Holy Church with the heavenly doctrine of Thy Evangelist Saint Mark; Give us grace that, being not like children carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may b eestablished in the truth of Thy Holy Gospel; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

Pray evermore, the Apostle said.
I try, but I am hard bestead,
I cannot pray all day.
There are so many things to do,
So many ends I must pursue,
Which draw my thoughts away.

My mind is caught up by my work,
By joys that please, by cares that irk,
And God is quite forgot.
I should do all as in God's eye—
Things urgent drown His memory,
And thought of Him is not.

But I could love the whole day through,
And who sees love has God in view,
Always and everywhere.
Learning to love, I should gain peace,
Able to pray and never cease
Since love is highest prayer.

What Is Divine Providence?

The Providence of God is a special aspect of his relation to the world, but it calls for special exposition and application.

Providence is the process by which God carries out His plan and purpose. God is immanent in the world in continuous creation, which is the widest aspect and application of His providence. Our universe whether in our own galaxy or in the spiral nebulae whose enormous arms studded with stars appear to be other systems condensing into other galaxies like our own, are still on the anvil of creation in the mighty workshop of God in which we see suns flying off like sparks of fire. Our solar system is undergoing constant changes, and our earth is still in the factory and is being hammered and carved into shape and use. God is carrying on the work of creation in every star and root and leaf as certainly as He ever did and is immanent in every atom and vibration. "My Father worketh hitherto," said Jesus, meaning that God is ever at work.

But is God present and active and struggling and suffering in our human world as it slowly and painfully fights its way up from the slime of savagery and the ethics of the jungle to the heights of our moral and spiritual civilization? Or is He only a spectator of the scene, sitting upon His throne in ease and splendor while His human children are involved in this awful strife? This is the point that pinches and pains our modern thought. At this point, also, there has been a climatic change in our modern views. Ancient thought and medieval art represented God as eternally resting. The Greek and Roman Gods reveled in everlasting dissipation, and the Italian painters picture God as reclining on a luxurious throne or floating in gorgeous clouds. The impression has not yet wholly passed from our minds that God has nothing to do. It is pleasant to think of Him as an eternal idler always having a good time. Labor is a disagreeable thought to us and seems a degradation to God. But the Bible boldly represents God as a laborer, and this is an infinitely higher and nobler view of Him than that of pagan thought and medieval art.

The Scriptural doctrine of Providence puts God right down in the midst of our human world, appointing unto us the bounds of our habitation and numbering the very hairs of our heads. And this appeals to His control over our human wills and actions, which is involved in the doctrine of predestination which is a special aspect and application of providence. If God could not thus control human wills He would be shut out from the larger part of our human world and would have little control over it. He would then be ignorant of what is coming and would be as a blind God plunging through uncharted seas without knowing where He was going. This view is an intolerable thought of God and leaves us with no real God at all.

It is true that the problem of how to reconcile God's sovereignty with man's free agency is insoluble to our finite minds, but we are not without some experience of it in our own lives. We are constantly controlling others and yet they are exercising their own freedom and responsibility. An architect draws up the plans and specifications of a great building, and the moment the contract is signed a multitude of men, perhaps all over the world, are set at work doing His will and yet they are also freely doing their own will. What we can do in a finite and imperfect way, God can do in an infinitely perfect way, and so known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world and He hath foreshadowed whatsoever comes to pass.

The notion of an inactive and impassive God has vanished from our theology. He toils with the toiler and weeps with them that weep and rejoices with them that rejoice. He is in the spirit of widening good will that is drawing all men into a new sense of unity and brotherhood and preparing the way for the Republic of God on earth. God is indeed struggling and suffering with us that He may help bear our infirmities, overcome our enemies, and bring many sons to glory.

If it be asked, Why does not God in His omnipotence cut the struggle short and bring instant victory? the answer must be that moral results cannot be effected by mere power, however great, but can be achieved only by moral means and processes. Truth and persuasion, sympathy and love, are the only proper means to this end. God having endowed us with personality must respect our moral free agency and deal with us as persons; He can win us only as He struggles and suffers with us. God is limited in His omnipotence, not by any lack of power on His part, but by the lack of capacity on our part. This is the solution of the problem that embarrassed so sincere a seeker after religious truth as John Stuart Mill and led him to believe in a finite God. God is helping us and we are helping God, and this enables us, in the language of Mill, to cherish "the feeling of helping God", "inasmuch as a battle is constantly going on, in which the humblest human creature is not incapable of taking some part, between the powers of good and those of evil, and in which every even the smallest help on the right side has its value in promoting the very slow and often almost insensible progress by which good is gradually gaining ground on evil, yet gaining it so visibly at considerable intervals as to promise the very distant but not uncertain final victor of God". This puts God in direct sympathetic and helpful relations with our human world and life and makes Him a co-worker with us so that even in all our afflictions He is afflicted and is indeed our Friend and Father at every point.

And so the doctrine of divine providence assures us that "God is a very present help in trouble", and that "He is not far from each one of us", for His "Word is nigh thee and in thine heart". —Presbyterian Banner.

The Silent Christ.

Matthew tells us that Christ was silent before Pilate. Mark tells us that Christ was silent before Caiaphas. Luke tells us that Christ was silent before Herod. Pilate was ruled by worldly policy and a consuming selfishness. Caiaphas was influenced by jealous rage and pride. Herod was a prey to sensuality and hardness of heart. All of them were haughty unbelievers. When the crowd cried, "Away with Him", they simply echoed the attitude of the world man, the proud man, and the sensual man toward the gracious and life-giving Saviour of men.

Why was Christ silent? It was not because of fear or contempt or sullenness or consciousness of guilt. He was silent because there was really nothing to be said. He had proclaimed His message in the clearest terms. He had gone about doing good. He had wrought blessing to every needy one who looked to Him for help. His lips had spoken mercy, and His hands had brought salvation. All men knew of His holy deeds.

He could have opened the ears of these three men of power to sublimest symphonies. He could have opened their eyes to the most wondrous visions. He could have led them into ways of peace and righteousness. But "they would not". Now He is silent, because they had not ears with which to hear, no eyes with which to see, no feet with which to walk.

It is a terrible hour in a man's life when Christ ceases to speak to him. There are many men today who hear no voice and see no Saviour. They have become "gospel hardened", as our fathers used to say. Their day of opportunity has passed. Selfishness or pride or sensuality has so captured their lives that they are dead to the righteousness and grace of Christ. Christ has not condemned them. Their sin has condemned them, and no word of Christ can avail to deliver them.

It is the supreme tragedy to face a silent Christ.—Selected.

THE TRAGEDY OF LIFE.

Julian R. Meade.

The tragedy of life is neither pain
Nor want of home or friend;
Nor that love of youth shall wane
And the time of man shall end.

The tragedy of life is a man
Whose eyes no beauty see;
Who doubts that of so fair a land
A Noble Maker there must be.

"Now, I Lay Me Down to Sleep."

W. R. Savage.

When I was a student of the Alexandria Seminary and calling on our beloved Professor Kinloch Nelson, he told me that he "yet used" the evening prayer of his childhood, the one which he learned at his mother's knee—"Now, I lay me down to sleep".

I had long since laid that aside with the "childish" things of my early youth, but when I pictured that great, good man on his knees, hands clasped, eyes closed and face turned uponward "toward the Throne of Grace", as he repeated the sacred words made so by the fact that they were taught us by our mothers in the days of our innocence and purity of heart, I determined to readopt that beautiful prayer as my regular evening offering in place of the substitute long in use: "Lord, keep us safe this night, secure from all our fears, may angels guard us while we sleep, 'Til morning light appears".

Many criticisms have been flung at that precious heirloom of our childhood, chiefly on account of the line: "If I should die before I 'wake". William Howard, a little boy friend, has solved the difficulty by giving this version of the sweetest prayer of childhood: "Now, I lay me down to sleep, I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep, If I should die 'fore time to wake, I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take. And this I ask for Jesus' sake. Amen."

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Lead Pencil and the Eraser.

I own a Fountain Pen, and sometimes I carry it, and sometimes it is Full. Likewise do I own a Neversharp Pencil, and sometimes I use that. But when I meditate and wish my thought to Express Itself rapidly even if illegibly, then I do I like the Old-Fashioned Lead Pencil such as my friend Eberhard Faber doth make. And the kind I buy from him is rather more than a Pencil, for at one end it hath a Rubber.

Now, I was using a Pencil, and I made a mistake, and I reversed the Pencil and erased the Error with the Rubber. And I said, I owe to my friend Eberhard Faber a Few Thanks, for there was a time of yore when I kept a Separate Rubber at hand for purposes like this.

But again I made an Error, and I tried to use the Rubber, and behold I had worn it down to the Metal, and it would not erase.

And I meditated, and I said, I have been at this Writing Game since ever I could hold a Pencil and make a mark therewith. By this time I should have learned to say what I have to say the First Crack out of the Box, and not need to use an Eraser. And now, behold, I have used up the Eraser with the Pencil only Half Gone.

And I said, O, my God, is it so with my life? Am I making Errors in that proportion?

And I said, Nay, I will not thus think of myself. This Pencil doth not represent my Average. For sometimes I have used Pencils till they were down to a stub, and the Rubber was almost as good as new.

And I said, Why doth Faber place Rubbers on Pencils? Is he a Mind-reader?

And I knew that he placed them there because he felt sure that I would make Errors, and he wanted to help me out.

And I cried, Oh, My God, Thou knowest my frame, and rememberest that I am dust; it is Mighty Good for me that Thou hast provided the Pencil of my life with a Good, Generous Eraser.

For I remembered the comforting words which are in Holy Writ concerning the Good God who made us. And I resolved to use the Pencil of my life with reasonable care. But I am very thankful for the Eraser.—Exchange.

Philip Calls the Roll.

Philip, the youngest of five children, had not only his parents to adore and serve him, but brothers and sisters as well. Philip's ringlets held the sunlight; Philip's cheeks wore a rosy tint; Philip's eyes shone and Philip's piping voice brought homage. What was more, Philip was beginning to realize his kingship. In his precious baby way he ruled the other children with a firm, unyielding hand. Whatever he wanted, he got. No matter who was using a toy, Philip usually merely mentioned his desire for it, and it was his. Should the rightful owner hesitate, at least one of the other children remembered personal grievances against the offender and used little Philip as an opportunity to even matters. Expressions of disapproval became so vehement that the delinquent repented speedily and Philip profited. It was amusing, but led to no good end, so one day while Philip had his nap, the mother talked with the four older children.

"We love Philip, don't we?" she began.

Warm agreement in varied forms met this question.

"Who loves Carl Craig?" was the next question.

"Nobody could!" came the quick answer.

"Why?"

"He always wants his way," Henry said.

"He's selfish with his toys," David answered.

"He wants our toys, too," Mary added.

"Oh, Mother, why, Mother?" Katie almost whispered in her surprise, "surely you do not think our Philip is at all like Carl Craig?"

The comparison startled the other children, still when they thought about it, the two had several traits in common.

"But, Mother, Philip is just a baby," Mary defended.

"And so sweet," David added.

"We do not mind giving up to him," Henry assured her.

"But Philip is growing older," Katie meditated aloud. "He must not grow up like Carl Craig!"

"Every one must love our Philip," Mary declared warmly.

Henry and David agreed.

"It is better for those who love him to correct him, than for those who do not care for him to try to get even with him," their mother reasoned. Then she and the four children laid a plan to help Philip overcome his unsocial habits.

When Philip waked up he was in good humor. For more than an hour he played in a most friendly manner, then he took a sudden notion that Henry's toy elephant was exactly what he wanted, though Henry was playing with it himself at the time.

"Dive it to me," Philip demanded in his queer little voice that every one loved.

Henry played on, though it was evident to the other children that he had lost his desire to play with the elephant.

"Henwy, Henwy, Henwy!" Philip wailed.

Henry weakened; only the thought of Carl Craig and the family's plan for Philip held him firmly to his course.

Seeing that Henry refused to give him the elephant, Philip turned to his older sister and chief ally. "Katie, Katie, Katie!" he implored and added an energetic, "Wow, wow!"

Katie read her book, seeming not to hear.

"Mawy, Mawy, Mawy! Wow, wow!" Philip yelled, turning to his other sister.

Mary went on dressing her doll without looking up.

"David, David, David!" Philip screeched in despair.

David walked to the window and looked out.

Philip had called the roll. No one was present to take his part. He felt he must do something to win approval. Picking up his fire engine which he knew Henry liked, he offered it to him. When Henry accepted it and thanked him, Philip did not ask for the elephant nor touch it.

Suddenly there was a sound of glad voices. What a relief to have the first lesson over and Philip not hurt. Really he seemed helped. Bless him!

"Let's play tag," Katie suggested. This was Philip's favorite game.

"You be IT," four happy voices said to Philip.—Minerva Hunter, in National Kindergarten Release.

HEAVENLY FATHER WE THANK THEE.

Anne Horner Thomas.

For life, the gift of life;
Strength to resist sin and strife,
Strength to separate pure gold
From worthless dross of earth mold.

For Thy unfailing power,
Our need of Thee every hour;
For blue skies, the starlit way,
The precious privilege to pray.

For sunshine, flowers and rain;
Joy, and purifying pain.
For faith through grief and sorrow;
Today ours, Thine tomorrow.

For the wonders of a tree,
When its mystery we see;
For Thy loving grace and mercy,
Thy promise of Eternity.

PLAY THE GAME.

Make me to play the game of life like a man:
To do the big and noble things if I but can,
And battle squarely.

Make me to see the right the finer way to do,
And then unswervingly to see the issue through
With self-possession.

Make me to treat with kindness every brother man:
To be considerate and thoughtful in the van
Of strife and struggle.

Make me to love my honor more than earthly gain:
To keep my reputation high and free from stain,
Unspotted ever.

Make me to end each day with mind and conscience clear:
Unsullied by the breath of shame; not touched by fear
Of what may follow.

The Rainy Day.

Yesterday had been a warm, sunshiny summer day, but this morning while she was still half asleep, Betty heard the rain-drops on the roof.

"Pitter-patter! Pitter-patter! Pit-a-pat-pat!" they said, striking it in showers.

It was a pleasant, drowsy tune, and as Betty listened she heard the rain-drops talk. They had really been saying something all the time.

"Get up, little girl, get up! It's time everybody was out of bed. Pit-a-pat-pat! Tump-a-tump-tump! We've been working ever since twelve o'clock last night. There's work for everybody to do—little girls too. Tap-tap-tap. Pit-a-pat-pat. Tump-a-tump-tump!"

"That's a joke," giggled Betty. "Rain-drops don't work, and I don't either; I'm too small. There's nothing five-year-olds can do."

"Oh, there isn't, isn't there? Listen to that!" The raindrops danced with merry laughter on the tin that led down into the drain-pipes. "You're all wrong, Betty dear; you're all wrong. There's something for everybody to do, big or little; sometimes that just that person can do and nobody else. Every little drop of dew, every leaf, every blade of grass, every tiny star that twinkles in the sky, every little seashell on the shore, every bird, every thing—even the earthworms in the ground and the snails in the garden have work to do just as much as elephants, or engines, or anything else big that you can think of."

"I suppose they do," said Betty, hoping the raindrops would go on.

"Of course they do. We raindrops begin in the spring by melting away the dirty snow and ice of winter. Then ever so often we give the earth a good wash. The tiny pores in the leaves of all the plants and trees get choked up so they can not breathe, and we freshen them into new life. Their roots get a drink, too, and the thirsty earth itself soaks up our drops and stores away moisture for them. Sometimes when our friends —Thunder and Lightning and the Big Strong Wind—help us we wash and clean the whole region of air above the earth, and the ocean water is tossed about and mixed with air for the thousands of plants and animals that live in it. The animals on the land need us too. We fill the wells where the horses and cattle get water, and the brooks and rivers where the wild creatures come to drink.

"You must be very busy."

"We are, but being busy is fun. Try it and see."

"I will," declared Betty.

She jumped out of bed, dressed herself without calling for any help, and went downstairs for a happy "Good morning". She watched the toast that it didn't burn when mother was called to the telephone; she finished dressing the baby. After breakfast she put away the dishes while mother wiped them and got a splendid start on a happy day.

"You're a great help, darling," said mother.

"We told you so! We told you so!" sang the raindrops dancing on the roof. —Christian Index.

The Ten Servants.

There was once a king who had a little daughter whom he loved very much. He wanted to make her a beautiful and wise princess, so he sent her to a country where she was to pass through many schools and learn lessons that would it her for her father's home. This kind father did not send his daughter alone. He gave her ten servants to wait upon her and care for her.

Two of these servants were to show her all the beautiful and useful things that she would meet in her absence; and when she got homesick they were to tell it to her father, and he would hear and comfort her.

Two more were to help the little girl to hear sweet music and sounds that would tell her about what she saw and bid her always remember her father's love.

Two more carried her wherever she went; and poor indeed would she have been without the little servants.

Another told her all she wanted to say to those around her, and sang songs of praise to her father, the king.

Two of them helped her to do everything to make herself and others happy.

But the last servant was seen only by her father and herself. This last servant always told his little mistress to love her father dearly, and not want to guide the other servants to do what would displease him.

Sometimes the princess would say to herself, "Father is not here, and I will do what I please"; then, in spite of this servant's pleadings, she sought to guide the others into forbidden paths, and thus brought upon herself trouble and pain.

At last the loving father gave a command to each one of his daughter's servants colling them by name as he spoke. The names and commands were these:

Little Eyes, look up to God;
Little Ears, hear His word;
Little Feet, walk His ways;
Little Mouth, sing His praise;
Little Hands, do His will;
Little Heart, love Him still.

—Buds of Hope.

What To Do With Adversity.

Basil King, the well-known novelist, who has recently passed away, was a man of peculiarly fine character. An Episcopal clergyman, deeply in love with his calling, he lost his eyesight almost entirely, and had to give up his Church work. But he had taught himself to operate a typewriter, and in his affliction he gave the world many powerful and helpful novels. He turned his misfortunes into opportunities, and I never saw him when he did not appear cheerful and even merry. The nearest approach to a complain of which I have heard was his saying, half-humorous, wholly stout-hearted, "I have more adversity than I know what to do with".

In reality, he did not have. No one of his heroic spirit ever has. He knew just what to do with every bit of adversity—transform it into a bit of heroism. For no one can make heroism out of ease or pleasure or good fortune; the raw materials of heroism are difficult and pain and untoward fate. And heroism means the loftiest uplift of any life.—Dr. Amiss Wells, in Christian Sun.

Count Moore's Banana.

Every morning Count Moore would listen for the call of the banana peddler's boy as he came down the highway toward the castle. Then the count would hurry to reach the kitchen door by the time the boy got there with his basket. Of course, he got the first banana, and many more during the day. For often, when he was playing with his sister, Lady Olive, Count Moore would say, "I don't want to play any more. I am going to get just one more banana."

So the count would go straight to the castle dining-room and take the fruit from the fruit-bowl.

"Oh, dear," the castle maid would sigh; "if only the count would go to the kitchen to get his fruit! It seems that I never can keep the fruit-bowl filled."

One day the banana boy heard the maid say this, and he smiled to himself as though he had a splendid idea. The next day when he came to the castle, he brought a basket of bananas and a bowl of fruit.

"This bowl is for the dining-room," he told the maid. "My uncle sent it; but it is a magic bowl. All day long the count must not take any fruit from the bowl, but must get it from the kitchen. If he doesn't promise to do this, I have to take the fruit-bowl and all the bananas home with me."

Many times during the day the count looked longingly at the fruit in the dining-room. But he passed it by and went to the kichen when he was hungry, just as he should do.

Finally night came, and he went to bed. But as he lay there in the dark thinking, Count Moore said to himself, "Oh, dear, I wish I had just one more banana!"

The more he thought of it, the more he wanted it. He knew that the cook had locked the bananas in the cupboard. Then he thought of the fruit-bowl in the dining-room that held grapes and oranges and apples and two smooth, yellow bananas. How he did want them!

The boy slipped out of bed and went down the long, winding stairs. He reached the dining-room and felt along the top of the table for the fruit-bowl. Then his fingers found a banana. He tried to pick it up, but it stuck fast. He picked up the bowl and gave one jerk! The banana came loose in his hand. He tried to peel it, but he could not start an opening. So he started to set his teeth into it.

Just then he saw a light in the next room that moved toward him. The count backed away, but the light came nearer and nearer.

Count Moores heart beat faster and faster. The banana boy had said that there was a charm on the bowl. Maybe something dreadful was going to happen.

The boy backed farther away as the light came closer. Suddenly there was a crash! Then somebody screamed.

From everywhere in the castle servants came running, bringing great candle-holders full of candles. "Who screamed?" they asked.

"I did," answered Lady Olive. "I came downstairs with a candle to get my doll. As I was walking along, I heard a crash, and it frightened me."

"I came down to get a banana," explained the count. "I got one; then I dropped it when I saw the light coming. That was what crashed."

"A banana crashed!" exclaimed the servants; "impossible! bananas are soft."

But when they looked, there lay the yellow banana on the floor, broken in several pieces.

The maid picked it up. "This," she said, "belongs to the fruit-bowl. It isn't real fruit. The banana boy's uncle made it so we could always have a dish of fruit for the dining-room. It is made of plaster and painted to look like fruit."

After that the count never went downstairs at night to hunt bananas that would break. He waited until daytime and always got them from the kitchen. —Christian Sun.

A DUTCH LULLABY.

Far over the waters so blue and deep
The little Dutch babies are going to sleep.
Bright yellow tulips are nodding their heads,
And fluffy young ducks are safe in their beds;
While slowly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

Far over the waters the sails are furled,
And the stars peep out on a sleepy world.
The moo-cows moo softly beneath the trees,
And the white sheep browse in the evening breeze;
While slowly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

Far over the waters comes down the night,
Fading and fading the silvery light.
While storks on their nests stand white and tall,
And over the treetops the shadows fall,
While softly the windmills go whirling around—
Go whirling around—go whirling around.

Bobby's Lesson.

It was baking day and Mother was busy as could be creaming the butter and sugar for the cup cakes. Baking day at this house was always a joyous occasion for Ruth and Bobby, for they were allowed to stay in the kitchen and taste and sample the different things that were finished, but today something had happened to Bobby's temper. Nothing that was done seemed to please him. He was usually such a happy little four-year-old that when he had these fussy little spells Mother always tried her best to find out the reason and correct it. So, today she watched him carefully as he and Ruth played.

"Look, Bobby, here's a picture of the cakes that Mother is baking. Don't that look good?" asked Ruth and indeed the picture looked almost good enough to eat.

'N'aw, it would be better if it was cocoanut 'stead of caramel," Bobby complained.

Ruth was a little disappointed, but tried to get him interested in guessing how many cakes the batter would make.

"I'll guess fourteen,' volunteered Ruth.

"I don't care what it'll make. Don't want to guess," rudely answered Bobby.

Wasn't that ugly for him to act that way?

Several more attempts made by Ruth to get him to playing made him still worse. He sat down in the floor and sulked.

Up to this time Mother had not said a word, but she decided to try her hand at making Bobby happy again, for you know, mothers can't have little ugly boys around. They make every one uncomfortable.

Mother decided that the best thing to do was to leave Bobby to himself, so she helped Ruth onto a stool and gave her a small mixing bowl with a little batter.

"Now dear, you help Mother and we'll soon have the baking done. Bobby doesn't care to play or talk to us so we'll play he isn't here."

Soon Ruth was having such a good time helping Mother that she really forgot that Bobby was there, but Mother did not forget. She watched him out of the corner of her eye. First he sulked, then he began to fidget; then he began to try to see what they were mixing, but Mother wisely kept herself in the way. After a little while of being really lonely and left out of the fun, Bobby got up and came over to the table.

"Let me see, too," he begged.

"Why, hello Bobby. I had almost forgotten that you were here. Are you sure you want to help us?" said Mother.

"Yes, Mother, and I'm sorry I was so cross. I must have been a little sick."

Mother smiled a knowing smile, for she knew that in spite of his flimsy excuse he had learned his lesson.—Baptist Standard.

"God's Little People."

What a delightful place this world would be for "God's little people" were each person to undertake his share towards providing food for the birds and stray animals during the winter months! We would not miss the crusts and crumbs and scraps of meat, which mean so much to our friends, when snow has covered the ground. It is merely a matter of placing these where access can be gained to them, instead of putting them in the garbage-can, which is often thoughtlessly done.

Too frequently we ease our conscience with the knowledge that we care for our own pets. We fail to realize that these outsiders feel the pangs of hunger and thirst just as keenly as the favored few.

It is not an uncommon sight, but shocking in my opinion, to see birds lying dead in the snow, their little lives snuffed out through lack of food. I think we should each accept a share of responsibility for this condition and endeavor to remedy it throughout the coming winter.

We cannot forget the joyous part "God's little people" play in the plan of things, and their importance, in the Creator's sight, of whom it is written: "Not a sparrow falleth to the ground wthout His notice."—Willa Hoey, in Our Dumb Animals.

Why We Shake Hands.

Did you ever wonder why it is that folks usually shake hands when they meet? Perhaps you know that many things we do have come down to us as customs from our early ancestors Shaking hands is just such a custom.

In the olden days every one had to carry a sword to protect himself from robbers or enemies he might meet. He always kept his right hand on the handle of the sword in order to use it if necessary.

Of course, when he met a friend it was customary to hold out his right hand to show that it didn't hold a sword ready for attack, and the friend did likewise. They shook hands then, as a token of their trust in each other.

Of course, the custom doesn't mean that any more! Imagine grandfather or Uncle Jim holding a sword in his pocket! Men no longer need to carry such weapons, but the custom remains with us.—Selected.

Courage
Is a little ant
That tries to push away
A stone that has fallen
Across its path.

Full well I know there is a Power
That makes the crooked straight—
And turns defeats to stepping stones
Which lead to Heaven's gate.
And so upon Life's surging sea
From anxious thoughts I cease—
I thank Thee for the Perfect Word
That bring Thy Perfect Peace.

I want to tell you in this Report how much Mrs. R. B. Harrison has accomplished for the Leper Mission in the last two years with Pete Banks. In Mana Madura, Southern India, under the care of Rev. Mr. Vaughan, she has built a little church for the lepers which they long desired, costing $2,000.00. It is now completed and will be called Christ's Church; she has received recently several lovely pictures of the church. She says:

"This is the most wonderful church I have ever heard of. I am sure you will agree with me when I tell you my reasons for saying this. It is an Inter-Denominational Church; Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians and Presbyterians have all had a part in it. Did you ever hear of a Church with a Communion table, a memorial to an Episcopal minister (Rev. Mr. Ribble, formerly of St. Andrew's Church), the communion service a memorial to a Baptist boy, young Mr. Crowder, Bible, hymn book and reading desk to an Episcopal minister (the Rev. W. B. Williams), musical instruments form a Methodist woman's Bible class, and the bell, in memory of a dear mother, a gift from a young woman in an Episcopal church. All of the memorials come from Richmond people. This church is a living, breathing, vital argument for church unity. If you want to know what church unity really means, study the Missions to Lepers and still not one of its members has felt called upon to give up his or her own denomination. The Leper Mission lives church unity and talks very little about it. The little leper pigs have built two cottages and one church, still "the field is white already to harvest". With two million poor people suffering with the dreadful disease of Leprosy and only one in one hundred has any care at all, you can see we cannot weep because there are no more Lepers to cure."

All contributions gratefully acknowledged by Miss Evelyn P. Meriwether, President-Treasurer, Richmond Branch, Leper Mission. Address 2346 Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Deaths

NORTON: Entered into life eternal, Wednesday, March 27, 1929, at his home, in Alexandria, Va., JUDGE JAMES KEITH MARSHALL NORTON, aged sixty-eight.

"Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord."

REV. GEORGE FREDERICK DEGEN.

REVEREND GEORGE FREDERICK DEGEN, died April 11, 1929, at the home of his daughter in Boston, Mass. He was born in Boston May 7, 1849, son of the Reverend Henry Vassall Degen, and was educated at the Boston Latin School, Wilbraham Academy, Griswold College and Cambridge Theological Seminary.

Mr. Degen was ordained to the priesthood in the Diocese of Iowa in 1883, and his first parish was at Chariton, Iowa. Later he was dean of the cathedral at Little Rock, Ark., rector of St. John's Church, Fort Smith, Ark., city missionary, Charleston, S. C., rector of the Church of the Advent, Nashville, Tenn., of St. Mark's Church, Augusta, Maine, of Grace Church, Chanute, Kansas, and assistant in St. Alban's Parish, Washington, D. C. He remained a member of the Diocese of Washington until his death.

While diligent in parish affairs, Mr. Degen was known throughout his life for the breadth of his interests and for his extra-parochial activities. Among other positions held at various times he was a canon of the cathedral in the Diocese of Maine and diocesan secretary, examining chaplain and rural dean in the Diocese of Kansas. Always keenly interested in sports and in affairs of the stage, he maintained an accord with actors and professional ball players at a time when members of those occupations were not considered with present-day liberality, and he always numbered members of both professions among his congregations. He was for many years a chaplain of the Actors' Church Alliance and it was through his influence that an actors' bed was endowed in St. John's Hospital, Fort Smith, Ark. That hospital was the first in that part of the country and he and Mrs. Degen were the prime movers in its establishment and in its operation during its first years. Mr. Degen was also one of the first to propose and to organize interdenominational clerical associations for the discussion of matters of general welfare.

Since his retirement from active parochial work in 1918 he has made his home at South Byfield, Mass. Immediately after his retirement he was for several years, and to the extent his health permited, a volunteer assistant at St. Stephen's Church, Boston. For many years, and to the end of his life on earth, he was chaplain of the Society of the Companions of the Holy Cross, Adelynrood, South Byfield.

He is survived by his wife, Edith May (Hill) Degen, South Byfield, Mass., his daughter, Miss Jessie Degen, principal of The May School, Boston, and his son, Lieutenant-Colonel John Alden Degen, U. S. Army, Retired.

Funeral services were read at St. Stephen's Church, Boston, April 13, by The Right Reverend Samuel G. Babcock, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Massachusetts, assisted by the Reverend R. A. Chapman, of St. Stephen's, and the Reverend A. B. McKinstry, of St. Paul's Church, Albany, N. Y. A requiem mass followed the funeral service, the Reverend R. A. Chapman celebrant, the Reverend A. R. McKinstry assisting.

MRS. MARY MASON GIBSON.

After a few days of illness, from the effects of paralysis, MRS. MARY MASON GIBSON, wife of Braxton D. Gibson, was granted the Holy rest from earthly existence, under the blessings of the Almighty Father, on Sunday, March 17, 1929, at her home in Charles Town, Jefferson County, West Virginia.

Though her health had not been strong during the past year, her cheerful spirits, brightness and activity in helping friends and worthy causes in the community, led us to think there was no danger of any sudden breaking of the tender thread of life.

Mrs. Gibson had just passed her sixty-ninth year on February 27th, having been born in 1860, the daughter of Dr. Gerard F. Mason and wife Margaret Duncan Holliday, a sister of Governor Fred W. M. Holliday, of Virginia. Her father, many years a prominent physician of Jefferson County, was born near Fredericksburg, Virginia, a member of the noted Mason family of that State.

Her only child, Margaret Holliday Gibson, died in 1923. From her youth up Mrs. Gibson's friendliness and cordial greetings and pleasing personality won for her a warm place in the hearts of all who knew her.

She was never happier than when helping friends and doing some good act. She took delight in making contributions to the Church societies and the patriotic organizations.

Her Christian life was devout and simple, and to her it meant more of giving to others, than of receiving for self. Especially at Christmas time she went about doing good and contributing to the needy.

When a happy young girl she embraced the Faith and joined the Protestant Episcopal Church, being in a class instructed by the beloved rector, Rev. Wm. H. Meade, and confirmed by Bishop Johns, of the Diocese of Virginia. As daughter, wife and mother she followed the Bible teachings of devotion, duty and faithfulness.

The funeral services were at the house, conducted by her rector, Rev. John F. W. Feild, assisted by Rev. Austin B. Mitchell and Dr. Granville G. Sydnor. The burial was in the Mason lot in Edge Hill Cemetery, where the sorrowing relatives and friends left her sleeping in the gracious keeping of the Lord.

WILLIAM P. REDD.

Died, at his home, 3607 Chamberlayne Avenue, Richmond, Va., April 5, 1929, WILLIAM P. REDD, aged sixty-one years. Funeral services were conducted from the residence, interment in the family burying ground at Emmanuel Church, Brook Hill.

Mr. Redd had been active in the real estate business in Richmond for the past forty years. He was president of the Richmond Real Estate Exchange for the last term and was at the time of his death first vice-president of the Virginia Real Estate Association. He was a vestryman in St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Ginter Park.

Mr. Redd was a son of the late James T. Redd, for many years surveyor of Henrico County.

Surviving him are his widow, who was, before marriage, Miss Grace Livesay; two daughters, Mrs. Ashton H. Williams, of Florence, S. C., and Mrs. James Taylor, of Richmond; two sons, William Pleasants Redd and Thomas Redd, both of Richmond, and four brothers, E. D. Redd, T. Crawford Redd, Dr. Paul Redd and Junius Red, all of Richmond.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

this year, but efforts will be continued to secure one eventually, as this is considered one of the most important diocesan needs. The Ven. C. C. J. Carpenter, Archdeacon of Georgia, gave an address on Diocesan Missions, followed by that of Dr. Schmuck's on General Missions. Owing to his accepting the rectorship of St. John's Church, Savannah, Mr. Carpenter has resigned his position as Archdeacon.

While the Diocesan Convention was in session the Georgia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council held its thirty-seventh annual meeting, and Mrs. J. A. Davenport, of Americus, was re-elected president, as were the other officers. Mrs. T. K. Wade, Supply Secretary of the National Executive Board, addressed the meeting.

Four Parishes Without Rectors.

The news from Arkansas this month is rather discouraging, as two ministers have left the Diocese. That means four parishes in the Diocese without rectors at the present time.

We saw in the papers that the Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, of St. John's, Helena, was conducting services in St. Michael's, Charleston, S. C., during Lent. And the next news was that he had accepted a call to become rector. Two or three years ago he came for Lenten services in St. John's, Helena, and soon thereafter became rector. The moral is that parishes which desire to keep their rectors had better not excuse them to go elsewhere during Lent.

The Rev. James Henry Boosey, who came to this Diocese from Mississippi a few years ago, and became rector of St. Paul's, Batesville, and later of St. Paul's Newport, also has just announced his acceptance of a call to All Saints, Grenada, Miss., and of his having moved. Mr. Boosey is at present a member of the Executive Committee of the Diocese.

Services in St. Mary's, El Dorado.

El Dorado is thirty-two miles from Camden, Ark. The vestry there asked the rector of St. John's, Camden, to give them a Lenten service some Wednesday afternoon, and this was done on two Wednesdays, the rector driving to El Dorado, and then returning to Camden for a service in St. John's Church at 7:30.

The Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, of St. John's, offered then to conduct a Preaching Mission, hoping thereby to strengthen their morale and get them in shape to call a minister. They have had no minister since last September.

As Mr. Claiborne did not wish to neglect his own parish, he held service in St. John's at 4 P. M., and then drove the thirty-two miles and preached in St. Mary's, El Dorado. It rained each night until Sunday. The congregations were good, but on the last night the church was full, and most of them were members, or in some way interested in the church. On the last day, which was Palm Sunday, three services were held in Camden in the morning. In El Dorado the young folks were addressed late in the afternoon, and then the closing service was held at 7:30.

They could find no one to give them an Easter Day service, so they appealed to the rector of St. John's to come back to them for Easter night. Their intense desire for an Easter service could not be resisted, so he agreed to give them a service with celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 7:30 P. M.

To accomplish this, on Easter Day, Mr. Claiborne had the early communion in St. John's, Camden, then private communion for five persons at home who were sick. At 9:45 there was a Church school Easter service with presentation of Mite-box Offering. At 11 o'clock there was the full Easter festival service. The offering at the 11 o'clock service was nearly seven hundred dollars.

Next came the drive to El Dorado for the Easter service in St. Mary's. There were forty-eight communicants. And of course the question must arise, "Is it more important that people should receive the Blessed Sacrament when they have had that opportunity only once in seven months, or that it should be denied them because it could not be given in a morning hour"? If in touch with the Christ Spirit, of course there is only one answer.

The desired object was accomplished, and the rector of St. John's felt that his strenuous effort had been worthwhile. The parish is ready to call a minister, and has invited a minister of the church to come for services and a consultation on the Sunday after Easter.

In St. John's Church, Camden, on Good Friday, there was the three hours' service of devotions from 12 until 3 o'clock. Four other ministers of the city participated with their congregations, and they made the addresses. From 1 to 3 o'clock there was a splendid congregation made up of people of every faith. This service is held annually.

The Easter Offering for the day in St. John's, Camden, Ark., exclusive of envelopes for regular expenses, was a$1,105.91.

Plain and Unadulterated Vulgarity

What is the Matter With President Glenn Frank?

The president of the University of Wisconsin is more than a mere educator in the recognized sciences, for he has declared himself on that new science, which threatens the moral life of the nation. When he appeared, a few years ago, as an able second to Dr. Fosdick, we mistook him for a Modernist in theology alone; but we were far too innocent in our modest estimate of the range of his destructive criticism. Listen to this from the desk of this president of a State university:

> "I suggest that young men trying to decide upon a profession should read Bertrand Russell's 'Education and the Good Life,' for a vivid picture of the kind of education that seems to me worth fighting for, the kind of education that able young men might well dedicate their lives to bringing about. It is an education that shall rescue sex from the slime of sentimentality and sniggering, and bring it into the sunlight of sincerity and sense."

Now what does Bertrand Russell teach as to how to thus "rescue sex" in this sublime volume so warmly commended by this leader in the new morals as well as the new theology? Let Mr. Russell speak for himself: "In teaching my own children, I shall prevent them from learning a moral code which I regard as harmful." Brave man you are, august philosopher! "I shall not teach that faithfulness to one partner through life is in any way desirable, or that a permanent marriage should be regarded as excluding temporary episodes." Then he wades on in this slime about sex relations after marriage with others. And this is the recommended book of a university president.—Editorial comment in The Presbyterian of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, April 4, 1929, page 13.

THE BOOK OF HOLINESS

Canon G. Osborne Troop

It is probably not unjust to say that the average Christian rarely, if ever, reads the Book of Leviticus. Yet that book claims in itself to be an almost unbroken record of the Lord's own words communicated by Him to Moses. The whole spirit of the book is that of Holiness, summed up in Leviticus XX, verse 26:

"And ye shall be holy unto ME: for I the Lord am holy, and have separated you from the peoples, that ye should be MINE."

Chapter XVIII is a revelation of the unthinkable horrors practised by the heathen peoples by whom Israel was surrounded; and one readily understands why it was necessary to exterminate these awful sinners, lest they should spiritually corrupt and ruin the Hebrew people. As a matter of fact, the Hebrews disobeyed God's command to destroy these corrupt peoples, and as a result, they were mingled among them and learned to share in their abominations, to their own spiritual undoing. Finally, the Lord was driven to destroy their city and temple, and to send then into captivity to cure them of their incorrigible idolatry. Yet there are shallow Modernists who inveigh against the God of the Old Testament, who could command the extermination of the Canaanites!

How solemn is the warning given in Leviticus XX—verses 22 and 23:

"Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, vomit you not out. And ye shall not walk in the customs of the nation, which I cast out before you: FOR THEY DID ALL THESE THINGS, AND THEREFORE I ABHORRED THEM."

Moreover, the standard of Holiness set up in Leviticus is marvellously up-to-date, and might well be laid to heart by the United States and Canada in regard to questions of immigration. I wonder how many of my readers are familiar with the noble passage in Leviticus XIX—verses 33 and 34?

"If a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, YE SHALL NOT DO HIM WRONG. The stranger that sojourneth with you shall be unto you as the homeborn among you, and THOU SHALT LOVE HIM AS THYSELF: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God."

Those who foolishly find fault with the "God of the Old Testament," and speak of "the Tribal God" of Israel, may do well to remember that if there was any real God in Old Testament times, this real God certainly ALLOWED all that the God of the Bible allowed, without any protest whatever. The certain truth is, that the God of the Old Testament is the God of the New Testament, even the perfect Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Long years of study of the Scriptures FROM THE INSIDE absolutely convince me that the voice of the one living and true God is heard from Genesis to Revelation, and that His Name is Holy. "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of Hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory." AMEN AND AMEN.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Jesus loves the great undertaking."

"Be sure of God, and nothing can overthrow you."

The main business of a Christian life is to go through the world turning its water into wine. The true Christian learns to make the best of everything and everybody, not because it is the wisest, but because it is the truest thing to do.

"The richer the jewel, the harder the cutting."

No man can hold a title to the skies in his wife's name.

"If none were sick, and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender."

"Teach me to feel another's woes,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me."

Dr. Thomas Chalmers, the great Scotch preacher, said: "Our chief business with Christianity is to proceed upon it."

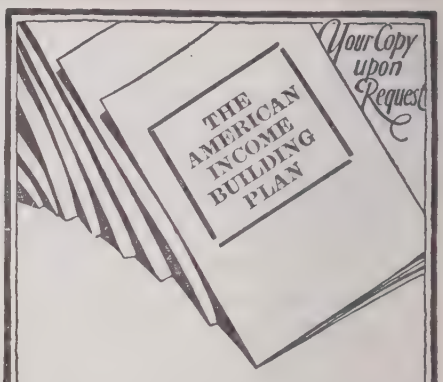
You have not to be a genius in order to do great good: you have only to receive Christ and carry Him hidden in your heart, a secret link with God into all your relations with men.

Unless there is a Divine Person behind all things, then our human personality is no more than a bubble on the stream of time—an iridescent emptiness.—Dr. E. Y. Mullins.

It is not by change of circumstances, but by fitting our spirits to the circumstances in which God has placed us, that we can be reconciled to life and duty.—F. W. Robertson.

When thy days are veiled in night,
Christ shall give thee heavenly light;
Seem they wearisome and long,
Yet in Him thou shalt be strong.

Tolerance is not craven avoidance of issues merely because they are fraught with danger; that is weakness and cowardice. Tolerance is an avoidance of prejudice, mendacity and passion. Tolerance is open-minded, intelligent facing.



Fellowship with Christ is a permanent relationship. It is as true when you are standing in a crowded bus as when you are kneeling in the Holy Communion, when you are at work amongst the pots and pans, as when you are quietly reading the Holy Bible.

SOWERS

Those who write for the public hoping to convey useful thought and stir the higher and finer sentiment are given dismal cause to fear that their hope is futile and their labor wasted. So with the preachers. No human experience can be more pathetically disheartening than that of the man who works with all the skill and thought he can command to weave into words a message to the souls of others which he knows to be of vital importance and is confronted by rows of cold, listless, indifferent faces, Sunday after Sunday. Innumerable pastors are living evidences of Divine grace and compassion when able to go on striving and believing, knowing that many of the minds in the pews before them are wandering far from the subjects of sermons, from prayers and the Bible lessons, or—worse yet—watching for pretext for criticism, from enunciations of words to expositions of doctrine; or for material for silly joke. Tribulations and sorrows of writer and preacher are shared by the teacher honestly intent on real teaching and training. The men and women supposed to read and inwardly digest and who occupy the pews and are supposed to join earnestly in prayer and listen intelligently to appeals to their consciences and thought are, after all, but the same boys and girls who idled and forgot in school, only a little more matured, sometimes somewhat wiser, sometimes more sophisticated and harder and more foolish; but with the same faults and temptations and weaknesses.

The parable of the Sower who went forth to sow is given for the comforting and strengthening of preacher, teacher, all who try to do service for God and fellow man. The more it is studied the more beautiful and reassuring it becomes. The sower of whom the Saviour tells us broadcast his seed, not with the wisdom of the practical farmer selecting only cultivated and promising soil, but with the higher wisdom that aspires to leave long lines of blessings here, to increase the hosts of the blest and redeemed in the hereafter. He sowed lavishly, with magnificent generosity, not measuring his labor and sowing by what he could see of prospects of yield, but giving, as God gives His rain, on the just and the unjust, hoping humbly, as did St. Paul—most powerful of all mortal preachers—that God, with infinite mercy, would give the increase. The meaning of the parable is illustrated by the Saviour Himself in His tender pity for the woman who was a notorious sinner, the Samaritan woman, the thief hanging on the cross.

All the conditions described in the parable are familiar now—the quick, emotional springing up of fine impulses and purposes and the withering equally quick because of lack of depth of conviction and earnestness; the choking of good intents by crowding temptations to greed and worldly ambitions. The busy, eager creatures stealing the seed for gratifications of their appetites and vanities and malice are all about us, as they have been since the beginning. The enemy sowing tares is yet active by day and night, secretly and openly, in high places and low.

Those trying to sow the good seed may not be permitted to see much of results. This side of eternity none ever is entirely safe or irretrievably lost. The complexities, vagaries, vacillations, changes, of the human mind and heart are beyond the knowledge of any of us. We may not know nor trust even ourselves without ceaseless vigilance and dependence on Divine aid. From our own experiences, however, we may draw comfort and endless hope. If we may not know how much of our endeavor is in vain we may not know, either, how much of what we have said, or done, or taught, which we think useless or wasted and which we regard but lightly is gloriously and beautifully and widely productive. Proverbs, texts, narratives in the Bible, simple hymns, stories of common human life, tell us that the Almighty grants magnificent rewards to apparent failures, uses sometimes the feeblest and poorest instruments for fulfillment of vast purposes. Most of us carry within ourselves memories supremely effective in leading us to good or evil, downward or upward, given us perhaps casually and carelessly and long ago. A sentence read or heard, a word, an intonation or gesture, a tone or line from the singing of a hymn or ballad, a scowl or smile—each of us carries in the illimitable storehouse of recollection countless things, large and little, all seed of one kind or another. By the mercy of God not all the seed falling on the thin soil, by the trampled highway, amid the thorns and exposed to the ravenous emissaries of destruction, is lost. Sometimes—many times—it is brought to lovely life and bountiful fruitage, overcoming its weakness, rising triumphant above the choking, shadowing, poisonous surroundings. All of us know, have seen and felt this. In times of stress and fear and darkness, in times of exultation and success, in the stillness of wakeful, troubled nights, amid the bustle and noise of crowded days, the long sown seed, the old memories, may awaken in us, suddenly and we know not how, to warn and guide, to deliver us from despair or deadly peril, the doubts and bewilderments of tangled paths.

Occasionally on country roads we may pass a gaunt, blackened, lonesome chimney marking the site of a burned home, or the home itself, deserted, desolate, falling to ruin; and in the weed grown, neglected yard a snowball or lilac bush or a few forlorn, struggling perennials, planted, probably, by the patient, loving hands of some woman. She may be buried and forgotten, or thousands of miles away, but her shrubs and flowers bloom faithfully at their appointed times, breathe out their fragrance and do their humble, unconsidered parts to gladden and beautify. Seed sown by preacher or teacher, parent or friend, where there is no aspect of promise may spring to vitality and grand increase in the uttermost parts of the earth and when the sower is gone to the final accounting—like the plants at the forsaken house. Our grandparents knew and loved the verses one line of which was, "They may forget the singer, but they'll not forget the song". Perhaps nobody now knows the writer of that line; but the line lives and is true of many a song and hymn and prayer and sermon and sentence and chapter.

Courage and hope and faith undismayed and gathering new fire and warmth from bleak chill, brighter light from black darkness, going steadily, patiently, staunchly on through bog and wilderness and thorns, over steep and desert; vigilance and diligence and purpose never relaxing, however barren and arid or rich and fertile the field, are demanded of every sower. The ways of God are mysterious beyond and far above our comprehension or imagination. For all we know, any one of us may have been created, given life and moulded and led for some one purpose which we execute unconsciously. We may not know the harvests from our sowing, whether great or small. We do know that we have no higher duty or nobler privilege than to sow whenever, wherever, however, we may the seed of righteous thought and good counsel, of kindly act, clean and helpful example, however crude and unskilled word and act may be, however useless our effort may seem to be. We can not know. We can try and continue to try and to hope. Sowing as we can, with humbled hearts and bowed heads and ascending souls, we may believe confidently that our honest striving and anxious prayer will not be in vain, that the seed will live, however thin the soil, dense the smothering growth, eager the enemies; will be blest abundantly in the Creator's own time and way, to bloom presently in unfading glory in the sweet vales of Eden, beyond Jordan.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE EASTER MESSAGE

Christ on the Throne of God still with us and ministering to us in His Church.

By the Right Reverend William T. Manning, Bishop of New York

A Sermon preached in the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine.

"But God raised Him from the dead."—Acts 13:30.

THOSE words tell us not of a speculation, or a doctrine, or a theory, but of an event, an event which has produced greater results, and has influenced the world more, than any other in human history. They carry us back to the sepulchre in that garden just outside of Jerusalem nearly 2,000 years ago.

Picture to yourself the situation as it was on that first Easter morning. The enemies of Christ had triumphed. They had had Him condemned and crucified, and buried, and they supposed, naturally, that this was the end of Him. The disciples were completely overwhelmed in defeat and despair. Their association and fellowship with Him was ended. Around the tomb where the body of Christ had been laid all was quiet. The soldiers were on guard. The great stone securely blocked the door.

And then something happened that changed everything. From men utterly defeated and despairing the disciples were changed into men whose faith nothing could resist, and note that this was the case not with one or two only but with all of them, those who were least inclined to believe as well as those who were most inclined to believe. The Christian Church sprang into life and began its Divine and beneficent work in this world. Something happened there which changed the course of human history, which brought a new spiritual and moral power into this world, which has produced the Divinest faith, the noblest hopes, the highest and most heavenly influences that this earth has known.

Now it is a law of reason that consequences such as those must have a cause adequate to produce them. And we know that the cause was an adequate one. For what happened in that garden was that Jesus Christ, the Eternal Son of God, Who for our sakes came down from Heaven, and was made man, and died on the Cross, rose there on the third day from the dead.

This was the event which changed the world and brought to mankind a new faith in God and in the life of the world to come.

Now what does Easter say personally to you and me.

1. Easter tells us that Jesus Christ Who rose from the dead is alive, and that He reigns today on the Throne of God. It is this alone which explains His continuing and ever increasing power in this world. It is this which explains why He Who was born in an obscure land, Who lived among humble people, Who was little heard of during His life here, is today the supreme influence of the world, ten million times more powerful than all the statesmen and leaders and philosophers of the world put together. Jesus Who worked in the carpenter's shop, Who walked the streets of Jerusalem, Who lived in this world in a human home and died on the Cross, is now—at this moment—on the Throne of the Universe. It is this, and this alone, which gives Him the right to speak those sublime words which have brought new faith and hope to mankind—"I am the Light of the World, he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life." "I am the Resurrection and the Life, . . . whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." Who but Christ on the Throne could say that? "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth, and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Who but Christ on the Throne could say that? It is not a mere human Christ, but the Christ Who is Divine as well as human, Very God and Very Man, Who speaks to the heart of the world, and meets its need. And so this Easter Day we sing our glorious hymns of praise and send up our prayers to Him where He now is on the Throne of God.

2. Easter tells us that Jesus on the Throne of God is as real, and as near to us in His Church, today as He was to those who met and talked with Him on that day of His Resurrection. That is the very meaning of the Christian Gospel. The Gospel doesn't tell us that Jesus Christ came into this world and died for us 2,000 years ago, and then went into some far off sphere at an infinite distance from us. That would not be of much help to us. The Gospel tells us that Jesus is still continuing His work in this world, that He still lives, and speaks, and ministers to us, in His Church, that wherever two or three are gathered together in His Name there is He in the midst of them, that in the Sacraments and Means of Grace of His Own appointment Jesus Himself still comes to bless, and heal, and uphold us with His living touch. This makes the Gospel a practical thing for our daily lives. This brings Christ into the midst of our ordinary experience, into touch with us plain men and women in our needs and trials and sins. Dear friends, if the Church is to be filled with power, if our young people are to find the help that they should in the Church, if our religion is to be a reality in our homes and lives what we need is faith, full faith, in Christ on the Throne of God still continuing His work here among us.

3. Easter speaks to us of the life beyond the grave where every one in this vast assemblage to which I am speaking will soon be. Easter tells us that there is a day soon coming when you and I will stand in the unveiled presence of Jesus and speak to Him, and hear Him speaking to us, as Mary and Peter and John and the others did on the Resurrection morning.

   There is one supreme moment coming for each of us, the moment when we shall go into the other world and stand face to face with Jesus Christ. Many whom we know and love are there now, still thinking of us and helping us with their prayers. Perhaps some who are closest to us, and on whom we have most depended in this life, some dear members of our own families are there with Christ, waiting to welcome us when our call comes. This is what Easter tells us.

And I am sure many of you are thinking of the great Bishop, Charles Henry Brent, who has just gone into that life, and for whose life here in the Church on earth we give thanks. May his example, and that of other faithful ones, cheer and encourage and strengthen us. And may this Easter Day give us a new realization of all that our religion means to us; Christ on the Throne of God still here with us and ministering to us in His Church.

Go back to your homes then, dear people, with the great words of faith ringing in your ears and strengthening your hearts and lives: "God raised Him from the dead."

"Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over Him. For in that He died, He died unto sin once, but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God."

"Thou only O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high, in the glory of God the Father."

DO EPISCOPALIANS REALLY BELIEVE THAT GOD EXPECTS THEM TO EVANGELIZE THE WORLD THAT IS IGNORANT OF THE GOSPEL?

Juan McCarthy, Archdeacon of the Cuban Work

I SUPPOSE that some people will be surprised at our doubting for one moment that the Episcopal Church assuredly does believe that it is her duty to engage energetically in the evangelizing of the nations which know not the Gospel. Such good people are fully persuaded that any branch of the Church of Jesus Christ must necessarily be a missionary Church; since to their mind, and our own also, just as soon as any branch of Christ's Church loses the zealous missionary spirit of the Apostolic Church, such an organization is giving an irrefutable evidence to the world that it has severed its connection with Christ the Living Vine, and as a consequence, it cannot be expected to bear any spiritual fruit, as the Master originally designed. Before going to His Father, He placed a tremendous emphasis upon the necessity of carrying out His Great Commission. He said: "Go ye—Episcopalians—into all the world, and preach the Gospel unto every creature."

It is to be presumed that there are many self-righteous persons who think that when they have given an insignificant quota for their Local Church, and Diocese, that they have complied with the requirements of Christ's Commission. It is a pity to have to disturb such poor mortals in their belief, but we in no wise exaggerate when we say, that the man or woman, be he bishop, priest, or layman, who harbors such an opinion, is altogether ignorant of the genuine spirit of sacrifice which Jesus, and the Apostles possessed. In the Apostolic age, the believers brought in all their possessions and placed them at the feet of the Apostles. Nothing in this world was too big a sacrifice for those converts in the primitive Church. They felt the immense burden of the Divine Commission. They too must deny themselves as Jesus did to bring men to the knowledge of Gospel truth. Their whole lives were lived for this holy purpose. That was why the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ made such wonderful progress in primitive times. And it might well be said, also, that the reason that we see none of the demonstrations of the outpourings of God's Holy Spirit upon our Church today, is for the simple reason that we have got away from the standards laid down by the Apostles. We have lost the spirit of self-denial; the spirit of genuine self-sacrifice. We have lost the vision of the millions who are dying without having ever heard about a loving Saviour who died for them on Calvary. How is it that we have lost the vision of those perishing souls? The great desire to become opulent has stifled the small voice of conscience. The love of pleasure has altogether smothered the little love that we perhaps formerly had for sincere cooperation in foreign missionary enterprises. It is truly sad to think that such a wonderful Church as the Episcopal has almost become blind to the spiritual needs of the nations round-a-bout; and especially to the demands of the lands bordering on her frontiers, or within what Americans claim as their sphere of influence.

Some good souls may get exasperated at this frank statement. But we crave their patience for a few minutes, and we are convinced that by the time we get through with this article, that such individuals will perfectly agree with our statement. Until a few years ago, the dear old Mother Church of England was supervising the evangelization of the Latin-American nations of South America, and of parts of the West Indies. I know personally their missions all through South America, and can testify to the beautiful Church structures possessed by the Church of England in all of the Latin countries in South America, and the West Indian Islands. In the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Brazil, Chile, Antofagasta, Lima, Callao, Santiago de Chile, Valparaiso, Temperley, Lomas, Palermo, Belgrano, Rosario, La Paz, etc., in the divers republics of Latin America, that Church has erected Christian Temples at great cost. I was astounded when I saw the vast difference between those handsome Church buildings, with rectories, and parish buildings, all through South America and the West Indies, when compared with the miserable buildings that we call churches and chapels here in the West Indies, appertaining to the Episcopal Church. Our Church can only show in most cases after twenty years of labor, in Cuba for instance, but the most miserable specimens of so-called churches and chapels. Most of these "chapels", or "churches" are just houses which were purchased, and no change at all has been made in their outward appearance, to shew the public that those buildings really are places dedicated to the worship of God. Such edifices are generally dingy and damp places, and instead of being inviting to the public, and attractive, they are on the contrary rather unattractive, and unenticing. Now I hate to have to say these things, but they are absolutely true, and to deny same, is simply to close our eyes to facts.

But, then, those we possess, but very few of them are our own buildings. Most of the places used for services are hired or loaned buildings. Among these are the following: Cienfuegos, Cardenas, Baragua, Manati, Sola, Garden City, Santa Fe, Santa Barbara, Semillero, Sagua la Grande, Santiago de Cuba, Ermita, Naval Station, Colon, Bartle Chaparra, San Manuel, Banes, Preston, Delicias, etc. Fifteen of these twenty churches and missions are held in loaned buildings, for which we pay not one cent, and at any time we may get notice to quit. The other five places we are renting for a miserable sum. The Bishop can do no better, for the reason that he has no money, even to pay an insignificant rent for a dingy old place, where at least we will have the appearance of being stabilized. But in most of the places where we have no Church property, our missions have been moved backwards and forwards so many times, after having been established for perhaps a year, or more, in each place, that at each removal to another district, our Church becomes more discredited, and is the laughing stock of the Roman Catholic clergy.

The other denominations do nothing of this. When they go into a city, they build chapels right away. And as a rule they put up very fine edifices. Concerning their school work, many years ago when the land was cheap, the leaders of the denominations had foresight, and purchased large plots of land for a mere song, because they were bought on the outskirts of what was then the city. Today the lots referred to are within the city boundaries, and would cost a fortune to buy them at this time. Now they have erected superb colleges and schools on those large lots, and have plenty of room to add on yet a whole lot of buildings. I refer especially to the splendid Presbyterian colleges and schools, the Methodist colleges in Camaguey, Cienfueges, and Habana. To the fine Baptist colleges and schools in different parts of Cuba. To the splendid Quaker school in Gibara. All of these Churches have their own properties, and they are a great success. While we, the Episcopalians have been hiring buildings for schools for very many years in the past, simply because our members in the United States have not shown any cooperation with our Mission Board, and allowed that Board to get into debt, and so be compelled to retrench the efforts being made in foreign lands. The rents which have been paid out in one school alone for the past twenty years, more or less, would amount to very near $100,000, at least. And yet, while paying that enormous rent, the school is lacking in most of the requirements which go to make up a good school. Most important among these lackings, is that of a playground where the children can have some sport and fun. The school has no room for expansion, so it is, that even if more children wanted to enter the school, there is no room for them. Thus we are paying out nearly four thousand dollars a year in a rented building, which is not at all adapted for the school.

In Camaguey our good Bishop is doing his very best to cover this deficiency. For years he has been paying a very heavy rent for the schoolhouse there. The school is making fine progress under the wise and capable administration of Mr. Tate, A. B. His gentlemanly treatment of the students has helped to bring confidence in our school. When he took charge of the school, things were not prospering. Defects in a former administration had not aided the school, but under the present principal, the school has more than doubled the number of its students, since he has the able assistance of a consecrated Cuban teacher, who is a graduate of an American Normal School. But the house, although a large one, is not convenient for a school. Our Bishop is anxious to avoid the experience of the Havana School, to continue paying heavy rents for many years, since this means that after spending so many thousands of dollars in house rent, we are no nearer the goal than we were very many years ago, as far as acquiring school property is concerned. We have a splendid plot of land in the heart of Camaguey, which Bishop Hulse bought last year. But there is the land, and it looks as though there it will remain, unused, simply because he has no money to put up the school.

Now, the lack of these churches, chapels, and schools, shows that Episcopalians have lost their missionary spirit; otherwise all the needs of Cuba would have been supplied many years ago. Our communicants are spending enormous sums on pleasures, fashions, theatres, joy rides, banquets, cabarets, sports, etc. These sums amount to millions weekly. Yet, for the Cause of God, these same individuals are so stingy, and tight-fisted, that everything is expended on their own selfish love of pleasures, that nothing is left for God and His Church.

Now, our Church is supposed to have one million and two hundred thousand communicants, more or less. In the United States even the poorest person can give twenty-five cents each week for foreign missions, if such an one so desired. Now, suppose that each one of our communicants were to consecrate his or her all to God, and determine to cooperate with our excellent Mission Board, so as to help it carry on its great work? What would be the immediate effect upon the mission fields? The effect would be nothing short of miraculous. The missionaries who have long been sorrowful, when they see the way their brethren in the U. S. A. are failing to support their efforts on foreign shores, would again take heart; with renewed energies would they again take up the plough, laid down because the Mission Board had to limit the work to be done, owing to the lack of funds.

One million and two hundred thousand persons paying only one quarter a week, or say twenty-five cents, each, would bring into the Church treasury about $300,000 each week, the which at the end of the year would amount to over fifteen million dollars. And who is the Episcopalian that cannot pay that miserable amount each week? Those who are unable to pay that small amount in the U. S. A. could be counted on both hands. And then, supposing there are a few who might be incapacitated from contributing that sum, the which I doubt very much, yet there are thousands who can triple and quadruple that amount, and make up for the deficiency on the part of the poor non-givers. I would earnestly request our readers to study with sincere prayer the following portions of Scriptures: Mal. 3:7-12; Gen. 228:16-22; Neh. 10:14; Romans 10: 13-16; Matthew 23:23; also, peruse over these words of the Apostle John, which are addressed to the Church of Christ in our own times: Revelation 3:15-22.

Think of what our Mission Board could do with an annual income of over fifteen million dollars! Suppose that only one million of that amount was given to Cuba for Church extension, how would the money be used? One of the first things to be done would be to build a nice church for the West Indian Negroes in Havana, so that they would not be handicapped by the Cuban or American congregations. That would cost probably about $40,000. We would have to build a good church for that important city of Cardenas, to cost at least (with land) about $25,-000. Another in Cienfuegos to cost more or less the same amount, or perhaps a little more. A school building in Havana for our Vedado School, about $100,000 to begin with. Schoolhouse in Camaguey, and church another $100,-000. Small church in Sola (the land is offered to us gratis, just as soon as we are ready to build), to cost $5,000. Church and rectory in Moron, $20,000. Church and rectory in Esmeralda, $20,000. Church and rectory in Santiago de Cuba, $100,000. Renovate the church in Jesus del Monte (Cuban), and school house, $20,-000. Two churches on the Isle of Pines, one in Santa Fe, and the other in Santa Barbara, $16,000 for the two. Renovate the church of Bolondron, $2,000. Renovate the church and rectory, with the schoolhouse in Matanzas, $25,000. Schoolhouse and rectory with renovations of church at Los Arabos, $15,000. Church and rectory at Colon, $12,000. A chapel at Ceballos, $3,000. Three residences for the Archdeacons of Oriente, Camaguey and Habana, to cost more or less $10,000 each. A chapel in San German, $5,000. A church in Sagua la Grande, $10,000. These buildings would incur the expenditure of about $600,-000. This would leave four hundred thousand dollars for advance work, for the purchase of land in very important cities, and capitals of Provinces, with an idea of carrying on future work in them. If we are hoping to extend our work in Cuba, this is most essential. If this is not done then in a few years we will have to pay ten times more for the land than we will pay for it now, which has happened over and over again, and still we have not learned the lesson. Twenty years ago in the Vedado we could have bought the whole block on which is found the Bishop's residence at four dollars a square metre, which today will cost ten times more money.

The Episcopal Church is a Church of many millionaires. Have we not among us a single millionaire who will give Bishop Hulse, as a loan, without charging interest on same, one million dollars, for twenty years? Then with the interest produced by that sum of money the Bishop could build up all of the aforesaid institutions, and buildings, and purchase land everywhere for the advancement of the Cause of Christ, and when twenty years had expired, return the million dollars again to the generous person who had made such a loan. In this way the money would still be in the possession of the wealthy man, or woman, and he would have the joy of knowing he is doing a noble work for the Kingdom of God, and cooperating with the Church in sending the Gospel to those who know it not. But the far better plan, and the most Christian plan is that every member of our Church get under the burden that is oppressing the Church, and in this way the heavy load will be made lighter, and the great task will be easily consummated.

Some years ago I was in a great meeting in Battle Creek, Mich., when an appeal was made to about 1,500 persons who were present, to come up to the help of the Lord. That particular church wanted to extend its missions in other lands, but did not have sufficient money to do so. I well remember the fervor with which the orator spoke: he pictured the needs so vividly, that every heart present was touched by the spirit of sympathy. When the offertory was taken up, the people actually rushed to the platform to deposit thereon their rings, ear-rings, gold and silver watches, bonds, shares in large corporations, title-deeds of their properties, gold and silver coins and paper bills were piled up to a great height. It was a truly marvelous scene. It reminded me so much of the Pentecostal Church, when the people gave all they had to the Apostles. And again, when Solomon wanted to build the temple, it was wonderful to see how the people, whose hearts were touched by the Spirit of God, thought not of themselves, but brought their gold and their silver, and precious jewels, etc., to God. See 1 Chron. 29:1-17, and placed it all at the feet of David and Solomon. Every time the people's hearts have been stirred by the Holy Spirit, there has been also a liberal outgiving of riches, to show to God that the spiritual awakening was really sincere and not merely a passing emotion. See Exodus 35:4, 5, 20-29. In this manner the needs of the Church were supplied.

Would to God that the Holy Spirit would stir the hearts of Episcopalians today. There is a tremendous need of such contact with God. We have become short-sighted in a spiritual sense. Our spiritual vision is very defective, being blurred with love of money, and pleasures. We need to cleanse out the channels of our lives, so that God may make us channels of blessing to mankind. To become useful in God's service, we have got to return to the foot of the cross, there to repent of our past negligence in neglecting to carry out Christ's Commission. Let the blood of Jesus Christ cleanse us from all egotism, which in the past induced to abandon the first principles of Christianity, which are based on self-denial, and thus forget the duty we owe to the world for which Christ died. No power can be expected in our midst unless we cast aside those things which have hindered the advent of heaven's blessings. As long as we refuse to do this, we are Achans in God's encampment, and obstacles to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. That is the very reason that we lag behind in the payment into the Church treasury of God's portion. That is the reason that our mission is compelled to ask the Bishops in foreign fields to reduce their budgets greatly, as the Mission Board must cut down the yearly allowances granted to Missions in foreign lands by at least three per cent of the whole. That means that when those foreign missions received the whole amount of the yearly allowances, they were unable to make a single advance move, and were enabled barely to cover the running expenses. But now these same missions are forced to reduce their expenses by three per cent of the sum granted to them; they instead of going forward, as is logical, are constrained to take a backward step, thus proving to the world, that Episcopalians have lost their first love for souls, and with it the spirit of the Blessed Master; for which reason we are shorn of Pentecostal power.

I would pray our Heavenly Father that every Episcopalian will get right with God, by making a honest confession to Him, and being resolved from now on to faithfully comply with the Divine Commission, by giving a whole-hearted cooperation to the efforts put forth by our splendid Mission Board, so that from now on, the words defeat, or retrocession, may not be found in the Protestant Episcopal vocabulary, but that every lay member will join heart and hand with our Bishops to help our Mission Board to efficaciously extend the important work which has been commended to its charge by the General Convention. This will be done if every communicant of our grand old Church will only take to heart the remarks made above. May God give us each the grace to accomplish His divine will by aiding in the evangelization of the nations living in spiritual darkness.

Note.—The Venerable Juan McCarthy, D. D., was Field Missionary in South America for nineteen years and Missionary in Cuba 1908-1918. He has been Archdeacon in the Province of Camaguey, Cuba, since June, 1924.

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER EASTER

Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O Almighty God, who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto Thy people that they may love the thing which Thou commandest, and desire that which Thou dost promise; that so among the sundry and manifold changes of the world our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to found, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE teaching of the Church for this Sunday in Collect, Epistle and Gospel is "conformity with God", and as a necessary consequence, non-conformity with the world". The teaching of our Lord in that greatest of all sermons, "on the Mount", is very plain: "No man can serve two masters; we cannot serve God and Mammon" (Matt. 6:24). The Collect is a prayer for this life of single service, the service of God. We cry to God as the only source whence can come such conformity, who alone can order our unruly wills and affections. In the three-fold petition we ask more than mere submission to the will of God; 'tis but a slavish obedience that merely submits; in this prayer we ask that we may learn to love His commands, to love to find out not merely what He wills, as almighty, but what He wishes, as our loving Father, "that we, being ready both in body and soul may cheerfully accomplish those things which He commands". A careful study of the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm (which Mr. Spurgeon calls "the mirror of the gracious heart") will help us much in learning to love God's commandments; for almost every one of the one hundred and seventy-six verses teaches some new excellence and beauty of God's law. "Oh, how sweet are Thy words unto my throat (says the Psalmist); yea, sweeter than honey unto my mouth." And the result of such love of God's commands appears in the last clause of our Collect; our hearts will "surely there be fixed where (and where alone) true joys are to be found".

THE Epistle for this Fourth Sunday after Easter is St. James 1:17-21. As in the Collect we pray for conformity with God's will, so here in the Epistle we are taught and urged to conform our will to the will of our Heavenly Father, who "of His own will begat us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of His creatures". St. James here refers to the new birth of the Christian by which he became a "member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven"; that change of heart which we call conversion, and which comes by the word of truth, that is, the Gospel. It is our Heavenly Father's wish and will that we should be converted and live unto Him, and "walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4). Observe the great force of St. James' words; no variableness, no shadow of it, in the life of Christ, a life lived in the world when it was very evil, much more so than now, evil as it now is. A life exposed to every temptation that can befall one whom Satan is seeking to turn aside from the narrow way, yet a life without sin; a life that we might be hopeless of imitating in any degree, but for the many gracious promises of guidance and assistance given us in that same word of truth, by which we were brought within the walls of salvation. St. James tells us to receive the engrafted word "with meekness". Meekness or gentleness always goes hand-in-hand with true lowliness and humility, as in Eph. 4:2, Paul bids the Christian to walk with all lowliness and meekness. These are the most necessary qualities to make the heart "good ground", in which the good seed, the "engrafted word" will surely take root, and bear abundant fruit unto everlasting life. In such "good ground" the seed, the word, the blessed word, will not be wasted, but watered and nourished by the grace of God, there will be a fulfilment of Isaiah's beautiful words (Is. 55:10-11): "For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may bring seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it."

THE Gospel for this Sunday is St. John 16:5-15, and is a portion of that chapter just preceding the Gospel for last Sunday. In this Gospel Jesus tells the Apostles how the promised Comforter, the Spirit of truth, will guide them into all truth, assuring them that it is expedient for them that He should go away and leave them "a little while".

Our Gospel begins with Jesus telling His disciples: "Now ber He had told them what He was going away for, to prepare a place for them, and Thomas, though he dared not ask the question directly, showed his deep concern in what was impending over Him (Jesus) and them, by saying, "Lord, we know not whither Thou goest, and how can we know the way?" and Jesus tells him the way, saying, "I am the way," but whither that way leads He tells not, except that it leads to the Father.

Much is told us of this strait and narrow way that leadeth to the Father, and to everlasting life, how to get into it, by repentance and faith, and baptism, and how to keep in it by sacramental grace; with this we must be content, surely it is enough. It is a part, and a very important part, of our probation in this period of our existence that we should be satisfied to wait and see in His good time what are the mansions that He promises us, where "He will receive us unto Himself, that where He is there we may be also." "We walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. 5:7), so St. Paul says; may we have such faith as his, when he says at beginning of the chapter: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle (that is, our bodies) be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." And observe the true faith, the happy faith, is that which is content to see one step at a time, to be content with today's supply of bread, of nourishment for body and soul, without anxiety for tomorrow's.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Dr. Arthur H. Howitt, of St. Johns, Newfoundland:

> "I am crucified with Christ; Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Galatians 2:20.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well very near us?

THE TWO MYSTERIES.

The young daughter of a dear friend of Walt Whitman's died a few years ago. The old poet sat in the night-watch about the dead girl and wrote the following, which combines religion and philosophy:

We know not what it is, dear, this sleep so deep and still;
The folded hands, the awful calm, the cheek so pale and chill;
The lids that will not lift again, though we may call and call,
The strange white solitude of peace that settles over all.

We know not what it means, dear, this desolate heart-pain;
This dread to take our daily away, and walk in it again;
We know not to what other sphere the loved who leave us go,
Nor why we're left to wonder still, and why we do not know.

But this we know: Our loved and dead, if they should come this day—
Should come and ask us, "What is life?" not one of us could say.
Life is a mystery as deep as ever death can be;
Yet, oh, how sweet it is to us, this life we live and see!

Then might they say—these vanished ones—and blessed is the thought!
"So death is sweet to us, beloved, though we may tell ye naught;
We may not tell it to the quick, this mystery of death,
Ye may not tell us, if you would, the mystery of breath."

The child who enters life comes not with knowledge or intent;
So those who enter death must go as little children sent.
Nothing is known. But I believe that God is overhead,
And as life is to the living, so death is the dead.

THE NEAR EAST RELIEF IN GREECE

Reverend Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr.

A FEW months ago, very early one morning I, a voyager on the Mediterranean Sea, reached the Harbor of Phaleron with the ports of Pireus, the entry into Athens, before me. Never shall I forget the sunrise over the harbor, and the Acropolis with the Parthenon coming gradually into the picture. Among the first aboard the ship was Dimitrios Lezos, a splendid young Greek from the Near East Relief in Athens, who met me on deck and escorted me on the tender which took us to the pier. From here we drove into Athens following a good road which runs beside the ancient fortifications of Pericles. When we reached Athens, that city whose beginnings are lost in the shadows of history, I went at once to the Near East Relief headquarters, where I met the Director of the Grecian Area, Mr. Christopher C. Thurber, who is a lay reader in the Episcopal Church.

Mr. Thurber has seen more than eight years of service with Near East Relief. At one time when the plight of the Christians in Turkey was most terrible, he had the oversight of an orphanage of 3,000 homeless children. He had been given orders to take in no more, but who could see little children left without food and shelter and make no effort to save them? Not Mr. Thurber. He put the matter up to the children and they were willing to have their food supply cut down to two scant meals a day. The Director gave the same orders for his own meals, ate the same plain fare that was served to his wards, and by this means and the most careful economy along other lines, he was able to take in 4,000 more children. Twice he was imprisoned by the Turks, and like St. Paul who on one of his missionary journeys had passed through that region in Asia Minor, he was beaten with rods, once left to die unconscious on the floor through the entire night. He was invalided home but when health and strength returned he sailed to take up again the work for the children he loved. I give these facts concerning Mr. Thurber entirely without his knowledge or consent to show you what kind of men are on the firing line of the Near East Relief and to ask you if such souls as these are not worthy of every help we can give them?

The School for the Blind.

In the Kephissia Building in Athens with its fine views of the city I visited every room. Here are housed two hundred and twenty-eight children. I saw the wonderful work there being done for the blind children. I heard these blind children read and recite and answer questions in a most intelligent fashion. I saw the work of the four deaf-mute boys, who attend the deaf-mute schools. I visited the Manual Training Department and the bakery, where boys are learning to make good bread, and I saw the printing establishment where boys are being instructed in the printer's trade. I noted how neat and well ordered the dormitories were, with plenty of fresh air and sunlight. I was impressed by the organization of the work in this building and how happy every one seemed to be. Fitting two hundred and twenty-eight children for their life work, and doing it with uttermost efficiency and in the spirit of love. Worthwhile? There is only one answer from those who have actually seen this work of the Near East Relief.

With Professor Michaelides, who is carrying on so much fine educational work here among the Armenian children, Dimitrios Lezos and I spent part of the morning in roaming about ancient Athens.

Homes for Working Boys and Girls.

After luncheon with Mr. Thurber and Dimitrios Lezos I visited the Working Girls' Club opened in October, 1927, through the gift of $1,000 from the Anglican Church of Victoria, British Columbia. It is a fine old Greek residence near the ancient Arch of Hadrian on the road to the Acropolis. Here Near East Relief cares for girls, all of whom are seeking to overcome some handicap. Through the efforts of the Near East Relief workers openings have been found for these girls in millinery, dress making and other establishments, where they will soon learn a trade and become self-supporting.

There is also a Home in Athens for boys who have been "graduated" from the orphanages. This place has only sleeping quarters much like our Y. M. C. A. dormitories. These boys have a night school, reading rooms, clean beds with clean sheets and towels, and the privilege of hot baths. For these they pay fifteen cents per month, one day's earnings. No boy is kept here after he receives a wage amounting to more than $20 per month.

In the House of Hadrian's Arch I visited the Near East Relief Industrial Shop, where there are for sale all kinds of interesting articles, such as handkerchiefs, luncheon sets, sewing bags, doilies, pocket-books, scarfs—all beautifully embroidered and offered for very reasonable prices. These are made by the older orphan girls and refugee women. This shop is very popular with the tourists.

The Refugee Camp.

From this shop by Hadrian's Arch I drove out to the Fix Refugee Camp on the way back to harbor. Here hundreds of Armenian families are housed. From this vast camp site I could look up at the Acropolis bathed in the glory of the afternoon's sun and I thought of that ancient and cultured civilization that had reared the Parthenon and then of our own times and the Armenian Massacres that drove into Greece these refugees and I thought, too, of that hospitality of Greece in taking in these homeless men, women and children and of the Near East Relief that is so tenderly taking care of them.

The Fix Refugee Camp is one of the most interesting places I have ever visited. It is a place, too, that appeals strongly to one's emotions. From such junk as could be picked up the little huts that line the crooked alleys have been constructed by loving hands that worked along while memories of the old home in Armenia crossed and recrossed the thoughts of the builders. I went into many of these hut-homes and visited the refugees. In some little room fitted up with the bare necessities of comfort sat an old Armenian woman sewing. In another hut was an aged woman sitting alone and thinking of the terrible days of massacre and persecution—alone with all her loved ones gone. I saw many little children playing in the yards of the kindergarten and singing old songs from Armenia. I shall never forget how those songs touched me. Here in a strange land, like Israel at Babylon, boys and girls were singing the ancient songs of their tragic Armenia.

It was my pleasure while in this Fix Refugee Camp to assist in the distributing of the pretty dolls sent to Greece by American friends for little Armenian girls. I wish you could have seen the expressions on the faces of those little girls as each tot received her doll! I would that you could have seen the hugs and kisses those dolls received! What tender arms pressed them and what loving hands caressed them! Just to have seen all this was worth a trip around the world! "Surely of such loving, trusting little ones is the Kingdom of Heaven". This humanitarian work that cares for hundreds of refugees of persecuted Armenians and puts dolls into the arms of baby girls—Is it worthwhile?

The Camp Sunday School.

I went to that little room, where the Camp Sunday School is held and was impressed by its order and by the religious pictures that adorned the walls. I heard about the many services held in this place and of the spiritual uplift the talks, the singing and the prayers brought to the refugees.

Late in the afternoon I left the Fix Refugee Camp and drove with Dimitrios back to the Harbor of Phaleron and just as the setting sun's light streamed in glory over the Acropolis, bringing to mind Byron's lines about burning Sappho and the setting sun, our steamer sailed away, bound for the Adriatic and the port of Venice, there to begin our trip across Italy, to Bologna, Florence, Rome and Naples.

From my contacts with the Near East Relief work in Jerusalem and Athens, I have brought home with me definite impressions, expressions and appeals. I know that the Near East Relief is doing a stupendous work for good and that its influence cannot be measured. I know that this work is being carried on by consecrated leaders in a most efficient and economical manner. I know that the Armenian and Asia-Minor Greek orphan boys and girls, and even those older than they who have been outplaced are getting through the Near East Relief high standards of living and schooling that make for magnificent citizenship. The orphans' bodies are being fed and advanced into health; their minds are being trained and their souls are being inspired. The Armenian and Greek people are witnessing a rebirth, largely through the work of the Near East Relief. I appeal to you, my American friends, to press on and on and on in this great cause until you have fully rehabilitated these worthy Christian peoples and given them in all its fullness and power LIFE resurrected out of the despair and tragedy of persecution and massacre into a new hope, a new faith and a new love.

THE BISHOP GIVES THANKS

Report for the Year Ending December 31, 1928, by the Bishop of Alaska, the Rt. Rev. P. T. Rowe.

Another report! And it is my Thirty-third! It is said that "To think is to thank"; so thinking of the Providence of Almighty God; His preservation of me through the year, and the past thirty-three years, I am thankful. And thinking of the Board, its great Secretary and the many friends, I am thankful. Without the Divine help and the assistance of the Board of Missions, the Secretary, Dr. John W. Wood, the innumerable host of friends, there would be nothing for me to report. I am mindful of the Clergy, the women, who are doing the work in Alaska, faithful, loyal and devoted. To these beloved co-workers, to the friends who are partners in the work by reason of their gifts and confidence, I am thankful.

A report calls for statistics. They will be given in another place. Here, one is obliged to give a story of what has been going on.

In February I started out for Fairbanks, visiting the Missions on the way. At Cordova, the Rev. L. F. Kent joined me. I had to have his help for the ordination at Fairbanks. The journey to and from Fairbanks meant for him near two thousand miles, and for me, four thousand miles. And the expense—of which I cannot speak. Only think of this—just to carry out an ordination!

So here in Fairbanks, after due examination, I ordained in St. Matthew's Church, the Rev. Mervin L. Wanner, to the Priesthood; Arthur G. Fullerton to the Diaconate. Mr. Fuller came by dog team two hundred and fifty miles; it was cold—some 55 degrees below zero. Fairbanks was putting on its Derby Dog Races. There were many "outside" visitors. Captain George Wilkins and his aviator, Ben Eileson, were there preparing for their flight over the North Pole. All Fairbanks people were greatly interested in this ordination.

In May I left for a visit to the Yukon region—the interior of Alaska. While in Dawson I confirmed fourteen, at the request of Bishop Stringer. Then I visited the Missions at Eagle, Fort Yukon, Beaver, Stephens Village, Rampart, Tanana, Nenana, etc. On the way I met tourists—held services on the steamers—told them of our work. It was a great opportunity. They were surprised to learn and see that the Missionary work in this great interior of Alaska was being done solely by our Church, and they were interested. It was a surprise to them to see the fine Hospital and Church equipment at Fort Yukon.

At Tanana I met Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Monteagle, of San Francisco. As Church leaders they are well known. In making the trip to Alaska their chief interest was in the Missions of our Church. They saw them and they were most enthusiastic about them. If more of our Church folk would do as they did, the Missionary interest would be increased.

In September I visited Prince Rupert, B. C., and participated in the consecration of Archdeacon Rix, as the Bishop of Caledonia. In September I also left to attend the General Convention at Washington, D. C.

For several years we have been doing much building work; much in the way of restoring, renewing old buildings. I have been fortunate in having the help of Mr. N. J. Nicholson, a practical mechanic. He moved the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital at Fort Yukon nearly a mile, to remove it from a dangerous place. He also rebuilt the Mission residence at Fort Yukon; built the new school, church and house at Nenana; and I am using him still to build the Mission House at Allakaket, and transform the Hospital building at Tanana into a School for Orphan Children. He is invaluable.

Plans were made towards building a new Mission residence at St. Johns-in-the-Wilderness, Allakaket. Like all buildings erected thirty years ago, the present Mission House suffers from the ravages of time and decay, and "chink" it as we may, yet it is not habitable during the spells where the thermometer goes down to sixty-ve degrees below zero. Mr. Nicholson took the Pelican, with a scow loaded with lumber, looked over the situation—but I had to withdraw him. The building work at Allakaket must now wait until the spring of 1929. The reason for this change is that—due to Deaconess Bedell's suggestion—we decided to close the Mission at Stephens Village, wreck the buildings there and transfer them to Tanana. And this has been done. The Pelican was used to do this work. The logs, effects, etc., were duly rafted and taken to Tanana—Deaconess Bedell being transported on the raft.

St. Andrew's Mission was abandoned because many of the older people had died and the young generation, upon marriage, moved to places more suitable for hunting and trapping. But we hope to take care of the children at Tanana.

There has been and is at Tanana a Hospital building, similar to the one at Fort Yukon. We have not been able to use it as a hospital because we could not get the necessary workers. Now such a use of it is unnecessary. To convert it into a home for children seemed the best thing to do—and it is done. Mr. Nicholson has done this work. It has cost much. But here Deaconess Bedell is transferred. The house will be filled with children—as many as Deaconess Bedell's friends enable her to take care of.

In addition to the above, the church at Fairbanks has been completely restored. Built under the direction of Archdeacon Stuck in 1905 it was the most picturesque, artistic building in Fairbanks—not even excepting our George C. Thomas' Library. The people wished to destroy it and build a new church. I objected and arranged to have it restored—repaired. Nicholson did this. It is most satisfactory. It stands now, as through all the past years, the most artistic building in Fairbanks.

We are building at Anvik—our first Mission in Alaska. The epidemic in the spring of 1927 carried away so many parents—leaving us some forty orphan children—that the Rev. John W. Chapman appealed for the help to care for these children. And the help came. So we are caring for these children, preparing to do so in a satisfactory way. New buildings are necessary and this year we have been getting out logs, sawing lumber, for building purposes. It was deemed advisable to let the materials "season" before beginning to build. The building will be done in 1929. Though our veteran Missionary, the Rev. Dr. J. W. Chapman, was entitled to his furlough in 1928 he did forego it in order that he might get things in readiness for the building work in 1929.

Work has been done in repairing our properties at Skagway, Douglas, Juneau, etc., for I am desirous of having all our Church property in the best condition possible.

St. Thomas Mission, Tigara, Pt. Hope, Arctic Alaska, Archdeacon Frederick W. Goodman, has built an annex to the Church, doubling its capacity. It was greatly needed. It spells also of progress and growth. In 1929 he hopes to enlarge Browning Hall, double its present capacity. What with his ministerial-medical duties, I am surprised that the Archdeacon in a short Summer season can do anything else—to say nothing of time given to building. It is a place, too, where you have no mechanics, no trained labor upon which to depend.

The above surely indicates that we are doing something—building materially—but I hope spiritually as well.

Hospital Work.

Among the people of Alaska our Church has been called "The Hospital Church". And there is good reason. In every new camp in Alaska I was the first Minister of Jesus Christ to enter. The first request made to me was, "Bishop, give us a Hospital, if you can". I responded. Hence, I established a Hospital at Circle City, in Skagway, Valdez, Ketchikan, Fairbanks, Fort Yukon and Wrangell. Owing to the decadence of camps and for other reasons, these Hospitals were given up, so that today we have but three—The Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon; The General Hospital, at Wrangell; The St. Thomas Hospital, at Tigara. But we have, in a minor way, hospital service at Nenana, Anvik and Allakaket. To recite the story of our merciful work, through our Hospitals, would be interesting, but there is no room for it in a report.

Tourists, doctors, travelers, know something about the Hospital at Fort Yukon. Mr. V. Stefansson, the explorer, knows. He was a patient in it for some months. Heads of the Geological Survey know of it for some of their company were in it and received successful treatment. No words can express fully the great services of this Arctic Hospital, and its head, Dr. Grafton Burke.

The Hospital at Wrangell is an institution which has the loving affection and interest of the public and wins an admiration from all sorts of people for our Church.

The Hospital at Point Hope is perfect—it waits a doctor and a nurse.

Then, in other places, the Church meets the needs of many through its dispensary work.

The educational work of the Church on behalf of the natives, is evident through its schools, industrial, at Anvik, Nenana, Fort Yukon and Tanana, and its day schools in every native Mission. I refrain from details, but through these we have developed young men who in the years to come will carry on the work of the Church among their own people.

The Workers.

We are blessed with a staff of workers—unexcelled. They are loyal, faithful, devoted and self-sacrificing. As furloughs due to them occur yearly, we have our trouble to fill their places. Without the workers of fine spirit, we can do little or nothing.

All Saints' Church, Anchorage, and its large district, has been without a clergyman for two years. St. John's Church, Ketchikan, is vacant—has been so for over a year. It is unnecessary to go on—we have vacancies and it is not possible to do the work if you have not got the workers. For the summer months I had two students, one at Skagway and one at Ketchikan, at my expense, who did very satisfactory work.

I have applications from good and true men—men outside our Church—whom I hope to use, for if our own Church cannot "give of its sons" then I am going to use, if I can, men who offer from some other branch of the Church.

In conclusion, I beg to say that our work in Alaska makes some progress. We can only advance as the District advances. The District advances in population, etc., but slowly. Why, I cannot say, because it is a great country and has great opportunities. But there is the fact. I think our Church and its work is regarded highly, by all classes. I would love to see more progress, but how can you progress when there is no progress in the District? However, we are here—we are doing our part—and I think it is an influential one. Alaska is a part of the United States, whatever the conditions may be. The Church is doing her part in the good of the country and holding aloft the banner of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our quota was $1,080—we have paid $1,510.80.

The statistics are given on blanks sent from the Board of Missions.

My financial statement is submitted.

Book Reviews

DEEDS DONE FOR CHRIST: By Sir James Marchant, K. B. E., LL. D. Cloth. Pp. 335. Published by Harper and Brothers, New York City. Price, $2.50.

If in this rushing, impetuous age we could get people to sit still awhile and regard with sympathy those whose lives in the far past shone lustrously for the Lord, there would be less discussion of the Christian Faith; more absorption of the Christian Spirit. Dr. Marchant has wisely chosen the present time for a call to meditation. Have all those wondrous souls, "Saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs", given themselves to a psychological delusion? Here is a challenge. A whole library of fascinating history, tingling with evangelical zeal, luminous with all-compelling light, strong with divinely imparted energy, lives laid down in joyous hope of the resurrection, is here spread before us. Our ancestors received their inspiration and unction from just such literature. There is every reason why we should. What God has wrought through others; what God has conferred upon others, He lovingly waits to make expressive in us.

PRINCES OF THE CHRISTIAN PULPIT: By Harry C. Howard. Cloth. Pp. 448. Published by The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $2.50.

This is the second of a series on this theme by this lucid and convincing writer. How man lived and preached, struggled and strove with but one consuming passion—to reach and save souls; how the Spirit of God fell upon the honest hearers, subduing their hardness, winning their penitence and flooding their hearts with melting desire for God's reconciliation may well engage our serious thought. Dick Sheppard's "Impatience of a Parson" is based upon the lack of this very thing in our modern preaching and appeal. Dr. Howard confesses his embarrassment in selecting such of luminous leaders of Christian thought as may be comprehended within the scope of this survey. We might all have other choices; but he has done well. For in his list of great men who have inspired and moulded the lives of their generation are evangelists, mystics, ecclesiastical princes, reformers, and hard-headed men of studious thought and popular insight. A valuable asset to the lay and clerical library. Kenneth Mackenzie.

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS IN PAGEANT: By the Rev. Bernard C. Claussen and Florence L. Pruington. Paper bound. Pp. 73. Published by The American Tract Society, New York City. Price, 60c.

While Bunyan's anniversary is passed, there is room for this brochure in Church Schools and other organizations. The plan is simple and no elaborate settings are required. The introduction of well-known hymns gives a familiar atmosphere and promotes deeper interest and engagement on the part of the congregation.

GIRLS' PROBLEMS OF TODAY: Discussed by Mother Ruth. Cloth. Pp. 224. Published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill. Price, $1.50.

Readers of the Sunday School Times will at once recognize this production. It may well be placed in the hands of every adolescent girl whose mother would have saved from pitfalls everywhere evident to snare the unwary. There seems hardly a difficulty which besets our modern girl that has not come to the attention of Mother Ruth and been judiciously treated. There is nothing of the seamy sexual herein. But good, sound, sensible ideals for the Christian girl, who is red-blooded and full of the joy of living. An excellent index is appended.

Herein are praise songs by such writers as Henry Alford, Christopher Smart, George Herbert, Lancelot Andrewes, John Mason, T. B. Browne, Charles Wesley, John Milton, St. Francis of Assisi, H. F. Lyte, Thomas Ken and Reginald Heber. Attractive and appealing to those who would reach out to the spirit of praise and adoration by means of dignified poetry.

PROTESTANTISM IN THE UNITED STATES: By Archer B. Bass, A. M., Th. D. Cloth. Pp. 364. Published by Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York City. Price, $3.

A veritable thesaurus of the subject. The history of the various communions and sects, and even individual cults, claiming the imprimatur of Christian, is here faithfully and exhaustively treated. Such a painstaking product deserves a large reading. The appendix A is itself worth much to the student of modern Protestantism; and the Addenda and topical index rank as well in importance.

The great and grave problem is that of finding a way to unite the separated units for more efficient service and satisfaction. The enormous waste of money in supporting six churches where one would serve the end; the evident rivalry and bitterness accruing thereby; the far-removed fulfillment of our Lord's petition, "That they all may be one"; these are considerable elements for discussion in this valuable book. Yet, allowance must be made for "differences of administration". Unity in organism always spells indifference to ideality; for the surrender of marked doctrinal positions for the sake of unity must create a supineness which could extract the very marrow of doctrine from the body of believers. This the author is frank to admit.

It is on the mission field that the problem is most easy of solution. For the accentuation of divergent views and dogmas has not sunk deeply enough into the lives of the new Christians of the Orient. There may come a day when the insistence upon immersion by the Baptists will give way to alternate choice; when even the Anglican communion will admit to service in its limits those who may not have had episcopal ordination. If that can be found to afford a workable system for the saving of souls, the coming generation will, despite our present protest, make a way to effect it. The onward sweep of independence is too strong to be held back by our conservatism. The problem must be solved, if we are true to our trust, by a faithful dependence upon the Holy Spirit, the administrator of the Church. This worthwhile contribution to the burning question will set us to thinking and thinking hard.

A PLAN FOR COLORED MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor:

Many years ago I was very much impressed by a remark of the Rev. Dr. E. L. Goodwin, then Editor of The Southern Churchman, with respect to the Colored Work. In substance, he said to the writer, while I favor the Missionary District plan, understand me, I also favor the use of all and any plans which will accomplish the desired end.

Here is one plan which I believe can be most successfully worked in the large cities of the South: Organize a church for the Colored people, with a white vestry, judicially selected from among the most friendly white Churchmen of that city. The said white Vestry to continue until a sufficient equipment has been realized, and the congregation, fully and entirely self-supporting. The white Vestry to retire upon the recommendation of the Bishop. By such a plan (provided the proper white men can be secured), the parish, for a number of years, would be represented in convention by one of their number: the vestry would provide funds necessary, over and above that raised by the congregation; likewise, upon them would devolve the responsibility of adequate equipment, in buildings, etc.; such association would bring them in sympathetic touch with the Colored race, which would prove a helpful connecting link. And, lastly, the Vestry, together with the Bishop, would find a proper Colored priest to be called by the Vestry as rector. This last point is important with respect to two definite aspects. The Vestrymen being men of practical business experience, would secure the best that could be had, and the man so selected would set himself strictly to work on moral and spiritual lines, and not be burdened with money raising, and, in the second place, by his constant association, and contacts, with such men receive a sort of most helpful education which could not be received otherwise. By the time that a large and numerous Colored congregation, with adequate buildings, was built up, in that community, it is more than probable that there would be little or no feeling with respect to the reception of a lay representative of the Colored race in the Convention. A local business committee, representing the Vestry could be appointed in such congregation. This is simply one plan, among many, for more efficiently prosecuting this work. In the large cities we must make a strong appeal to the race. When the race sees the leading white men of that community interesting themselves, in realizing a proper equipment, and obtaining for the benefit of the Colored people the wisest and ablest race leadership, doubtless they will be more resigned to work and wait patiently for the consummation of the ideal, when a vestry of their own race will enter fully into the goodly heritage.

We learn from experience. I have been in the ministry long enough to know thoroughly well that there is no help so vitally necessary as that intimated in the above plan. The spirit of this advice has been conscientiously, and unfailingly, observed during my entire ministry.

EVOLUTION.

Mr. Editor:

Scientific men have always prided themselves the world over that they wanted only the facts, but notwithstanding this, many of them profess to believe in evolution as a really existant thing. Yet no real proof exists of this, but everything in nature really points to the contrary. A lifelong story of plants and animals of all kinds as well as man goes to show that no matter how long the care and culture has been, the moment that care is relaxed the improvement or evolution begins to go back at once. Take a man who has been brought up with every luxury and refinement and turn him loose among savages and, unless he is careful at all times to keep up, he will soon relax into a barbaric condition and this reversion takes place very quickly. Thus no breed of birds, plants or animals, can be kept up to the mark without constant care, and man is no exception to this law of the Creator.

While we have plenty of men who can act like monkeys, they cannot change the length of their arms or change the shape of their skulls to correspond to their antics, and the more the ways of nature are studied the less will the doctrine of evolution be accepted. It is only by bringing out and developing the best strains and traits of character that man can ever attain the perfection intended by the Creator, and eternal vigilance and high moral courage is required as well as faith and a pure religion to attain this end.

PROOF.

Mr. Editor:

A few days ago the Protestant Episcopal Church League mailed out to the Diocese of Dallas a circular letter, inviting Protestant Episcopalians to become members of the League. One of these fell into the hands of an "Anglo-Catholic" (to which there was no objection, as the League has nothing to conceal), and he mailed it to the writer, with the following notation:

"I want to thank you for the free advertising you are giving the so-called 'Anglo-Catholic' party.

Sincerely yours,

Louis C. Taylor,

Anglo (Pro-Roman) Catholic."

Many thanks for furnishing Protestant Episcopalians with the proof.

COVENANT TESTAMENT.

Mr. Editor:

Whenever the Greek word for "covenant" is used—diatheke, it should be translated "covenant", notwithstanding that thirteen times in the Authorized Version it is rendered "testament".

Of these thirteen passages it will be seen that in eleven, the word could be translated covenant with evident advantage, for it is well-known that they refer to the new covenant that God has made in Gospel time.

The only two passages that present any difficulty are Heb. 9:16 and 17; and these present no difficulty when correctly understood.

When God made a covenant, He required sacrifice, to remind men of the great propitiation. See Gen. 15:10; Jer. 34:18. So that testator in Heb. 9:16, should be rendered, instead of "testator", "appointed" (victim).

As to Heb. 9:17, it should be remarked that "men" is not in the original. It should be translated in a covenant is sure over (Greek epi) the dead appointed (victims) and is of no strength at all while the appointed (victim) lives.

DIVES AND LAZARUS.

Mr. Editor:

Your correspondent, L. R. Combs, makes it an open question whether this of our Lord's to the "Pharisees who were covetous", is a parable or history. Unless it be a parable, then fire to burn and water to alleviate the pain of it, are precisely the same agencies in the spiritual world as is this, and the body of the rich man was not where we are told it was "buried", but in Hades and the emphasis of "torment" is placed on physical pain.

The dramatic setting in all its arresting features, is clearly in keeping with the Master's favorite method of compelling attention: "Without a parable spake He not unto them". To save space, we do not amplify on details. Is it not possible that the prime point of this illustrative "possible actual scene" (!) is mostly overlooked? I, for one, am disposed to think it is; and that it may be found in this. To show that there is nothing in death, to change character, disposition.

Dives was so inhumanly self-centered, that he heeded the piteous plight of his suffering kinsman, less than the dogs did. He is the same in Hades. So entirely, that not only has he no word of either regret for the past of Lazarus, nor of congratulation for the present, but actually thinks of him even as simply a possible agent for his own relief, without a syllable of regret for his former utter indifference towards the hunger and thirst he could have relieved at no cost to himself. "Father" Abraham, but not "brother" Lazarus, even now: The same aloof selfishness. His interest in those he has left behind, is confined to "my father's house", who presumably were enjoying the amplitude of his barns in the same way he did. And again, the beggar of their "afar off" acquaintance was of concern in proportion as he might serve as an agent of selfishness. Then as to prayers for the dead, although one could not see how the discussion of that use is germane in this connection, it is certain that the Christ "Who went and preached to the spirits in prison who were some time disobedient", will have no rebuke for you or me, if our hearts are big enough and our faith keen enough to pray for those there now. And that He who "took little children in His arms and blessed them", should frown on the mother whose baby was taken from her arms yesterday, because she cannot yet realize how her infant must not miss her yet, and must pray for it or break her heart! No, a million times no. "Prayers for the dead" is an unwarranted putting in any case, if we believe as we profess, that there are no dead. One hates to seem captious, but do spirits "Yell?" As to "the judgment of the court of last resort, happily the New Testament tells us that is a long way off yet—"the great Assize". And there must be good reasons; quite irrespective of resurrection for bodies are not judged, but what was done in them.

First Meeting, Chinese Library Association.

At last, after delays resulting from the disturbed conditions of recent years, the Chinese Library Association was able to hold its first "annual" conference early this year, meeting in the new capital, Nanking, from January 28 into February, attended by one hundred and twenty-two delegates, from sixteen of the eighteen Provinces.

All who know the important work of the American Library Association, founded in 1876, have some idea of the enormous possibilities ahead of its young brother in China. Indeed the relative value may be even greater in China, for the need is greater and similar organizations are few.

The Director of Boone Library School writes; "It is remarkable that in this period of civil war and general disturbance, libraries, with very few exceptions, have remained unmolested and have actually gone forward."

The conference had six sectional meetings, in due form, discussing library administration, architecture, classification and cataloguing, filing and indexing, bibliographies, and library training. Daily meetings were held from 8:45 to noon, from 2 to 5, and from 7 until after 10, and the delegates remained throughout. Prominent members of the central executive committee of the government gave a cordial reception to the conference members, and the Minister of Education gave them a banquet. The executive committee contributed $2,000 to defray the conference expenses and made an additional grant of $1,200 to the organization.

Boone Library School made a good showing at the conference; four of the staff and all six students of the present training class attended. Seven graduates came from other libraries.

The genesis of the C. L. A. is as follows: Miss Mary E. Wood, who went to China in 1899, built up Boone Library. In 1920 she started Boone Library School, the only library school in all China. Its graduates have served in twenty-one libraries, in ten leading Chinese cities. As the appreciation of modern library methods and service increased, a successful appeal to the United States Government was made jointly by Chinese and Americans, that a portion of the Boxer Indemnity Fund should be used to further library progress in China. The remitted fund was placed in the hands of a Foundation, made up of Chinese and Americans, and the American Library Association in 1925 sent over Dr. A. E. Bostwick on a friendly mission, during which he proved to be technical adviser, diplomat and excellent friend to China. The Chinese Library Association was organized during his visit.

The need of further provision for library training was emphatic, and the Foundation, instead of starting a new school, made an annual grant of $10,000 to the only existing school, at Boone. The recent conference re-emphasized the increasing need of trained library workers, and requested the Foundation to increase the grant. It was further requested that the national universities, through the Ministry of Education, offer short-term courses of library training.

American Church people, through their own missionary, Miss Wood, and their own special agency, the Church Periodical Club, as well as by direct contacts with Boone, have long felt a personal interest in the whole subject. Given adequate and increasing support, especially at Boone Library, the whole modern library movement can contribute immeasurably to the sound development of China and the welfare of its people.

Albemarle Convocation, April 29-30.

The spring meeting of the Albemarle Convocation will be held in Christ Church, Charlottesville, April 29 and 30, 1929. The program is as follows:

Tuesday, April 30—9:30 A. M., Quiet Hour, conducted by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr. 11 A. M., Holy Communion. Convocation Sermon by the Rev. Douglas Neff. Business Session. 1 P. M., luncheon. 2:30 P. M., essay, "The Relation of Modern Scholarship to Modern Theology." Essayist, the Rev. Noble C. Powell; speakers, the Rev. F. L. Robinson and the Rev. R. F. Gibson. 3:30 P. M., Business Session. 8 P. M., Evening Service and Missionary Address. speaker, the Rev. George P. Mayo.

Bishop Brent and the Commission on Faith and Order.

This Minute on the death of Charles Henry Brent, Bishop and Doctor, was adopted by the Commission on Faith and Order, April 4, 1929:

To Charles Henry Brent, Bishop and Doctor, belongs the high praise of giving to the Episcopal Church the impulse which, for the past twenty years, has kept it seriously and constantly at prayer and work for Christian unity. At Richmond in 1907 he stirred the heart and conscience of the General Convention by a passionate appeal for unity in view of the disastrous effect in missionary fields of the present divisions among Christians. His words lingered in many memories and undoubtedly prepared the way for the unanimous response which, three years later at Cincinnati, the Convention gave to his stirring call for instant action.

It was then that this Commission was created, and we, its present members, do now thankfully acknowledge that to Bishop Brent is due, not alone the origin of our work, but also the chief measure of success vouchsafed to it since its beginning up to the notable consummation of the Lausanne Conference in 1927, over which he was chosen to preside.

Bishop Brent's influence and leadership within his own Communion proved to be a prophecy of the influence and leadership which he was destined to exercise among those who, representing almost every Christian group throughout the world, have had the cause of unity at heart. He had outstanding gifts of spiritual insight and devotion, of intellectual and moral courage, of ardent missionary zeal, and of loving human sympathy. These, joined to his wide and fruitful experience in international affairs, fitted him, as men are seldom fitted, to carry through to a high point of accomplishment the purpose which possessed him.

In view of the great things wrought by the grace of God in and through the Bishop's life of arduous labor and sacrificial service, his death, however deeply mourned by multitudes in many lands, is rightly seen more as a triumph than a tragedy. For those associated with him in what was his absorbing aim and passion, especially for us who were privileged to be his fellow workers in this Commission, the memory of his dauntless confidence that, as our Lord wills unity, so unity shall be accomplished according to His will, must endure not only as an inspiration, but, even more, as a solemn and holy obligation.

He being dead, yet speaketh,
And his works do follow him
That they all may be one.

Bishop Brent.

Bishop Brent once said that he could not think in terms that were less than world-wide. Now, after his death in Lausanne on March 27, the world is reciprocating, and appreciation of him is as wide as his own interests. Great movements, national and international, and great leaders at home and abroad unite in paying splendid tributes.

Child Health Day.

By the President of the United States of America:

A Proclamation.

Whereas the future of our nation rests with the children of today; and

Whereas the good health and protection of childhood is fundamental to national welfare and the march forward of our country must be upon the feet of children; and

Whereas a joint resolution of Congress authorizes and requests the President of the United States to proclaim annually May First as Child Health Day; now

Therefore, I, Herbert Hoover, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate May First, of this year, as Child Health Day and do invite the people of the United States and all agencies and organizations interested in this most important subject to make every reasonable effort to bring about a nation-wide understanding of the fundamental significance of healthy childhood and of the importance of the conservation of the health and physical vigor of our boys and girls throughout every day of the year.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-fifth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fifty-third.

Herbert Hoover,
By the President.

Frank B. Kellogg,
Secretary of State.

First Objective of W. A. Completed.

The Corporate Gift of the Woman's Auxiliary has reached the amount of $27,500. This means that the first of the four objectives, $25,000 for a church in Santo Domingo, is completed.

Boys' Work.

A conference of leaders in boys' work gathered from fifteen dioceses, was held under the auspices of the National Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Philadelphia, April 4 to 5. Among the subjects discussed at the conference was: "Developing the Spiritual Life of the Boy," "Promoting Church Attendance," "Work in Colleges and Preparatory Schools," "The Problem of Sex," "Personal Evangelism by Boys Among Boys," "The Correlation of Parish Organizations for Boys' Work," etc.

While only a minority of those present were connected with Junior Brotherhood Chapters, it was the consensus of opinion that this work should be stressed as being normally the most practical and effective plan for discovering and developing youth leadership in the Church.

At the request of representatives of educational institutions present, a special committee on Brotherhood work in preparatory schools and colleges, was appointed to make a study of the needs and methods and report at a later meeting. It was voted also to have two conferences next year, similar in character to this, but located in different sections of the country.

A Great Summer Conference Center Secured for the Episcopal Church in the South Atlantic States.

As the result of a quiet, but persistent campaign sufficient money is now in hand to assure the purchase of Lake Kanuga for the use of the Episcopal Church as a center for a wide variety of activities.

This beautiful property in North Carolina, located six miles from Hendersonville, and about the same distance from Flat Rock, and some twenty-eight miles from Asheville, includes a hotel, annexes and cottages, giving a total of about three hundred bedrooms. Just in front of the hotel is one of the most beautiful of the smaller lakes of the section, which provides fine swimming and boating. In every direction roads and trails provide fine opportunities for walking and horseback riding. Some of the most beautiful scenery in North Carolina can be reached in an afternoon's automobile ride. A large auditorium affords splendid opportunity for indoor athletics and various sorts of entertainments.

During the coming season a comprehensive program of activity will be carried out. The first regular conference will be for boys and girls from fourteen years of age up. It will begin June 17 and last for twelve days. The forenoon will be devoted to classes and conferences. The afternoons to recreation and athletics, and the evenings to programs of various kinds.

On June 20 the junior conferences for boys and girls under fourteen will begin and last for a like period.

On July 17 the combined conferences for clergy, Woman's Auxiliary and Church School workers will open and last also for twelve days.

A strong faculty of teachers and conference leaders has been secured for all three of these periods.

Beginning July 28, the property will be operated on the hotel basis. During the hotel period last summer, the first year of operation as a church center, some twelve states were represented among the guests.

The Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop of Upper South Carolina, will again be president of the conferences and general manager. Circulars giving full information may be obtained by addressing him at Columbia, S. C.

"Victory Offering."

The Committee on Ecclesiastical Relations of the National Council has sent forth to the clergy the following letter asking support for a "Victory Offering" for the Near East Relief on Sunday, May 12:

To the Clergy:

General Convention was advised that Near East Relief was organizing a final appeal to the American people in the form of a "Victory Offering" to provide $6,000,000 for the purpose of final training and permanent placement of the more than 30,000 orphans then in its care. This plan includes provision for the conservation of religious forces of the Near East through the strengthening of the ancient native churches and for the future welfare of the neglected Assyrian race.

General Convention approved this appeal by passing the following resolution:

> Resolved: That we heartily endorse this final effort of the Near East Relief to discharge its duty, and urge both clergy and laity to respond generously and cooperate wholeheartedly.

Enclosed are Near East Relief pamphlets explaining the urgency. Its object is almost accomplished. It is a "last stand" on which hangs fulfillment or failure. They call it a "Victory Offering" in which they trust every congregation and Church School will do its share.

Americans, including in the front rank our own Church people, have been responsible for establishing and maintaining for ten years this great mission for relief and service, and we are responsible now to see it through to the end. We therefore earnestly urge your participation. The Near East Relief officials ask us to suggest that the final "Victory Offering" in our parishes be made on the Sunday after the Ascension, May 12.

Faithfully yours,
Frederick F. Reese,
Chairman.

William Chauncey Emhardt,
Secretary.

If you desire additional material to help you present the matter to your people or for distribution, this may be obtained from the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. The offering should be sent to that address or else through our own National Treasurer.

21 Dioceses Represented.

The semi-annual meeting of the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, held in Philadelphia, April 6-7, was notable for the large attendance and wide representation, twenty-one dioceses being represented.

A message of greeting from the Presiding Bishop was brought by the Rev. C. E. Snowden, Executive Secretary of the Field Department, and the Council pledged its hearty cooperation in the program of the General Church.

The report of General Secretary, Leon C. Palmer, showed a healthy growth in the number of active Chapters, due especially to the recent Extension Campaign of the Brotherhood.

The quarterly report of the auditors showed for the past quarter all bills paid and a cash balance in bank, with no obligations outstanding. Walter Kidde, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, outlined the present business policy of the Brotherhood, providing for an equitable allotment of the budget among the dioceses, to be personally secured by members of the National Council without the employment of a financial representative. Diocesan quotas were accepted and in many cases underwritten by Council members present.

Joseph A. W. Inglehart, of J. A. W. Iglehart and Company, Baltimore, was elected Treasurer, succeeding Dr. Chas. E. Beury, of Philadelphia, resigned. Four new Council members were elected as follows:

Paul Rusch, Tokyo, Japan.
John W. Jacobs, Williamsport, Pa.
E. L. MacVicar, Seattle, Wash.
Charles E. Cole, San Francisco, Cal.

Special consideration was given to the work of the Junior Department, based upon Findings presented by the Junior Leaders' Conference held immediately preceding the Council meeting.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop's Guild Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Bishop's Guild was held in St. Alban's Guild Hall on Wednesday morning, April 17. Splendid reports were read from practically all the women's organizations in the diocese. Some of these were: Woman's Auxiliary, B. Branch, Little Helpers, Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, Episcopal Home for Children, Episcopal Church Home (for the Aged), St. John's Orphanage, Daughters of the King, St. Monica Guild, National Cathedral School for Girls, House of Mercy, Church Periodical Club, Church School Service League, Girls' Friendly Society, All Hallow's Guild.

Annual Council of Daughters of the King.

The thirty-third annual council of the Order of the Daughters of the King was planned for Thursday, April 25, at St. Stephen's Church. The program was as follows:

Quiet Hour, 10 A. M., conducted by the Rev. Calvert E. Buck, Superintendent of the Episcopal Eye and Throat Hospital.

Celebration of the Holy Communion, 11 A. M., celebrant, the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church, assisted by the Rev. E. M. Thompson, vicar of the Chapel of the Nativity, the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, rector of Trinity Church, Takoma Park, and the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector of St. John's Church, Georgetown.

Prayers for Missions, 12 noon.

Organization, roll call, appointment of committees and prayers of the Order, 12:30 P. M.

Luncheon in the new parish hall, 1 P. M.

Memorial service, followed by business session and election of officers, at 2:15 P. M. During this session Mrs. A. K. Anderson read an historical sketch of the Daughters of the King in the Diocese of Washington. Mrs. A. A. Birney, Past National President and member now of a local chapter of the order, was present, as were also visitors from nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Venerable Box Trees Change Abode.

Much interest has attached recently to eight large box trees, which have been moved to the Cathedral grounds to be planted near the College of Preachers in accordance with landscape plans for the whole Cathedral Close. These box trees were brought from Bowling Green, Va., and are very old, one being seventy-five or more years old. This and other work done on the grounds have been made possible by generous gifts for the garden.

Potomac Lodge Attends Service.

A delegation from the Potomac Lodge of Georgetown, one of the oldest Masonic Lodges in the District of Columbia, attended the afternoon service at Washington Cathedral on Sunday, April 21, as a part of their observance of the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the founding of the lodge. This service was preceded by the dedication of a memorial stone which members of the lodge have contributed to the Cathedral.

M. M. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Churchman's Club.

Over two hundred and fifty members of the Churchman's Club attended the spring meeting at the Emerson Hotel, Baltimore, on Monday evening, April 15. The dinner was preceded by the annual business meeting and election of officers. All the old officers were re-elected—Mr. Edward Guest Gibson being the President.

Bishop Murray made an address on his visit to Haiti, telling of the work of the United States Government and of our own Church, dwelling especially on the new Cathedral, which he consecrated, and the need of a residence for Bishop Carson.

After the Bishop's address, Senator David McIntosh, of Baltimore County, told of Maryland's own "Billy Barton" in the famous Aintree Race, in England. His lecture was illustrated by separate slides of the race and later by movies of the entire race.

New Office of Instruction Used.

Upon the occasion of Bishop Helfenstein's recent visit to the Church of the Messiah, Hamilton, the new office of instruction was used in the Confirmation Service for the first time in the Diocese of Maryland. The responses were clearly made and the service left a deep impression upon the people. He confirmed a class of thirty-six. The Rev. James A. Mitchell is rector of the church.

St. Alban's Church.

On Easter Sunday, St. Alban's Church, Glen Burnie (the Rev. F. M. Heil, rector), enjoyed for the first time their recently organized vested choir, consisting of twenty-two members. At the same service, Mr. Heil dedicated a processional cross, given by Mrs. Henry Baldry, to the Glory of God and in loving memory of her husband.

Toc H.

The Rev. M. P. G. Leonard, padre of Toc H, will visit Baltimore from Friday, April 19 to Wednesday, April 24.

Mr. Leonard is an English clergyman and wartime chaplain of the British Army and was decorated by King George with a Distinguished Service Order for unusual gallantry. During the war he was champion light weight boxer among the officers of his Division and is a Boy Scout Commissioner of his home town district at Manchester, England.

Since the World War he has devoted his time to Toc H, an organization for young men, which originated in a rest house known as the Talbot House, in France, where the chance was given for recreation and spiritual refreshment.

Mr. Leonard will speak at the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, on Friday. On Sunday next, he will be at the Church of the Messiah and Emmanuel Church. On Monday he will speak to the student body of the Baltimore City College, and at St. Mark's Church-on-the-Hill, Pikesville. On Tuesday he will address the boys at Donaldson School, Ilchester, and the girls at Oldfield's School, Glencoe. In the evening he will be at the First Presbyterian Church. On Wednesday he will be the guest of the local Toc H at their rooms, 1002 Madison Avenue, Baltimore.

N. E. P.

Hannah More Academy.

Bishop Murray rededicated St. Michael's Chapel and opened the "Anna L. Lawrence Memorial" building at Hannah More Academy, Maryland's Diocesan School for Girls at Reisterstown, Md., on Saturday afternoon, April 13.

The service in the chapel was a simple and impressive one, conducted by Bishop Murray and Bishop Coadjutor Helfenstein. Others in the chancel were Canon Fletcher, of the Washington Cathedral, formerly Principal and Chaplain of Hannah More; the Rev. Hobart Smith, Chaplain of the School, and the Rev. Philip J. Jensen, one of the members of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Edward N. Rich, a Trustee, read an account of the early history and development of St. Michael's Chapel.

After the service, the new building was dedicated with proper prayers said by Bishop Helfenstein, and Bishop Murray delivered the address in which he praised Miss Lawrence and her work. She was a teacher at Hannah More for twelve years and principal for ten years. The blessing was pronounced by Bishop Murray.

Miss Laura Fowler is the principal of the school and it is largely through her efforts that the new building, with its light, spacious classrooms and attractive dormitories has become a reality. In addition to the Lawrence Memorial,

COLLECT FOR THE FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

O Almighty God, Who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto Thy people that they may love the thing which Thou dost prom-and desire that which Thou dost promise; that so among the sundry and manifold changes of the world our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. PHILIP'S AND ST. JAMES' DAY.

O Almighty God, Whom truly to know is everlasting life; Grant us perfectly to know Thy Son Jesus Christ to be the way the truth and the life; that, following the steps of Thy holy apostles, Saint Philip and Saint James, we may steadfastly walk in the way that leadeth to eternal life; through the same Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Eunice Wingate Quimby.

Gray hair fast-thinning, wrinkles, slower hearing,
Frame stooping, dimmer eyes,
Are not decay. A chrysalis is forming
From which there soon shall rise
A new embodiment to fresh surroundings,
And in its newer guise
Called by the name by God on white stone written,
His welcoming surprise.

"Love Your Enemies."

What does Jesus mean by loving our enemies? Fortunately, He has left us in no doubt. Accustomed as we are to think of love as an affectionate relation based upon intimate comradeship, we may wonder if we are to love our enemies as we love our parents, a husband or wife, or a confidential friend into whose sympathetic ear we pour our aspirations, desires and problems. That sounds absurd. And it is absurd. That seems impossible. And it is impossible "Love your enemies," said Jesus, and then He goes on to explain what He means. "Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you." The love which we are to entertain for our enemies is not the love of intimate friendship, but a goodwill that harbors no resentment or revenge, a good-will that is actively displayed in philanthropy and prayer. "Do good . . . pray . ." It is the noble quality of neighborliness that is ever ready to do a kind deed because the desire of the heart is for our neighbor's well-being and happiness. That this is difficult when one is confronted with active dislike goes without saying. That it is possible, we cannot doubt unless we doubt the power of God's Holy Spirit upon hearts given wholly to Him. Moreover, there is nothing unwholesomely weak or sentimental about this feeling and attitude of good-will. There are severe elements in good-will as Jesus plainly showed in His stern rebukes to Peter and His frank exposure from time to time of unworthy motives behind His followers' actions. Yes, good-will is difficult, nobly difficult, but it is not soft or cringing; it is kind, but never dishonest. To love our enemies is to have in our hearts a good-will for them that is secretly displayed in prayer on their behalf and openly displayed in active kindness that promotes their welfare.—Canadian Churchman.

The Nonpareil or Painted Butterfly.

The Spaniards, exploring the land they called Florida, were so delighted with a bird they found there that they bestowed upon him the daintily graceful name "Painted Butterfly". If you have ever seen the nonpareil flash his prismatic form against the green of June you will conclude that Spaniards were none too fanciful in their estimate of him. The French of Louisiana call him "pape". Another of his common names is "painted bunting"—again the touch that hints of Spain.

Months ago a song came from the feathery foliage of a locust tree. It sounded like an indigo bunting's song that had been denatured; an indigo bunting's song with the brilliancy washed out. When I sought a closer view of the singer he took flight, revealing himself a smallish bird with drab plumage.

Another time I saw him quite plainly. His body and bill were sparrowlike, his coat a dingy greenish gray. He was a bird who had a none-too-remarkable appearance and who sang a none-too-remarkable song. Yet he interested me as day after day he sang from the thorn tree, chiefly because I could not identify him. When he slipped south he left the question of who he was piquantly dangling.

The following spring a brilliant bird flashed gaily before me one bright morning. Winging close—he had swung within three or four feet of me—his coat radiant against the green of a wall of honey-suckle, he produced an effect little short of startling. He lit on top of the banked vines and rested for a spell, his coat gleaming bright blue and yellow, scarlet, green and purple. A bit of rainbow sitting on a green wall!

He flamed to a nearby elm where again he perched; and sitting there on an outer twig he lifted his voice in song. It was a none-too-remarkable song. It sounded like an indigo bunting's song that had been denatured; a bunting's song with the brilliancy washed out. It was the same song precisely that the drab fellow had sung last year from the locust tree.

There could be no mistaking his identity now; not in that crying coat! The Spaniards' painted butterfly!

And that is how I came to know the nonpareil, the "pape", the painted bunting. First, a bird plain to the point of drabness; next, a creature clothed in rare bits picked up from some gorgeous sunset.

The female nonpareil retains the greenish gray dress throughout life. Nor does the male, until he is about two years of age, don the dazzling coat that marks him the most gaudily plumaged bird of the United States. Nature seems to pursue an unhurried way in working out a masterpiece.

The painted bunting winters in Central America. He reaches his breeding range, Southeastern United States, in April. The individual that gleamed against the honey-suckle that June morning probably had been in the neighborhood the full two months before I glimpsed his chromatic form. That he, dressed so conspicuously, could have lived practically at my doorstep for that long unobserved seems a bit of a mystery. Yet he had—for many days of the two months at least. Proof of this was quickly forthcoming. Three or four days after that June morning the painted bunting's nest was revealed—in the cool retreat of a brief-festooned elm shrub, less than two hundred yards from my back yard. Nor was the nest a bran new home. When I parted the greenery three very recent nonpareils made mouths at me!

A bird, once met with, is apt to flit into your view thereafter with surprising frequency—perhaps because you then know how and where to look for him—and this richly caparisoned fellow was no exception to the rule. During the rest of his summer stay it was no hard matter to catch sight of him. He showed preference for the outer branches of the larger trees, sitting half hidden in the leafy green. From his not-too-conspicuous yet elevated perch he did most of his singing. He often would quit his tree to dart into the dense cover of low-grown shrubs, or would plunge swiftly to earth, where sparrow-like he would quest the ground.

He was pugnacious, a quality that came more and more into evidence as the young nonpareils advanced from nestlings to bold world-adventurers. The day the three youngsters left the nest was for the gaudy parent a period crammed with much excitement; excitement intense; excitement prolonged; excitement more than enough to wreck him. If his parts had had the frailty of a mere human the next day must surely have ended him. But the next morning he was as radiantly blithe as ever.

Some time later he plumped down for a parade on my lawn. If his journey across nearly two hundred feet of turf was a search for food, then the search was curiously casual. Rather he seemed bent on showing off a lot of brilliant colors against the lush green of a freshly clipped lawn. Leisurely he hopped his iridescent way through spaces of sunshine and stripes of shade—a polychromatic promenade. Then leaping suddenly into air he disappeared behind the honey-suckle wall like the burst of a pigmented bubble.

It was the last I saw of him that year. A fittingly colorful farewell for even a painted butterfly.—Our Dumb Animals.

The Truth in Love.

Speaking the truth in love, and indeed doing it, does not mean turning love into sentiment or truth into compromise. It may be a long and difficult road which will lead us to the place and the time when a synthesis between truth and love is accomplished, but the road must be trodden if the Church is to be loyal to its Lord. We search for truth in love, and we search for love in truth. In love we work and serve, and at long last will come that reorganization of society which is worth the having because based on love. It is love of God which brings the vision of truth in its train, it is love of man which is touched with the unselfishness of Christ, and brings that unselfishness into common life, it is love of truth and right which seeks first the Kingdom. Thus and thus only can all other things be added, all controversies settled, and all problems solved, for He giveth us not the spirit of fearlessness, but of power and of love and of discipline, and perfect love casteth out fear.—Bishop of Chelmsford.

Auntie Makes a Helpful Suggestion.

Auntie May was spending the day at Jeanne's house. The two had just stepped out for a walk when they met Baby Louise and her mother. They were about to start on after chatting a moment when Jeanne asked Auntie to wait a few minutes. She ran back into the house to return presently with her brand new "bye-lo" doll in her equally new carriage.

She had a moment of indecision when she saw Louise, her face beaming, running joyfully to it, shouting, "Louise push, Louise push", but she came on toward the group with her prize possession, and though looking somewhat rueful, allowed Louise to catch the handle of the carriage. In a moment Louise had abandoned the idea of pushing and had taken the doll in her arms, but as quickly Jeanne took it from her, anxiously, and carefully replaced it, while she warned, "Mustn't touch the dolly, Louise, only push."

Louise's momentary joy of possession made her eager for more, so again she dragged the dolly from her covers and again Jeanne recovered her, this time to rush into the house with her treasure, leaving only the carriage, which of course no longer satisfied Louise. There followed shrieks of dismay while her mother, the unspoken words, "How selfish!" plainly written on her face, tried to comfort her.

Auntie May said nothing, as she felt that a discussion of the conduct and traits of her niece was imminent, and she objected to discussing them with a neighbor.

Because Jeanne was an only child and because she had always been showered with beautiful toys, every one predicted selfishness except Auntie May. For the moment, however, Auntie May became a bit troubled. "It did appear selfish," she thought, "but then Jeanne has always been painstaking, quite beyond her years, to keep her toys in good condition. I can't believe it was pure selfishness."

When they were once more at home and Jeanne was playing happily with her doll, Auntie May said, "You love your dolly, don't you, dear?"

"Oh, yes! better than all my other toys."

"She is such a lovely dolly. Baby Louise loved her, too, didn't she?" continued Auntie May.

"But Auntie! I was so afraid she would let her fall!"

"Well, of course, Louise is too little to think of being careful. She could play better with Raggedy Ann, couldn't she?" suggested Auntie May.

"Oh, yes! she can have Raggedy Ann any time. I don't mind who plays with my toys if they will only be as careful as I am. You know Arlene broke my big dolly and Jackie smashed my washing set, and—"

"Of course, Arlene was too little to play with your big dolly and Jackie was a boy and did not know just how to play with a little girl's washing set."

"Well, I just won't take my dolly out when Louise is there, any more. She can have my balls and blocks and such things, and I'll let Evelyn and Ruth play with 'bye-lo' dolly—they're bigger, you know."

"Hardly a selfish decision and surely a justifiable one," though Auntie May. "It's just as easy to be sympathetically suggestive as to be hastily condemnatory, and very much more profitable."—Paulene Thomas, in National Kindergarten Association Release.

JUBILATE.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

The fairy part of me lured me
Along a winding country road,
And lead me to the nearby woods.
Those woods are a wonderful place—
A huge, wide forest primeval.
The pines form a vast, dim cathedral:
The green bows, with glimpses of blue sky between,
Are the stained-glass windows,
With sunlight drifting through in a hazy shimmer;
The murmur of the bay is like
The muffled din of street noises outside;
There are great, massive rocks tomb-shaped,
With lichened, clear-cut inscriptions;
A mosaic of brown needles paves the floor;
A delicious piney odor provides the incense;
Little flowers blossom in the shadows,
And twinkle like candles on an altar;
The windows are opened wide;
Through the fluttering curtains come glimpses of the garden;—
A huge bed of crocuses, looking like daubs of paint
Splashed on an artist's palette,
The trees are almost in full leaf;
Millions of flower-buds are bursting with eagerness
To unfold their curling petals;
Some stately old apple trees, twisted and bent
Have been allowed to remain in the garden,
Like worthy old pensioners;
Their spreading bough are leafy;
Their buds are like pink pearls set in green;
Another warm day will turn these old trees
Into glorious bridal bouquets. My heart is filled
With a dizzy-fizzying stuff called joy;
The sun has polished every thing warmly;
The air is a-tingle with triumph;
The breezes are dancing on tiptoe;
Oh! I must keep in step with the world;
For something good is coming to it!
"Springtime is here!" laughed the bay.
The warm sun writes the message all over the sky—
Words of sunlight on a parchment of blue.
"Spring is here! Spring is here! Spring is here!
Awake! Awake!" Mother Nature calls.
Birds and trees and flowers answer;
Here their whispering echoes singing,
"Spring is here! Awake! Sing! Sway!
Bloom!"
Oh, I can't help being happy!
Rapturously, joyously glad!
It's such a beautiful, shiny-bright world,
Now Spring is here!

Slang.

A prominent doctor of foreign birth recently said some pointed things about the difficulty he encountered in mastering the English language. It ought to bring a sense of shame to our hearts to hear him say that we, the greatest nation on earth, ruin the greatest language on earth with our abominable use of slang.

The Doctor is right. We need an "anti-slang society" to organize against it. This society should spread over the country and set itself to the task of ridding our native language from the vicious and vulgar slang that has fastened itself upon us. This anti-slang movement should spread in all our schools and homes, and our people should be appealed to to carry forward this much needed reform.

It is a strange and inexcusable fact that this habit is more pronounced among students in our educational institutions than anywhere else. The very ones who are supposed to give themselves to the proper use of the most beautiful tongue are using their efforts to violate and corrupt their wonderful language. As a matter of pride and loyalty we should join the "anti-slang society" and help save our great English language from this vulgar abuse.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

PRAYER.

Alone I climb the hanging crags of prayer
Steep beyond steep, cry beyond broken cry,
And never a sluggard is more slow than I,
And never a dullard falls more heavily where
The aim is rising, climbing to bright air,
To watch with God while Heaven and earth go by.
O bruised and fallible into His far sky
I reach. I clutch at Him for Whom I care.

Steep beyond steep I climb above my pain
When the bright answer wavers and grows
dim;
Cry beyond broken cry, again, again,
From the rough crags up to heaven's high rim,
Until His light is shed in me like rain
Until I lose the light and rest in Him.

—Marguerite Wilkinson.

The True Hope of Glory.

Jesus, the Great Lover, was so sure of the future life that He looked upon the doubters of it with a sort of wonder. And he imparted His own assurance to those who loved him, as Livingstone put it, "on the honor of the perfect Gentleman". That which imagination cannot grasp, that which the eye hath not seen nor the ear heard, has been revealed by the Master to those who truly love Him. The deep wisdom of mothers and martyrs and little children has never doubted. Christ in us is the true hope of glory. And the New Testament word "Hope" is not our weakly and attenuated word, but a full-blooded word thrilling with confidence and assurance. Through it we catch the echo of the chord which sounded on the first Easter Day.—Dr. C. F. Wishart.

Endeavor to be patient in bearing with the defects and infirmities of others, of what sort soever they be; for that thyself also hast many failings which must be borne with by others. If thou canst not make thyself such an one as thou wouldest, how canst thou expect to have another in all things to thy liking?—Thomas a Kempis.

Years ago a young American girl visited the home of Beethoven. She sat down at the piano of the great artist and played through with pride his "Moonlight Sonata". When she had finished she turned to the stern, old guardsman of the house and said to him, "I suppose many great people come here?" "Yes," said the man, "Paderewski was here last week." "And did he play on Beethoven's piano?" she asked. "No," said the old man, "he said he wasn't worthy."

For the Young Folks

WITH THEE.

Up, though the path is steep,
On, through the shadows deep
  Forward with Thee;
Till the glad morning shine
Thy hand is clasping mine,
  Forward with Thee.

Closer the shadows press,
Greater the strain and stress
  As the hours fly;
O for the dawning light,
Herald of morning bright,
  Flooding the sky!

Pitch black may be the night
Yet I can see the light
  Hid in Thy face;
Sweet is Thy company,
Faithful Thy Word to me,
  Sure is Thy Grace.

The False Alarm.

Jack heard a whistle outside his window. He was a yellow-haired boy about nine. He put his head out of the window, only to see Allen, his black-headed friend, looking up.

"Let's go fishing," said Allen. "I'll ask mother." A moment later he put his head out of the window. "I'll be right down, Allen. Just wait until I get bacon and some bread. We can have lunch in the woods."

In a few minutes, he reappeared. The two boys sauntered slowly towards the river. The day was hot, so they did not want to hurry. Their way led down a steep gravel road, through a green, dewy pasture, along the railroad track, across the golf course, and then into the woods.

The woods trail was damp and fragrant. They walked silently, enjoying the green beauty on every hand. The birds were warbling with full throats.

At last the pair emerged from the woods upon a shaded river. Here they set up some small sticks, lighted a fire, and toasted the bacon and bread which they had brought with them. After this lunch, as they called it, they wandered along the stream bank.

Jack threw in his line. Before long he felt a bite. He jerked his line, felt a sudden pull, and drew out a struggling trout.

"I got the first one," he shouted to Allen.

"I'll get the next two," replied the other boy.

It was a long time before either of them got another bite, perhaps Jack's shout had frightened the fish, after a while, Allen got a trout, and then another. Then they began fishing in earnest.

Jack did not like to feel that his friend was a better fisherman than he was. There was quite a lot of excitement between them as to who would catch the next fish.

So busy were the two boys that they were not aware of the approach of two bears behind them. Suddenly Allen heard a rustle of paper at his back. He looked around. There stood a bear busily nosing the fish which tney had wrapped up in paper.

Allen shouted. Jack looked around then he, too, saw the bears. There was but one tree close, a very thin maple. But both boys immediately flew to this tree.

In their excitement, neither one of them could get up the trunk of that small tree. They were both crowding each other. At last Jack shinnied his way to the branches. He reached down to help the now nervous Allen up into safety.

"That was narrow escape," panted Allen. "They weren't chasing us," replied Jack, noticing the bears carefully for the first time.

Allen looked. There the two animals were eating the fish they had caught. There was no excitement whatever about the mother bear or her cub. They finally finished the fish, and licked the paper until it was clean.

Neither animal seemed to have noticed their presence.

"They'll go away pretty soon," said Allen.

"I hope so," shivered Jack. "I'd hate to have them get me. They'd eat me alive."

But the bears were in no hurry to leave. After sniffing around for a few moments, the mother curled up in the shade of the tree and fell asleep. The cub nosed about for a few minutes longer until he, too, curled up by his mother to fall asleep.

"Now we're in a fine fix," said Jack. "We've got to stay up here until that fool bear wakes up again."

"Don't you suppose it would be safe to go down?" inquired Allen. "We might not awaken her."

"You can go down if you want to," declared Jack. "But I know when I'm safe."

"Then we can awaken her."

"How?"

"With these maple buds."

Allen began to pick off the maple buds and hurled them at the sleeping bears. Many of the buds hit the bears, but did not seem to disturb the sleeping creatures. Jack began picking the buds, too; and he tried to do his share towards awakening the bears.

At last the mother bear rolled over sleepily, for a maple bud had hit her on the nose. But she did not appear to be angry in the least. The cub sat up as well.

The boys began throwing more and more buds, in the hope of driving the animals away. The buds were becoming scarcer and scarcer. They had to lean farther and farther out on the slim limbs of the tree to pluck them.

All at once, the limb that he was stripping of buds went downwards, and Jack almost fell out of the tree. He clung tightly to the bending limb, hanging up in the air like a birdhouse.

Finally the limb cracked and then broke.

The bear had approached in evident curiosity. Jack landed with a bang, almost on the creature's back. He was so frightened at the bear's closeness that he could not move. The bear's nose was close to his. Then of a sudden the bear stuck out her tongue and licked Jack's nose. The boy was too alarmed to even scream.

Then the animal backed away.

A voice sounded, "Come here, Flossie."

The boys looked in the direction of the voice. There stood a man calling the bears. They approached him eagerly. They must be tame bears, the boys decided.

"I'm glad you didn't hurt my pets," the man said, and immediately left with the two bears following him.

"Now what do you know about that?" demanded Allen, after he had climbed down the tree, and stood beside his friend watching the disappearing trio. —The Presbyterian.

The Prince's Playmate.

There was great excitement in King Cymond's kingdom by the sea, for on this day the king was to choose a playmate for the little Prince Hubert. From all over the little kingdom gathered the boys of about Hubert's age, some in poor clothing and some in fine waists and coats, and all hoping to be the one chosen to play in the sunny playground with the prince.

"Surely I'll be chosen," thought the merchant's son, "for the king will choose a boy who can climb and run and is strong. And I can win a race with any boy who is even a year older than I."

"The king will choose me," thought the wood-cutter's son, "for I have learned to carry myself straight and tall and I have learned court manners from the king's courtiers."

Then the king rode by on a prancing white horse and every eye was turned toward him. The king rode in and out along the path, watching, looking and hoping.

"If only I could find one worthy to be the playmate of the prince," thought the king, and then he spied a little boy behind a bush who was not mingling with the others.

"Come here," called the king, and the boy came closer. He was just about the size of the prince and his face was bright and his clothes plain but clean. "Why are you not out with the other boys?" asked the king, kindly.

"Kind king," replied the boy, "none would like better than I to be the prince's playmate, but my little brother here is not strong, and I am caring for him, lest he be trampled in the crowd."

The king rode on. His face looked puzzled, but exceedingly happy. Suddenly he turned his horse about. He rode back to where little Olaf was caring for his fretful brother. A broken rose branch lay in the path.

"Who broke my rose bush?" demanded the king.

Little Olaf might have said it had been broken by the crowd. But he did nothing of the sort. Instead, he looked squarely at the king. "Good king, it was I," he said. "It was an accident. If I may, I will come every day and water the rose bush and help it to send up another branch. I am so sorry it happened."

The king got down from his horse and the crowd looked on in astonishment. "Kindness and truth," thought the king to himself, "are more to be desired than wealth and honor." Then, while the baker's boy and the gatekeeper's boy and the money exchanger's boy and all the other boys of the realm crowded closer, the king took little Olaf by the hand and gathered the baby brother into his arms.

"This is Olaf, and he shall be the playmate of the prince," announced the king, turning to the surprised boy at his side. "He shall share the royal playground with Prince Hubert, and this baby brother shall play with them whenever he likes."

Such a clamor of shouting and handclapping! Many crowded up to get a glimpse of the stranger boy who had been chosen by the king. And they followed to get a glimpse of the playground in the courtyard. No one had ever dreamed of such a playground! There was sunshine and shade, there was grass and a pool and swings and two dappled ponies.

"I wonder why Olaf was chosen," mused the guard's son. "He is not known in the kingdom like I am, and his clothes are so funny and old.'

The king knew why he had chosen little Olaf, but he said nothing. Closer to the playground the crowd pushed. And there, over the archway to the courtyard, was the answer to why Olaf was chosen. For, in letters of black and gold, gleamed these words:

"There is nothing so kingly as kindness and nothing so royal as truth."—The Home Story Book.

Bobby Flicker Learns How to be Friendly.

Bobby Flicker stood on his front porch. He cocked his red head this way and that. "Cheerio," called Billy Robin from the grass. Bobby Flicker did not even rap his shiny young bill upon the bark behind him for answer. He stood on the edge of his porch looking disdainfully out into the blue distance.

Below him locust leaves waved and lilacs were in bloom and far, far down grass showed green. Bobby Flicker could see it all. On the left side of his porch Tommy Cardinal had built in the walnut tree and in the pine to the right Bessie Thrush had made her nest. Billy Robin had his nest in the lilac bushes, Billy Robin and his mate were low minded, they like to keep too close to the ground, Bobby Flicker told himself scornfully.

"Easier to get the worms," boasted Billy Robin singing up to Bobby Flicker. "Why don't you come down and get some? I'll show you where they are. I keep listening, you see. I hear them underground. I know where they are."

"I like it better up here," Bobby Flicker was disdainfully unfriendly. "Plenty of worms out on my front porch, fat ones and white." And Billy Robin who had started to fly up to Bobby Flicker's porch and have a friendly chirp flirted his tail and lighted on the pine and began to sing. It was too lovely a morning to bicker.

Bobby Flicker was willing to be left alone. He liked to be by himself. He could stand there on his porch and look around, he could peek into the soft fungus floor and find all the worms he wanted to eat. He could slip back into the deep round hole behind him and sleep. Father Flicker and Grandfather Flicker had all helped make that hole rounder and deeper. In the still coolness of it Bobby Flicker could doze and dream. Bobby Flicker was a lazy bird.

He was an unsociable bird, too. He had all he wanted, and he kept it to himself. He seldom flew abroad. From the few trips he made he came home joyfully. The brown spongy fungus which spread before the ancestral door looked beautiful to him, it was cool and soft to his wiry feet. He poked that sharp bill of his along the crevices between the porch, and tree, drilling hole after hole. Best of all Bobby selfishly congratulated himself that when it rained he could keep safe and dry in that deep home and then the very minute the rain stopped he could step out on his porch. Rain brought a fresh food supply wrigging out for fine damp air. Bobby Flicker shook the bright crest on his young head when he thought of it.

The day after the hardest rain Bobby had ever heard he hopped out as soon as a streak of light found him. He flirted about. Here between his porch and the bark of his tree had come a great crack. Bobby ran his bill deep into it. He found something. He leaned back and pulled. Down from under his clinging feet fell the pretty brown porch, down tumbled Bobby Flicker. His frightened wings spread out only when he was close to the green, wet grass and right beside Billy Robin.

Billy cocked his head. He was going to say something which might have sounded like a song with a laugh in it, but he saw how troubled Bobby looked, he saw the fallen porch and the bare place under Bobby's front door, so, instead he sang wisely, "Come to visit? Good. Listen to the worms, tap here and there. Look at this," he boasted.

"Brown," shuddered Bobby. "I like 'em white. I think I shall try up in the tree again." Yet Bobby Flicker's sharp young bill rapped out a strange new note as he tried. It said, "Thank you," it said, "it's nice to have friends."

"Cheerio," Billy Robin's call answered back.

"Cheerio, my friend," beat Bobby Flicker's new note against his ancestral tree.—Methodist Protestant.

JESUS OF NAZARETH
By Bishop Charles Gore

A simple modern comment on Mark and Luke that will help men and women better to understand those two short stories. Though one of the most learned of theologians, Dr. Gore has written plainly, as for those not learned, and yet accurately, as for the critical.

"Dr. Gore 'keeps to the evidence,' but he never hesitates to express his own convictions. . . . This gives his book vigour and warmth."

Now Comes This Amazing Story!

Foreign Missions Dramatized in
The Life of America's Pioneer Missionary—
ADONIRAM JUDSON

SPLENDOR OF GOD is not only the finest thing Mrs. Honoré Willsie Morrow has yet done: in its field it is, in my opinion, the most brilliant story ever written. Quite aside from its quality as fiction, it both humanizes and dramatizes foreign missions until it becomes an almost providential text book for the Christian Church. As I have read SPLENDOR OF GOD I have been moved to tears and challenged to action.
—Daniel A. Poling.

IN ALL the annals of the Christian Church in America there is no more dramatic, more moving figure than Adoniram Judson. His work in Burma blazed the trail down which, for a century, the missionaries of our faith have travelled into many lands for the glory of God and the extension of His Kingdom. He was the first American Missionary to set foot in the "accursed land" of Burma. Alone with his beautiful young wife, without funds, with only God's command for guidance and a rock-ribbed Christian faith for support, he dared every danger to plant the Christian Gospel of light in that shadowy land of pagan darkness.
"Go back to America!" cried a European official. "They will kill you! They will torture any convert you may make!"

SPLENDOR OF GOD

By Honoré Willsie Morrow, Author of "With Malice Towards None" and "Forever Free"

Honoré Willsie Morrow has written this vivid, biographical novel of the First American Foreign Missionary—a work which must rank high among the world's imperishable human documents.

Forbidden to preach their religion, forced to live next to the hideous execution grounds, their ears pierced by the screams of tortured victims, themselves constantly in danger of the same terrible fate—the young Pioneers of Christ still fought on. Loneliness, illness and imprisonment were their lot; and then, the crowning tragedy—the loss of their baby boy. "Oh let me die, let me die!" cried Ann Judson in the transports of her grief.

Read This Great Human Document in the New CHRISTIAN HERALD

This true life story of Adoniram Judson is destined to be one of the cherished possessions of the Christian Church. And this simple, gripping story must inevitably sound the clarion call that will revitalize the interest of America in her Foreign Missions.
It is the high privilege of CHRISTIAN HERALD (which is not published for profit) to give this story to the world. And because we want every Christian man, woman and child in America to read this vivid narrative epic of a great life dedicated to God, we will for $1.00 send you 35 issues of CHRISTIAN HERALD which will include the complete life story of Adoniram Judson. In addition, you have all the other features and departments of CHRISTIAN HERALD—35 issues of this big, beautiful interdenominational weekly that appeals to every member of the family.
Among the eminent contributors are Dr. Daniel A. Poling, Stanley High, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Dr. C. M. Sheldon, S. Parkes Cadman, and Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

Bishop Tucker Leaves Hospital.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker, who was taken to the hospital in Alexandria on April 2, for an emergency operation for appendicitis, is now well on the way to a speedy recovery. He left the hospital exactly two weeks later on Tuesday, April 16, and every indication shows that he will be out and about his usual tasks in the near future.

The Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton, made visitations and confirmed candidates in Bishop Tucker's place in Charlottesville and at the Blue Ridge Industrial School on Sunday, April 21.

Joint Services for Annual Council and Centennial Celebration.

The sessions of the one hundred and thirty-fourth annual council of the Diocese of Virginia will be held in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, May 15-16. The Council was at first planned for Orange, but was changed to Richmond in order that the delegates attending it might also attend the Centennial celebration of the Diocesan Missionary Society of Virginia, which is being held in Richmond on May 14 and 15, in commemoration of the past hundred years of Church life in Virginia.

The Diocese of Virginia is issuing invitations for the Centennial celebration to all the clergy in the three Virginia dioceses (Virginia, Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia), the Diocese of West Virginia, to all bishops in the Province and to the Presiding Bishop.

Hospitality will be gladly extended to clergymen desiring it. Notice to this effect should be given before May 1 to the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., 815 East Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Canadian Minister Speaks at Virginia Theological Seminary.

The Rev. Dyson Hague, M. A., D. D., of Toronto, Canada, rector of the Church of the Epiphany and Professor at Wycliffe College, a theological school of the Church of England in Canada, delivered a lecture at the Virginia Theological Seminary on April 18. The subject was the Book of Common Prayer. It was very interestingly discussed and was enjoyed by both professors and students.

Dr. Hague is a frequent contributor to the columns of The Southern Churchman.

Let Us Help to Save a Colonial Churchyard!

Wicomico Parish in Northumberland County is one of the oldest parishes in the diocese, having been established before 1650. At the time of the Revolution, there was a very beautiful cruciform brick church in the parish. This church was abandoned in the general prostration of the Church, the building torn down and its bricks and the property taken possession of by adjoining land-owners. For many years the old churchyard with its tombstones stood in the midst of farm lands. These tombstones have since been taken for utilitarian purposes by people in the neighborhood.

When the parish was revived the site of the old building was secured and the present church erected upon it; but the old churchyard with its graves of five or six generations remained in private hands. The present owner has determined to sell the churchyard, and the diocese has the opportunity of securing and saving it from further desecration. If it is not so secured there is danger of some one's buying it to erect a filling station or other commercial building.

In this day when we are realizing the importance of preserving the relics of our Colonial life, the effort to save this old churchyard will commend itself generally to our people. It will cost $350 to secure it, and the Colonial Churches Commission of the Diocese has undertaken to raise the money. Contributions for this purpose are asked from Church people throughout the diocese. Gifts should be sent to the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, Treasurer of the Diocese, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

Dr. Gibson Conducting Conferences.

The Rev. Churchill Gibson, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, is this week conducting a series of conferences for the College of Preachers at the National Cathedral in Washington, D. C.

Final Appeal For Near East Relief.

On Sunday, April 21, at the 11 o'clock service at St. James' Church, Richmond, instead of the sermon, Dr. J. Calvitt Clarke delivered a most stirring address and made an earnest appeal for the final drive for the Near East Relief. Envelopes had been distributed in the pews for pledges and contributions to this great cause, and when the collection was taken immediately following the address, the alms basins received many of these envelopes as an immediate response to the plea.

Prize Winning Church Designs Exhibit.

The Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond, this week, is holding an exhibition of twenty prize-winning designs for modern church plants. Architects of the city are on hand each day to explain the plans in detail. All drawings shown are of churches which have been finished and are in use, and each of them has a cost ranging from $64,000 to $700,000.

The interdenominational contest, just recently over, was sponsored by the Christian Herald. It was nation-wide, with leading architects from the United States and Canada submitting designs. A committee consisting of Ralph Adams Cram, architect of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York; Joseph Hudnut, of Columbia University, and A. F. Wicks, of the bureau of architecture of the Disciples Church, passed upon the plans. All plans submitted represented finished churches with a seating capacity in auditorium of about 500, the prize-winning church costing $75,000. This is a Methodist Church at Trainer, Pa.

It is planned to show the plans in other larger cities of the country, the showing in Richmond having been made possible through the efforts of R. E. Magill, secretary of the Presbyterian Publication and Sunday School Board of Richmond, who was present at the first showing in Atlantic City. The exhibit comes to Richmond from the University of Florida, where it was shown at an educational conference. It will go to the church assemblies and conferences to be held through May, June and July.

St. Paul's, Richmond, Scene of Memorial Service.

St. Paul's Church, Richmond, was the scene of an interesting and colorful service Sunday afternoon, April 21, at five o'clock, when the General Society, Sons of the American Revolution, brought their three-day annual session to a close with a memorial service. An elaborate musical program in which the full vested choir of St. Paul's participated, was given under the direction of F. F. Flaxington Hacker.

The address was delivered by Dr. Thomas Edward Green, General Chaplain.

Dr. Green, author and lecturer, was for several years in the active ministry. After a number of years in the Presbyterian Church he became a priest in the Episcopal Church and was rector of St. Andrew's College, and then of Grace Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Since 1903 he has been lecturing. He declined election as bishop of Iowa in 1896. He journeyed around the world in the interest of international peace in 1910-11, and has been international lecturer of the American Peace Society since 1913. He was a lecturer in the Army Y. M. C. A. in 1917 and a special lecturer in the American Red Cross in 1917 and has been director of the Red Cross National Speakers' Bureau since 1918. He was decorated with the Medal of French Red Cross, Medal of Honor by the French Government, Medal of Merit by the Polish Red Cross, Medal of Honor by the Chinese Red Cross and Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor.

A spectacular feature of the service was the massing of the colors in the chancel by the color guard, representing various branches of the Sons of the Revolution.

The Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's, conducted the devotional service.

Personal Notes

The Rev. John Cole McKim, D. D., of Konyama, Japan, is recovering from pneumonia, after an illness commencing January 29, caused by exposure encountered while visiting one of his stations.

The Rev. Robert Arch Goodwin has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Martinsville, Va., and will take charge May 1.

Girls, don't worry about middle age

Lots to recommend it, if you keep fit

TELL a sensible woman of 50 that she looks like the older sister rather than the mother of her children, and she just laughs at you.

"I'm middle-aged," she'll declare, "and not trying to hide the fact. Why should I? Middle age has a lot in its favor—that is, if you're well and healthy.

"Sick? Never had a doctor in my life except when my babies came. Never had the habit of dosing myself with pills and medicines, either. I just took Nujol—all the time my babies were coming, and in between times, too. I'll always depend on Nujol.

"Even the healthiest woman is better off by taking Nujol—especially at times when her system is apt to be thrown off balance and her regular functions upset. This pure substance keeps your system functioning normally and naturally even under abnormal conditions. It not only prevents an excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming, but aids in their removal. It's these poisons that age people prematurely. Make them feel old and tired and useless."

Nujol isn't a medicine or drug. For this reason it can't possibly disagree with you or upset you. It is simply a pure natural product. It works effectively without being drastic.

Start Nujol now. You'll find Nujol at all drugstores. In sealed packages only. Get a bottle today.

THE FINALITY OF CHRISTIANITY

BY THE REV. SAMUEL A. WALLIS, D. D.

Easter Day naturally brings us from one point of view to consider the Finality of Christianity, for while it is true that Christ remained on earth forty days after His Resurrection, which we commemorated on Easter Sunday, He went no longer among the people teaching and preaching and working His wonderful miracles. That work was forever done. He remained on earth, as we have just remarked, for the sake of His apostles alone, as we are told plainly in the second and the third verses of the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles:—"Until the day that He was taken up after that He through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom He had chosen; to whom also He shewed Himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." These words are very important as we believe, for first they tell of the high position of the Holy Ghost, the third person of the Blessed Trinity, in His relation to Christ as giving commandments through Christ to the apostles, then of Christ shewing Himself to them for forty days, speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Surely the revelations that came to them at that time those things recorded in the Gospels and Acts and the Epistles, as St. Paul himself afterwards received a call to the apostleship from Jesus appearing in glory from heaven. So all the history of Christ in the Gospels, all the history of the works and words of the two chief apostles in the Acts and their teaching as given in the Epistles and the Revelation of St. John as well as the signs and prophecies of the Old Testament together reveal the Finality of Christianity.

It may be truly said as has been proclaimed by many writers and speakers that Christianity is either final or futile. And Christianity has proved its finality which is being strengthened from generation to generation. Christianity in religion claims everything for itself. For it claims to be not one of many good religions, but the only true religion. It offers men not only one way of life, but the only way of life. And wherever it has been revealed it proclaims Christ as the one and only Saviour of men. Therefore the best definition of Christianity is that it is Christ as the late Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D., showed in one of the best books he ever wrote, "Christianity is Christ."

Again, Christianity is the message of the whole Bible, for Christ is the theme of the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation. Indeed Christ and the Bible are identified in a wonderful way that, as a writer has said, goes beyond our comprehension in this life. Each is called The Word of God; the one is the written Word, the Other, the Living Word, for both are manifestations or revelations of God to man. In that great vision which came to St. John the Divine in the isle that is called Patmos, he writes that he heard a great voice as of a trumpet saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the First and the Last, I am He that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore, and have the kets of hell and of death." It is possible that some one may ask: "Why does Christ call Himself Alpha and Omega?" The reason is that these are the names of the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, which language was commonly spoken in that day, and for that reason the New Testament was written in Greek, as we see in all the New Testaments published by The British and Foreign Bible Society, "Translated from the Original Greek."

Now we will turn our attention to the Old Testament. There are some remarkable statements there as interpreted by St. Paul. For example, St. Paul in the third chapter of Galatians and the eighth and ninth verses says, "And the Scripture, that is the Old Testament in the Book of Genesis, foreseeing that God would justify the heathens, that is the Gentiles, through faith preached before the gospel (note the word gospel) unto Abraham saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Then let us pass on to the sixteenth verse of the same chapter. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not to seeds as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed which is Christ. Then going on to the seventeenth verse, "And this I say that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul that it should make the promuse of none effect." Note here again the sure statement of St. Paul that this ancient covenant made to Abraham was confirmed even then of God in Christ, Who was from everlasting with the Father. Some of our readers will doubtless remember how Milton in Paradise Lost when the fall of man made in the image of God saddened the inhabitants of the heavenly world, Christ the Eternal Son of God offered Himself to His Father for the redemption of sinful man and was accepted by His Father. The story of His accomplishments of this blessed work is told in Paradise Regained, revealing again the wonderful truth of Christ's eternity with God.

So because Christianity is Christ and Christ is God we have something that is everlasting in this great and final religion. Nineteen centuries before Christ came to earth Abraham called on the name of the Lord the everlasting God. We remember what Christ Himself said to the Jews as recorded at the close of the eighth chapter of St. John's Gospel:—"Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day and he saw it and was glad." The Jews doubted this and Christ replied, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was I AM," that is fully declaring that He was the eternally Self-Existent One. Moses, the great leader of the people of Israel from Egypt to the gate of the Promised land, prophesied of Christ when he told the people of Israel, "A Prophet shall the Lord God raise up like unto me, and Him shall ye hear in all things," referring of course to the Everlasting Son of God Who became The God-Man Jesus Christ. As the centuries rolled on the Incarnation of Christ Isaiah, who is called the evangelical prophet, told God's people that they should be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be shamed or confounded world without end." Christ Himself proclaimed that "whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The New Testament, made possible when "God brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the everlasting covenant," and in the book of Revelation we read again of "the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred and tongue, and people."

We must remember then that there is no finality beyond the everlasting. There is no finality beyond God, and Christ and the everlasting life that He gives to those who receive Christ as Saviour and Lord through the everlasting gospel which gives its Finality to Christianity. The uniqueness of the Bible is that it makes these stupendous claims. No man would dare to make them. They could only be revealed by God Himself. That is what the Bible is; not a record of man's search for God, or man's discovery of God, but a record of God's revelation of the everlasting truth to man. If Christianity were only something that imperfect, sinful, fallible man had discovered, it could not possibly have the stamp of finality upon it. Those who deny the authority of the Bible fall into this fatal error; they make Christianity merely a search for God on the part of fallible man and their religion becomes merely a futile and blind groping. Such are under the condemnation of God's Word as "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." But those who accept God's Word as a supernatural revelation, divine, authoritative, infallible and final, and receive Him Who is the Living Word as their Saviour and Lord have a peace and joy and power in their lives that can never come to unbelief because they have accepted the Finality of Christianity revealed in the Bible as coming from God in Christ.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"God does not command us to succeed but to work."

The eye sees what the mind gives it the power of seeing.—Carlyle.

When God would do any mighty work in the world, He stirs up His people to pray for it.

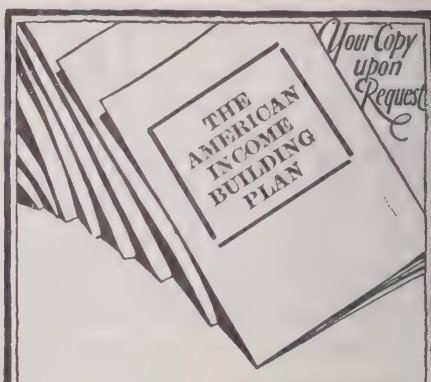
"To educate a man in mind and not in morals is to educate a menace to society."—Theodore Roosevelt.

"If I did not believe that the Kingdom of God would spread over the whole world, I could have no hope. I could do no work and I would give my office over this morning to any one who would take it."—Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of England.

O Voice of God, we hear Thee,
Above the shock of time;
Thine echoes roll around us
And the Message is sublime.
No power of man shall thwart us,
No stronghold shall dismay,
When God commands obedience,
And Love has led the way.

A boy in a print shop used to pretend that he was the superintendent. Whenever he did a bit of work, if it was only to clean the rollers on the press, he did it as he imagined he would want it done if he were superintendent. He became superintendent.

"We can all do more than we have done,
And never feel a whit the worse,
Loving never emptied a heart,
Nor giving emptied a purse."



The more we trust God the more shall we inspire the confidence of others in ourselves.—Rev. Dr. Wm. Porkess.

"Let us ask ourselves, upon what ground would we believe that God is love if we had not Jesus to turn to, if we had not for a supreme argument: Jesus, the crucified for love's sake?"—Albert D. Belden.

If you look for the stars in the daytime with your unaided eyes, you cannot see them. But the stars are there just the same, and you can see them through the telescope. Isn't faith like a telescope that lets you see what you couldn't see without it?

We cannot be good without having consented to be made good. . . . . If we could grow good without trying, it would be a poor goodness; we should not be good, after all; at least, we should only be not bad. God wants us to choose to be good, and so be partakers of His holiness.—George MacDonald.

"Jesus, these eyes have never seen
That radiant form of Thine,
The veil of sense hangs dark between
Thy blessed face and mine.
I see Thee not, I hear Thee not,
Yet are Thou oft with me;
And earth hath ne'er so dear a spot
As where I meet with Thee."
—Ray Palmer.

NICE

Like the delicious, gentle fragrance of old lavender from a long cherished cedar chest, comes the flavor of the meeting of the heads of women's colleges of the South, just held at New Orleans. The Associated Press sent out very little of it. Even that little was unused by most of the Northern and Western newspapers, and some of their feeble and pitiful imitators in the South. In all the proceedings, reports and addresses there was not one whiff of the salacious, one touch of the sensational or loud or coarse or lurid; consequently nothing to the taste of the queer and queerly monotonous small human machines entrusted with the filling of the news columns of so much of the press—machines trained to quest for filth and carrion, eager as that of buzzard or jackal or sewer rat.

"What Nice Girls Don't Do" was one subject of discussion. It was agreed that cigarettes and flasks virtually are unknown among the girls at the leading Southern institutions. "All this stuff about flaming youth is just story book bunk, I think," said Miss Frances Willis, president of the Virginia State Teachers' College. "Nice girls don't do things like that." Just those two words "nice girls" are delightfully refreshing. They tell of life and atmosphere and conditions wholesome, pure, sustaining, giving assurance for the present and future. Yellow and yellowish and yellow-as-they-dare newspapers bring us continually the reek of loathsome and fetid miasma in institutions in other parts of the country supposed to be educational and centers of high culture. If we accepted as truth the impressions these publications attempt to give us, we would think mournfully of the nice girl as extinct, a vanished memory of the often derided Victorian era—which gave to history so many brilliant immortals and shining deeds, so much glory to literature, so many vast forward strides to humanity and to us the mothers and grandmothers we yet love and revere. There be flippant, cackling fools, dwelling amid coarse superficialities and artificialities, and credulous pessimists who believe and proclaim constantly that the sweet, fine, womanly nice girl of dainty and cleanly thought and habit and speech exists no more, is "out of date"—gone.

Most of us, let us be devoutly thankful to be able to say, are so fortunate as to know some, or many, of the nice girls who do not do nor say nor countenance the things so graphically and joyously narrated by newspapers. When we observe clearly and consider obvious facts honestly, we must realize that the nice girl and the nice, well-bred, well behaved, useful woman, chaste and intrinsically good and pure, make the great majority of their sex, certainly in our country. Strident, loud, cold, screaming women, assiduously and aggressively elbowing themselves to temporary limelights and the front pages, are not new. Shakespeare drew them in Lear's cruel daughters. Dissolute, flaunting, brazen women have been evilly conspicuous since the days of Jezebel and Delilah and before their times. Women who think, or pretend to think, outpouring of nauseous slime to be the acme of high art supply copiously the lower kinds of magazines and book factories, just as they supplied literature for prurient appetites 'ere Sappho sang. Others who assume alternately affectations of excessive refinement and excessive lack of it and looseness of manners, as the fashion of the moment directs, have paraded themselves absurdly and lamentably through all the recorded centuries, as they do today. Yet others ostentatiously defy the decencies and restraints of civilized society, and boastfully repudiate God and virtue, believing themselves to be demonstrating intellectual strength and soaring souls. That type, too, is very old—and very stale and fatiguing. All these, startling to the timid and forgetful, may be found and identified distinctly in narratives, plays, novels, tales, from oldest to latest. There is dreary sameness in their fates. The great majority of them disappear from public view. They make ghastly successions of cases through the morgues of great cities, populate in dreary lingering charitable institutions of various grades, help crowd the potter's field, quite frequently after a few blissful days of exciting eminence in divorce courts, or of conflict with the law. The nice girl, as Miss Willis says, does none of these things. To her immodesty, immorality, vulgarity, rowdyism, in her own sex are abhorrent and contemptible as are cowardice, cheating and trickery to the manly man.

This nice girl is with us to the number of a good many millions. She is tremendously important, because she is the real hope of this country and the world. Her white soul and clean heart are untainted by the contaminations always ready to be absorbed by the weak, the diseased and neurotic. She may pass unpolluted through the foulest and most sordid surroundings. Her purity and beauty of character may survive unsoiled and unspoiled even the neglects, sins, follies, misguided ambitions and shameful vanities of parents. She is in all social stations, in country, village, city. The same inborn instincts for righteousness, honesty, purity, duty, fidelity, that safeguard a girl amid blackguard and obscene environment in a pretentious college or university of depravity may carry her more obscure, and more fortunate, sister spotless through slums to faithful, useful, splendid womanhood.

It is very comforting to know from those in direct touch with conditions that our Southern institutions continue to be intent on training for us a new generation of nice girls who do not do vulgar and indecent things, do not familiarize themselves with vice that they may pose as "liberal" and "advanced", who in thought and speech and conduct and purpose will be gentlewomen—a name grander, even, than that grand old name of gentleman. We of the South may well rejoice and be grateful that we are to have from our colleges and schools nice girls—gentlewomen—not a generation of feminine freaks and deformities and hazardous experiments.

One of the beauties of Dickens, overlooked too often, is in the subtitle contrasts in which he delighted. n "Little Dorrit" he pictures his heroine born and reared amid the squalor and humiliations of a debtors' jail, swept into sudden affluence, retaining through all the changes patient loyalty to love and duty, her gentleness, tenderness, nobility and beauty of character; her sister, undergoing the same experiences, frivolous, vain, ungrateful. Of "Little Dorrit" and the man to whom she had clung faithfully through times of dire misfortune and apparent hopelessness and who became her husband, Dickens wrote, in the final chapter of the book:

"They went into a life of usefulness and happiness, inseparable and blessed; and as they passed along in sunshine and shade, the noisy and the eager and the arrogant and the forward and the vain, fretted and chafed and made their usual uproar."

Alfred B. Williams.

RADIO RELIGION

A Sermon Preached in Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, on Sunday evening February 18, 1923 by the minister,

Rev. Edwin J. van Etten

"The wind bloweth where it listeth."—St. John 3:8...

I.

I SUPPOSE that every great value has its corresponding dangers. Every gain seems to be offset by certain losses. Every change means a certain readjustment. This is the way it is with every new discovery and invention. Every improvement of machinery means changed conditions and necessary readjustments. So it was with the steam engine. So it was in the textile industry. So it is with all the forms of electricity and the invention of the telephone and telegraph. There has been a revolution in the various fields of industry due to these new inventions. Many men have been thrown out of work. Many forms of business have had to "go under". Conditions of living have been greatly changed. More than half of our people are now living in cities. With the great gains of centralization and efficiency have come also great losses and many inevitable readjustments.

Tonight we are thinking about the case of radio in connection with the broadcasting of church services. The marvelous development of this new invention, especially during the last two or three years, brings us face to face with certain very real problems. It is absolutely certain that we face many changes and readjustments in connection with church services. It would of course take a prophet or the son of a prophet to say exactly what these changes are going to be. Yet any one today thinking earnestly on the subject, can perhaps note certain lines of inevitable change. We want if possible, to guard against losses and dangers and at the same time make fullest use of the possibilities of this new invention.

II.

First of all as to some of the dangers. It may be that the radio broadcasting of church services will prove something of a disintegrating force to the church organizations themselves. People may stay home from church and "listen in" at home. There may be a decrease in the church attendance and of course a corresponding decrease in the churches' financial support. I should hate to see the day when radio were in any way used for collections or financial appeals. If the radio keeps people away from church to any large extent, it seems likely that certain results will follow.

The day will come when every parson will not be a preacher. Of course this does not mean that he will leave the ministry. He may do something very much better along the lines of education and pastoral work, but people will "listen in" to the sermons they like the best. Some one has ventured the rather surprising guess that 90 per cent of the present preachers will quit preaching. The preaching business faces a tremendous economic conflict and perhaps many preachers will be "out of a job". There is no way to avoid this fundamental sifting process in the economic field. The fittest preachers will survive. Many others will quit preaching and do something else.

It may be that the churches will learn the lesson of the automobile and the moving pictures and will themselves use the radio services in such a way as to hold their people. Two years ago in our convention of the diocese, plans were suggested for using the radio to supply mission stations and remote places having no minister. Last Sunday night we sent greetings to St. Thomas Church, Canonsburg. They were receiving our service in their church for a good sized congregation. When all is said however, it may be true that many struggling churches will more or less go to the wall. Their people will prefer the better city church's services. It seems to me very likely that we are facing days of greater centralization and indeed competition in church services. I do not see what is gained by blinking these almost inevitable results. We may deplore them. To a certain extent we may prevent them, but they would seem to be part of the price of this new development.

III.

On the other hand I want to speak of certain advantages. These are adantages to particular persons.

Think of the parson himself. When a man realizes that he is speaking to a vast unseen congregation, there comes a certain broadening of view and a certain access of spiritual force. He simply must look out beyond his own four walls and realize that the life of the spirit is not confined by any such barrier. If religion is anything at all, it is something common to all men. He must meet it and speak of it in this way.

When I go down the street Monday morning I can realize as never before a great sense of common humanity. The newspaper boy, the policeman on the corner, the man in the automobile garage, the clerks in the shops, the cashier in the bank, all greet one with a friendly comment on the last night's sermon. Many of them are people who at present could not be induced to go to church. I think that it is good for us parsons to have our horizon extended even though the growing pains may be somewhat painful.

Every week I get dozens of letters. They are mostly from people who are sick and shut-in. They are pathetic letters and yet they shine with a new interest and a new hope. Sometimes persons have been shut off from church services for years and never expected to hear another service. Many of them are in hospitals. Some of them are in remote country districts, in coal mining villages and distant farms, snowbound tonight by impossible country roads. Some of them are boys and young people staying at home with this new and wonderful interest in the radio instead of hanging around the street corners. There are many family groups sitting around their table or fireplace. There is the possibility of a rediscovered family altar in some very real sense. If the family could again be made the source of moral and religious teaching, I venture to say that this gain alone would compensate for every loss to the churches.

IV.

There are advantages to the churches. I believe that the radio offers a wholesome challenge to the churches themselves. I rejoice that at last in this way we may perhaps be compelled to "make good" or to go out of business. I accept the challenge with great enthusiasm and trust to the underlying values in the church to win the day. When I remember that more than 50 per cent of our American people have no connection with the churches or with organized religion, it seems to me high time that we confronted some kind of a challenge. Maybe we must change our methods and our manner of work. Perhaps I can sum up what I feel the churches should do by saying that we must speak a language better understood by the people. Our own church has an incomparable liturgy written in the most beautiful and wonderful English. I do not suppose that one person out of three can really understand or appreciate it. Even worse are the formal and set phrases which come to be used in extempore prayer and extempore worship. They are every bit as formal and simply lack the beauty of a liturgical form of worship. Many of our words are hollow and unreal. We speak in set phrases, we repeat old words. I mean such words as "sin" and "salvation" and "grace". I do not say there are no such realities. I say that we do not put any real meaning into them. This danger in antiquated and meaningless phrases is to me far more real than any dangers of the radio. If the radio can help to "show us up" and drive us to something better it will indeed serve a real turn. I hear with dismay the repetition of age-worn words which can no longer hold the stirrings and aspirations and point of view of the men of today. I hear with even greater dismay the manifestations of ignorance and fear and ill will which seem to greet any departure from the old and meaningless conventionalities. Cries of "Heretic," "Radical," "Bolshevist," "Red" seem all too ready to fly at the head of any one who dares suggest any new departure. I think it is high time to develop a new manner of speech and to break down old walls of pride and prejudice.

V.

As I speak these words I suppose there are tens of thousands of people listening in. The fact that you have radio receiving sets probably disposes you somewhat in favor of the radio services. You are not predisposed to think that you are doing the "work of the devil" in listening in tonight! I want to tell you as plainly as I can two things: Radio religion is not a substitute for public worship. You can hear the spoken words and the music, but I doubt if one in ten of you can really enter into the spirit of worship. You are sermon tasters, and service tasters. Many of our churches have put false emphasis on the sermon. That is one reason why they are already half empty. You can read better sermons at home. Two of my old grandfather ancestors were parsons in little New England towns. The word "parson" really means "person". They were indeed the persons of the town. Most of the people did not have newspapers or books in any wide extent. They came to church for information. That day has largely gone. Many persons in the pews are far better informed than the parson in the pulpit. But listening to a sermon or to a service is not religion. Religion is always a matter of the second person, singular. Boys and girls in grammar school will know what I mean. The first person is the speaker, I. The second person is the person spoken to, you. The third person is the person spoken of, he, she or it. Radio religion makes the mistake of being a religion of the third person. You are listening to me talk about religion. You are listening to the choir sing about it. You are not yourself engaging in a religious service. Worship is a matter between you and God. Unless you yourself are trying to speak to God or "listen in" for God to speak to you, you are not religious. You are missing the essential part of a church service. I do not mean the collection! I mean the whole atmosphere of common prayer to God and praise to His Holy Name. "Listening in" over the wireless can never take the place of the church service because it utterly fails to provide the real nub of the matter. I remember when the phonograph first came into general use, people said it would mark the end of musical concerts. They were quite wrong. It simply advertised music far and wide. It could not produce personality and the atmosphere of a real human occasion. Of course radio religion omits entirely the sacraments of the church. You can not be baptized over the radio, nor can you come to the Holy Table by means of wireless. I have heard of a case of marriage, so-called, by radio. One is so sorry to hear of so solemn an occasion made the vehicle of a cheap sensationalism. Dozens of persons speak to me after church service and say they thought they would come round to see what the church was like. There is a human personal touch in the fellowship of people meeting together which cannot possibly be provided over the wireless.

The second thing I want to say to you is this: Radio religion must become active and not passive. It is all very well for you to sit at home smoking your cigar in your big arm chair. It may be very pleasant on a cold winter night to sit there in front of the fire. There is always a danger in the easier way. To slouch back in one's seat in matters of religion is just as distressing as to slouch back in one's seat in society. It is distressing, if I may say so, not so much to God as to yourself. It is disrespectful not so much to God as to your own spirit. The vital things of life and of the spirit require effort and constant sacrifice. You cannot be a "stay-at-home" religious man. You may stay at home but you will grow less and less religious. I am speaking now not so much for the sake of the churches as for your own sake. Of course I am not referring to those who are ill or shut-in by sickness or by distance. I am not speaking to those who have gone to some place of public worship on this Sunday morning. I am talking to those who may be tempted to rest satisfied with an arm-chair sort of religion. You will admit that I have spoken with some frankness and I hope with fairness to the short-comings of the churches. I feel it is a fifty-fifty matter. Half of the fault may be with the churches. Where is the other 50 per cent?

Why don't you come and help us make the churches what they ought to be? In any case you must see to it that there is some definite and regular response in your life to the suggestions and the inspirations which come to you by means of the radio religion.

Prayers For The Countryside

For Rogation and Other Days: Rogation Days—May 6, 7, 8.

For Those Who Sow and Reap.

O Eternal God, Thou Lord of springtime and harvest, bless, we beseech Thee, those who sow the seed and reap the harvests of the world. Grant that they may receive the due reward of their labors and enjoy not only the fruits of the earth, but those of the Spirit as well, love and joy and peace, through the merits of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Children of the Countryside.

O Saviour of the World, who didst say, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not", bless, we beseech Thee, all children and young people at work and play in the country districts of the world. Raise up friends, we pray Thee, who will seek them out and bring them within the blessed influence of Thy Church, that so they may know and follow Thee, who art with the Father and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Isolated.

O Gracious Father, Thou companion of all men everywhere, bless, we beseech Thee, all those who by reason of distance, illness or neglect, are deprived of the ministrations of Thy Church. Encourage them in their loneliness and grant that, by the power and presence of Thy Holy Spirit, they may have part with Thee in the building of Thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Prayer of the Rural Fellowship for the Laborers in His Harvest.

O Lord, the great Shepherd of the sheep, whose flocks are upon a thousand hills; and who hast put into our hearts the hope of a better country, even a heavenly; bless all those who search for Thy sheep in scattered places, that they may bring them home to Thee, who art with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Solution of the Economic Problems of Country Life.

O God, by whose inspiration we are taught to know the things that are for our good, guide, we beseech Thee, all those who are endeavoring to solve the problems of country life and income. Grant that just and adequate solutions of those problems may be found shortly and surely, so that they who till the soil and herd the flock may enjoy the things which belong to their peace, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Spirit of Brotherhood Among Churches.

O God, who has taught us that Thou art our Father and that all we are brethren, bless, we beseech Thee, the churches which are laboring for the welfare of Thy people in rural fields. Direct them in their use of the resources Thou hast given them for the up-building of Thy Church in country places. Save them from needless duplication of effort and give them grace to minister to Thy people in unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life. All of which we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Virginia A. Smoot, of Rome, Italy:

> "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
> —St. John 3:16.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

THE BIBLE: WHENCE IS IT? FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

By C. H. M.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God."

PRECIOUS words! Would they were more thoroughly understood in this our day! It is of the utmost possible importance that the Lord's people should be rooted, grounded and settled in the grand truth of the plenary inspiration of Holy Scripture. It is to be feared that laxity as to this most weighty subject is spreading in the professing church to an appalling extent. In many quarters it has become fashionable to pour contempt upon the idea of plenary inspiration. It is looked upon as the veriest childishness and ignorance. It is regarded by many as a great proof of profound scholarship, breadth of mind, and original thinking to be able, by free criticism, to find out flaws in the precious volume of God. Men presume to sit in judgment upon the Bible as though it were a mere human composition. They undertake to pronounce upon what is, and what is not, worthy of God. In fact they do, virtually, sit in judgment upon God Himself. The present result is, as might be expected, utter darkness and confusion, both for those learned doctors themselves, and for all who are so foolish as to listen to them. And as for the future, who can conceive the eternal destiny of all those who shall have to answer before the judgment seat of Christ for the sin of blaspheming the Word of God, and leading hundreds astray by their infidel teaching?

We shall not, however, occupy time in dwelling upon the sinful folly of infidels and sceptics—even though called Christians— or their puny efforts to cast dishonor upon that peerless volume which our gracious God has caused to be written for our learning. They will, some day or other, find out their fatal mistake. God grant it may not be too late! And as for us, let it be our deep joy and consolation to meditate upon the Word of God, that so we may ever be discovering some fresh treasure in that exhaustless mine, some new moral glories in that heavenly revelation which speaks to us with a point and freshness as if it were written expressly for us—written this very day.

There is nothing like Scripture. Take, for instance, any human writing of the same date as the Bible; if you could lay your hand on some volume written three thousand years ago, what would you find? A curious relic of antiquity, something to be placed in the British Museum, side by side with an Egyptian mummy, having no application whatever to us or to our time, a musty document, a piece of obsolete writing, practically useless to us, referring only to a state of society and to a condition of things long since passed away and buried in oblivion.

The Bible, on the contrary, is the Book for today. It is God's own Book, His perfect revelation. It is His own very voice speaking to each one of us. It is a Book for every age, for every clime, for every class, for every condition, high and low, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, old and young. It speaks in a language so simple that a child can understand it; and yet so profound that the most gigantic intellect cannot exhaust it. Moreover, it speaks right home to the heart; it touches the deepest springs of our moral being; it goes down to the hidden roots of thought and feeling in the soul; it judges us thoroughly. In a word, it is, as the inspired apostle tells us, "Quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12).

And then mark the marvelous comprehensiveness of its range. It deals as accurately and forcibly with the habits and customs, the manners and maxims of the nineteenth century of the Christian era as with those of the very earliest ages of human existence. It displays a perfect acquaintance with man, in every stage of his history. The London of today, and the Tyre of three thousand years ago are mirrored, with like precision and faithfulness, on the sacred page. Human life, in every stage of its development, is portrayed by a master hand, in that wonderful volume which our God has graciously penned for our learning.

What a privilege to possess such a Book!—to have in our hands a divine Revelation!—to have access to a Book, every line of which is given by inspiration of God!—to have a divinely given history of the past, the present, and the future! Who can estimate aright such a privilege as this?

But then, this Book judges man—judges his ways—judges his heart. It tells him the truth about himself. Hence man does not like God's Book. An unconverted man would vastly prefer a newspaper or a sensational novel to the Bible. He would rather read the report of a trial in one of our criminal courts, than a chapter in the New Testament.

Hence, too, the constant effort to pick holes in God's blessed Book. Infidels, in every age and of every class, have labored hard to find out flaws and contradictions in Holy Scripture. The determined enemies of the Word of God are to be found, not only in the ranks of the vulgar, the coarse and the demoralized, but amongst the educated, the refined and cultivated. Just as it was in days of the apostles, "Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort", and "Devout and honorable women"—two classes so far removed from each other, socially and morally—found one point in which they could heartily agree, namely, the utter rejection of the Word of God and of those who faithfully preached it. (Compare Acts 8:50, with 17:5.) So we ever find that men who differ in almost everything else agree in their determined opposition to the Bible. Other books are let alone. Men care not to point out defects in Virgil, in Horace, in Homer or Herodotus; but the Bible they cannot edure, because it exposes them and tells them the truth about themselves and the world to which they belong.

And was it not exactly the same with the Living Word—the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, when He was here among men? Men hated Him because He told them the truth. His ministry, His words, His ways, His whole life was a standing testimony against the world; hence their bitter and persistent opposition: other men were allowed to pass on; but He was watched and waylaid at every turn of His path. The great leaders and guides of the people "sought to entangle him in his talk"; to find occasion against Him in order that they might deliver Him to the power and authority of the governor. Thus it was, during His marvelous life; and at the close, when the blessed One was nailed to the cross between two malefactors, these latter were let alone; there were no insults heaped upon them;; the chief priests and elders did not wag their heads at them. No; all the insults, all the mockery, all the coarse and heartless vulgarity—all was heaped upon the divine Occupant of the centre cross.

Now, it is well we should thoroughly understand the real source of opposition to the Word of God—whether it be the living Word or the written Word. It will enable us to estimate it at its real worth. The devil hates the Word of God—hates it with a perfect hatred; and hence he employs learned infidels to write books to prove that the Bible is not the Word of God, that it cannot be, inasmuch as there are mistakes and discrepancies in it; and not only so, but, in the Old Testament, we find laws and institutions, habits and practices unworthy of a gracious and benevolent Being.

To all this style of argument we have one brief and pointed reply; of all these learned infidels we simply say, They know nothing whatever about the matter. They may be very learned, very clever, very deep and original thinkers, well made up in general literature, very competent to give an opinion on any subject within the domain of natural and moral philosophy, very able to discuss any scientific question. Moreover, they may be very amiable in private life, estimable characters, kind, benevolent and philanthropic, beloved, in private and respected in public. All this they may be, but, being unconverted, and not having the Spirit of God, they are wholly unfit to form, much less to give, a judgment on the subject of Holy Scripture. If any one wholly ignorant of astronomy were to presume to sit in judgment on the principles of the Copernican system, these very men of whom we speak would, at once, pronounce him utterly incompetent to speak, and unworthy to be heard on such a subject. In short, no one has any right whatever to offer an opinion on a matter with which he is unacquainted. This is an admitted principle on all hands; and therefore its application in the case now before us cannot justly be called in question.

Now, the inspired apostle tells us, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, that, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." This is conclusive. He speaks of man in his natural state, be he ever so learned, ever so cultivated. He is not speaking of any special class of men; but simply of man in his unconverted state, man destitute of the Spirit of God. Some may imagine that the apostle refers to man in a state of barbarism, or savage ignorance. By no means; it is simply man in nature, be he a learned philosopher or an ignorant clown. "He cannot know the things of the Spirit of God." How then can he form or give a judgment as to the Word of God? How can he take it upon him to say what is, or what is not worthy of God to write? And if he is audacious enough to do so—as alas! he is—who will be foolish enough to listen to him? His arguments are baseless; his theories worthless; his books only fit for the waste paper basket. And all this, be it observed, on the universally admitted principle above stated, that no one has any title to be heard on a subject of which he is wholly ignorant.

In this way we dispose of the whole tribe of infidel writers. Who would think of listening to a blind man on the subject of light and shade? And yet such a man has much more claim to be heard than an unconverted man on the subject of inspiration. Human learning, however extensive and varied; human wisdom, however profound, cannot qualify a man to form a judgment upon the Word of God. No doubt, a scholar may examine and collate MSS. simply as a matter of criticism; he may be able to form a judgment as to the question of authority for any particular reading of a passage; but this is a different matter altogether from an infidel writer undertaking to pronounce judgment upon the Revelation which God has, in His infinite goodness, given to us. We maintain that no man can do this. It is only by the Spirit who Himself inspired the Holy Scriptures that those Scriptures can be understood and appreciated. The Word of God must be received upon its own authority. If man can judge it or reason upon it, it is not the Word of God at all. Has God given us a Revelation or has He not? If He has, it must be absolutely perfect, in every respect; and being such, it must be entirely beyond the range of human judgment. Man is no more competent to judge Scripture than he is to judge God. The Scriptures judge man; not man the Scriptures.

This makes all the difference. Nothing can be more miserably contemptible than the books which infidels write against the Bible. Every page, every paragraph, every sentence only goes to illustrate the truth of the apostle's statement, that "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Their gross ignorance of the subject with which they undertake to deal is only equalled by their self-confidence. Of their irreverence we say nothing, for who would think of looking for reverence in the writings of infidels? We might perhaps look for a little modesty, were it not that we are fully aware of the bitter animus which lies at the root of all such writings, and renders them utterly unworthy of a moment's consideration.

Other books may have a dispassionate examination: but the precious Book of God is approached with the foregone conclusion that it is not a divine Revelation; because, forsooth, infidels tell us that God could not give us a written revelation of His mind.

Permanent Assets of the Near East Relief

By W. C. Emhardt, Ph. D.,
Member National Board of Trustees, Near East Relief.

This is not an effort to extol the permanent assets of the Near East Relief in terms of the hundred thousand or more children who have been saved from death, educated and given back to the world as productive agents, nor of the moral and economic inspiration given to races suddenly freed from Turkish thraldom and committed to a program of National expression. It is merely an effort to answer a question so often asked; what will happen to the property acquired to meet the needs of humanity's greatest charitable endeavor?

Accounting for the use of property valued in millions of dollars would be a serious problem, if this property represented direct purchase or unentailed gifts. As a matter of fact the Near East Relief has clear title to but a small amount of property in Syria, partly because native churches, mission boards and governments have generously provided buildings and land free of charge. Of the buildings used in Syria those in Sidon were loaned by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, and naturally revert to the owners. There remain in Syria two properties, the orphanage at Antilyas and the rug factory at Ghazir. Naturally these could not be transferred to existing mission boards, an act never contemplated by the Near East Relief. The alternatives are either their sale or dedication of their use for the welfare of the refugees. The latter is the only plan receiving serious attention. Under proper management the rented buildings and rug weaving equipment at Ghazir should be maintained as an opportunity for self-help. The Antilyas property offers the only place available as a centre of Armenian life in Syria. Whether this shall become a centre of social and economic or of religious life, or both, is yet to be determined.

In Russia the problem is very simple. Valuable property has been placed at the disposal of the Near East Relief to be used in the interest of Armenian orphans and refugees. As long as this service is performed the property may be occupied. When the work ceases it reverts to the government.

In Greece the property holdings are all government grants. They are now reduced to tracts of land in the Island of Syra. Valuable buildings of a permanent nature have been erected. The American minister to Greece, Robert P. Skinner, is urging that these be conserved for a greatly needed vocational school for sons and daughters of Greek farmers and tradesmen. This is being discussed with the Greek Government. It is possible that some part of the property heretofore supported by certain clientele of the Near East Relief may be held by that group as a continuing agency.

Naturally there have been expectations and hopes, and recently even requests, on the part of American agencies, that these properties or part of their equipment could be transferred to them or purchased at a nominal sum. Even should the Trustees of the Near East Relief be willing to entertain such propositions, such transfers would be impossible. The Near East Relief is chartered by Congress as trustee for the American people. The greater part of the support has been contributed by the Churches, the Presbyterian and the Episcopal Churches leading. Manifestly under these conditions the Trustees of the Near East Relief could give no preferential consideration to requests of any religious, social or educational organization without the consent of the other donors.

The Meaning Of The Resurrection

Dr. Temple on the Vindication of Victory.

The sermon at the Easter Day service at York Minster was preached by the Archbishop of York.

Speaking on the meaning of the Resurrection, he said it was not so much the victory of Jesus Christ as the vindication of that victory by the supreme power of the universe. His victory was won on Good Friday, because He had triumphed over the worst that evil could do. The forces of selfishness, hatred, greed, and pride had been marshalled against Him, and had done their uttermost, but through it all He had remained unmoved, the sovereign Lord of life, and His kingdom untouched, for His kingdom was love. And yet that victory, won by Him for His own soul, would have remained a barren victory if that had been the end of the whole story.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ set upon the victory of the Cross the seal of the Divine acceptance. There the ultimate power of the world was seen to vindicate precisely the life that had been lived by Jesus Christ, and, if that was so, then Easter Day was something more than even our common thought had made of it. It was something more than the proclamation of the Messiahship of Jesus Christ, something more than the assurance of immortality. It was the vindication of the Deity of God Himself. By the name of God we meant the union of utter power with utter goodness. When men said they believed in God the Father Almighty they were saying not merely that they thought there existed a ruler of the world, but that in practical ways they would put their trust in omnipotent goodness.

So Easter Day was first and foremost for us the festival of God's divinity, the assurance that perfect goodness and ultimate power were truly one and the same in God the Creator, sustainer, and redeemer of the world. And this revelation was wrought not in neglect of the evil of the world either in sin or in suffering, but through taking these as the very material in which the Divine artist would compose His masterpiece. The cross of Christ was at once the devil's worst and God's best. Never could God Himself be more divine than in the life which remained perfect through all the suffering, all the passion and death. Sin sent Him to the cross, and by the cross, from that moment to this, He had been conquering sin. So henceforth all evil was seen to be subservient to God, and defeat became the very stuff of victory, and love was revealed as enthroned over all, even in the world in which greed and hate were so familiar. Upon that life which was dedicated to love in its perfection and in its purity was set by the first Easter Day the seal of divine acceptance.—London Record.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

A REPLY TO MR. EMMETT N. WHITE'S LETTER.

Mr. Editor:

I read with great interest Mr. Emmett N. White's letter on Fundamentalism versus Mordernism and recognized at once the evident sincerity of the writer. But I must confess I was astonished when he spoke of the Roman Catholics as the greatest fundamental group of Christians. It is true that the Church of Rome accepts the Apostles' Creed and undoubtedly admits the truth of the general teaching of the first five articles of our Church. That she has held steadfast in the main to the great facts of the Virgin Birth, and the vicarious atonement of our blessed Lord and Saviour, and to His bodily resurrection, must be thankfully admitted. But the fact still remains that she has been throughout the ages the great antagonist of personal liberty and Scriptural truth, and that she has covered up the fundamental doctrines of salvation with accretions of false doctrine and soul-destroying decrees, must be admitted by any person who has intelligently read the history of the past. Take, for instance, Mariolatry, by which a woman, no matter how holy and beautiful and honored to be the mother of our Saviour, was nevertheless only one who needed the washing of His precious blood as a poor sinner to be saved by grace, is exalted into practical equality with the Father and the Son, venerated as the Queen of Heaven, and given equal worship with the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Or the monstrous doctrine of transubstantiation, and the doctrine of indulgences, and the accumulated falsehoods of the false decretals and the forged writings of the fathers. "The Roman Church," said an earnest modern writer, "which professes to worship Him who said, 'I am the Truth', is honeycombed through and through with accumulated falsehood." And as to its final doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope, it has been said that "there is no question in the history of the human mind, theological, philosophical, historical or otherwise which has been so disgraced by falsehood, bad faith and the whole work of the gorgers as papal authority". The Creed of Pious the Fourth declares: "I admit the whole Scripture according to that sense which Holy Mother Church has held and holds." But our Church teaches very clearly that the Church of Rome has erred in matters of faith not in living and ceremonies. As to Catholic children getting the teaching of the Bible, this will be news to many who know how, in spite of the many public declarations of the Roman ecclesiastics that they are anxious for their people to have and read the Bible, it is a most difficult thing for a Roman Catholic to secure a Bible, and a rarer thing to ever hear of their ever reading one. I speak of the cities and country generally, not of a few places where there may be a liberal-minded bishop or priest. The Roman Church has always been afraid to let its people have the Bible. This, of course, is too well-known a fact to need enlargement. At the same time, Mr. Editor, let me say that every true Christian should be so filled with the love of Christ that he must love all men and that it is the imperative duty of every Protestant to love his Roman Catholic brethren, even though he may recognize the absolute falsity of the system to which he belongs and its dangers politcally, thologically, morally.

APPROVAL.

Mr. Editor:

I have read with approval your "review" of Dr. Bowie's book in your issue of April 13.

As I sat and meditated upon the thing which we are up against now, I began to wonder if it was really worth while to waste paper and ink upon a book which our Almighty intends some day to cast into a fire. Let us pray for the author, that he may not, with his gray brain matter, be also consumed by the same fire. God help us each one to adhere strictly to what God tells us, no matter how many enemies may be made on the road. If only we are assured of His approval, there need be no fear in our heart. Certainly "churchism" has already crumbled into the dust. I wish that you would subscribe for The Dawn, published by Thynne and Jarvis, Ltd., Whitefriars Street, E. C. 4, London. It is invaluable to all Christians in this day and time.

"Reader."

THE DUBOSE SCHOOL AND THE RURAL PROBLEM

E. Dargon Butt

President DuBose School Alumni Association.

OF the many forward steps which our Church is taking, one which has attracted much attention is its awakened interest in rural work.

For too long a period there has been in many quarters but a half-hearted interest in the need and opportunity of the Church in the country districts. Happily, this condition is rapidly changing, and it can be truthfully said today that something is really being done. A Department of Rural Work has been established under the National Department of Christian Social Service; serious conferences on the relation of the Church to rural work have been held; a Rural Fellowship has been established, which publishes its own paper: earnest appeals for a fresh interest in this vital work have been widely made: and many men among the several dioceses have dedicated their lives to its service.

There is unquestionably, however, in this movement a need for what might be called a centre of gravity, or focal point, around which the work can revolve.

This need, it is believed, is in process of being adequately met, by the foundation and work of The DuBose Memorial Church Training School, situated at Monteagle, Tennessee, on the Cumberland Plateau, six miles from the University of the South at Sewanee.

So far as our own Church is concerned, it is accurate to say that this School is entirely unique. It is in no sense another Seminary, but on the contrary is an institution equipped to prepare men for rural work, especially those who, through no fault of their own, have not had a college education, but yet are eager to serve God in the Ministry. It must never be forgotten that Our Lord was a countryman, whose whole life was spent in the rural districts, ministering to the people of the soil. It is to bring the Gospel to these people, many of whose children will ultimately gravitate to the cities and become either an asset or a liability to the Church, that the DuBose School has its existence.

An absolute essential in country work is an ability on the part of the clergyman to understand the conditions, the needs, and the characteristic point of view of rural work. Inasmuch as the majority of men entering the ministry are drawn from the city churches, it is necessarily difficult for them, no matter how consecrated they may be, to understand and sympathize with the point of view of the simple people in isolated areas. Could there be imagined, for instance, anything more fatuous or ineffectual, than for the city bred and educated clergyman, addressing a group of farmers, to discuss the latest theory of the Synoptic Problem, or to discourse on the composite character of the book of Genesis? What interest have they in the question of who wrote the Fourth Gospel, or the meaning of the Hypostatic Union, or whether the Procession of the Holy Ghost is from the Father and the Son, or from the Father only? They can understand a simple vital religion and every member of the congregation can appreciate and make his own such a saying as "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

The above samples, which every Bishop knows might be multitplied indefinitely, merely serve to illustrate the fact that if a man is to take up the high privilege of country work, something more than a college and city seminary training is required. This "something" it is believed the DuBose School gives. It offers a singular opportunity for a man to enter into and absorb the outlook of "the children of the soil". By the time he is ready to graduate, he has for some years shared their life, and is adequately equipped to take up his task in the rural districts.

All this is largely made possible, because the school, "far from the madding crowd", is located in the very centre of a rural people. Then, too, it owns and its students operate its own farm and dairy. Hence these boys and men come into closest contact with the type of person among whom their future work is to lie, and gain that which, as said above, is at once so vital and so difficult for the city bred priest to obtain, a sympathetic understanding of the countryman's outlook on life. Each student must regularly visit and care for one of the many little country churches which for their spiritual maintenance depend so largely upon the School. Through these and other media, centering in the School Chapel and farm, the prospective clergyman is able to correlate many phases of country life.

It is hoped that ere long the School farm will become a centre for modern agricultural development throughout the Southwest, and that the farmers and toilers will come to understand that the Church is really their friend.

Another feature of the School which is to be developed is the Rural Conference. Quite apart from the inspiration accruing to the students and returning Alumni from such gatherings, it is felt that many, both clergymen and laymen, may thereby be encouraged to give themselves to country work.

Yet another adavantage of the School is the fact that it is physically equipped to receive older men who desire to enter the ministry. Not infrequently to men of mature years, some with families, comes the call to work in Christ's vineyard. For obvious reasons they cannot go to a regular seminary, yet on the other hand many of them are inherently suited for successful rural work. Such, if they are of proper calibre, are gladly received and trained for this noble work.

There can be no doubt that the DuBose School has already secured for itself a peculiar place in the educational life of the ministry, and is rendering a unique service to the Church.

To sum up.

It has an ideal location, in the very midst of a wide and varied country population. It possesses a splendid physical equipment, thoroughly adapted to its peculiar needs. It has an able Faculty, selected for its particular work. It is able to receive and to train high-grade men who for many reasons, as for instance, maturity in years or family responsibilities, would otherwise be lost to the ministry. Do you not think that such an Institution deserves the active support of every single member of the Church, including your own?

Church Intelligence

Sunday, May 5, 1929, is Rural Life Sunday.

Rural Life Sunday will be observed in all parts of the world on May 5, 1929. The Home Missions Council, representing twenty-eight denominations in the United States and Canada, is promoting this day for the purpose of uniting the thought and interest of the Christian Church in the following:

(a) Prayer for God's Blessing on Fields and Pastures.

(b) The Spiritual, Social and Economic Welfare of the Husbandman and His Family.

(c) The Importance of the Country Church and Its Place in the Life of the People.

Bishop Rowe Encouraged.

Writing from Ketchikan just after Easter, Bishop Rowe sent $170 to count on the quota of Alaska, from St. John's Church and Sunday school. This is a congregation of white people. The Bishop says:

"The native church, congregation and Sunday school here are a joy and comfort. The Lenten and Easter services were most encouraging. The Communicants on Easter were one hundred and fifty. I confirmed seventeen."

Dean Abbott To Be Consecrated Bishop May 15.

The Registrar and Secretary of the House of Bishops has issued formal notice that the Presiding Bishop has taken Order for the Ordination and Consecration of the Reverend Henry Pryor Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop-elect of the Diocese of Lexington, as follows:

Time and Place: Wednesday, May 15, 1929. Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Kentucky.

Consecrator: The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland, Presiding Bishop.

Co-Consecrators: The Rt. Rev. Charles Edward Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky, and the Rt. Rev. Lewis William Burton, D. D.

Presenters: The Rt. Rev. Edward Trail Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Maryland, and the Rt. Rev. Frank Du Moulin, D. D.

Preacher: The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware.

Attending Presbyters: The Rev. Theodore S. Will, Calvary Church, Ashland, Kentucky, and the Rev. James D. Gibson, Trinity Church, Covington, Kentucky.

Master of Ceremonies: The Rev. William B. Dern, St. Andrew's Church, Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

Mystical Element in the Christian Faith.

The Boston Conference on the Mystical Element in the Christian Faith under the auspices of the Confraternity of the Mystical Life will be held in the Cathedral of St. Paul, Boston, Mass., on Monday, May 13.

The speakers will include: The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D., the Rev. E. B. Holmes, the Rev. Canon H. Adge Prichard, D. D., the Rev. T. F. Marshall, the Rev. Thom Williamson, the Rev. L. W. Snell, the Rev. H. Robert Smith, the Rev. Lee W. Heaton, the Rev. Grey Taber, the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D., the Rev. Herbert Parrish.

Those desiring luncheon or supper are asked to so notify Dean Sturges (Very Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, D. D., 30 West Cedar Street, Boston, Mass.) not later than Thursday, May 9, so that he may know the number for whom this provision will need to be made.

College of Preachers.

A study of the technique and purpose of parochial and preaching missions was made the week of April 21 by a group of clergymen from eleven states, who were assembled at Washington Cathedral for a five-day conference under the leadership of the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, Bishop of Colorado.

The sessions which were sponsored by the College of Preachers began Monday and continued throughout the week, ending with a final service Saturday morning. Bishop Johnson was assisted in directing the studies by the Rev. G. M. Williams, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the Rev. Dr. Churchill J. Gibson, of Richmond, Va.

One of the purposes of the College of Preachers, as the evangelistic agency of the Cathedral Foundation, is to give selected clergymen special training in preaching intended to reach the millions of people in America who are out of touch with any form of organized Christianity.

Among the clergymen in attendance were: The Rev. Fred Clayton, D. D., Omaha, Neb.; the Rev. Thomas A. Conover, Bernardsville, N. J.; the Rev. Dr. Edmund P. Dandridge, Nashville, Tenn.; the Rev. Hiram K. Douglas, Detroit, Mich.; the Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Elmira, N. Y.; the Rev. Howard I. Johnson, Jersey City, N. J.; the Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, Akron, Ohio; the Very Rev. John M. McGann, Springfield, Mass.; the Rev. Dr. Henry D. Phillips, Columbia, S. C.; the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, Greenville, S. C.; the Rev. Frederick D. Tyner, Minneapolis, Minn.; the Rev. John M. Walker, Charlotte, N. C.; the Rev. Dr. William Way, Charleston, S. C., and the Rev. E. Reginald Williams, Milwaukee, Wis.

Dr. Patton Returns From Liberia.

The Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton returned to New York April 24 from Liberia, where he has been studying the possibilities of establishing a school similar to those in the United States operated by the American Church Institute for Negroes, of which he is the director. He visited the outstanding centers of work in Liberia, and while he has not yet made his formal report to the Institute and to the Presiding Bishop, it may be said in advance that he is enthusiastic about the great opportunity presented.

Kansas City Has G. F. S. Spring Conference.

Seventy-five leaders and members of the Girls' Friendly Society from fourteen states have just met in Kansas City, Mo., for a national conference. A forward-looking program developed the theme "Growing with the Girls' Friendly Society"; and personal contacts between persons from all parts of the country led to a better understanding of mutual problems.

One of the most outstanding features of this conference was a talk on The Art of Living Together by Dr. Valeria H. Parker, well-known throughout the country as Director of Field Extension of the American Social Hygiene Association. Dr. Parker discussed the problems of the young girl in her relationship to her family, to other girls, and to boys. Other interesting events were the opening session at which the Rt. Rev. Sidney Catlin Partridge, Bishop of Western Missouri, welcomed the delegates to Kansas City, the Corporate Communion, the symbolic service of lights, and a banquet and play at which about three hundred were entertained. Following the conference, there was a two-day session of the board of directors of the society.

The experiment of taking this national spring conference and meeting of the board of directors to the middle-west has been a great success and means an important step forward in the growth and development of the society.

Million More Bibles Distributed.

According to an Associated Press dispatch a report of the American Bible Society that a million more Bibles were distributed throughout the world during the past year than in any previous year will be made by the permanent committee on Bible cause for the Presbyterian Church, U. S., at the General Assembly of the Church at Montreat, N. C., May 16-23.

Meeting of National Council and Departments.

The meeting of the National Council on April 24, with Department meetings April 23, was the last meeting of the Council until October. The opening service in the Chapel of the Church Missions House at 9:30 Wednesday morning, April 24, was memorial to Bishop Brent. The Presiding Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by Bishop Lloyd and Dean Davis. An address was made by Bishop Lloyd, commemorative of the life and work of this great leader of the Church who has passed on.

The Council at its business session immediately following the service received from the Department or Missions, with which Department Bishop Brent was so long and so honorably connected, and adopted a Minute prepared by a special committee of that department.

At the February meeting of the Council, when the reports were received from the dioceses of what they expected to pay on account of the quotas for 1929, these expectations were found to be less than the appropriations. Drastic cuts had to be made in the appropriations to all fields. After this action was taken it was found that the bishops of certain dioceses, depending upon the approval of the appropriations by General Convention, had undertaken work with the expectation of receiving the appropriation so approved. The necessary cuts in their budgets of these appropriations in some cases caused great embarrassment to the bishops, because of the fact that men had been engaged for the work and were already embarked thereon. It was decided to restore some of these cuts because of the fact that a number of dioceses which had not completed payments on the amounts promised on account of the quotas of 1928 had finally paid these amounts, thus giving the Council additional funds which were used to relieve the bishops of the difficulties in which they found themselves. Accordingly, restorations were made of the following amounts:

Idaho	$1,600
Northern Indiana	1,800
Sacramento	2,400
Western North Carolina	400
Nevada	750
Oklahoma	7,796
Philippines	1,600
Porto Rico	150

The Treasurer reported that the year 1928 closed with a surplus of $147,923.91.

Hawaii's New Governor.

President Hoover's nomination of Lawrence H. Judd to be Governor of Hawaii is a personal news items to every Woman's Auxiliary member, for Mrs. Judd is educational secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary of Hawaii, an active worker, and a charming person, as many know who met her when she attended the triennial meeting in Washington.

Mr. Judd takes office July 4. He was born in Honolulu, according to the newspaper report, and is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. He has served two terms in the Hawaiian Senate.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop.

Improvements for St. Mark's, Aikin.

Plans are under way for the improvement of St. Mark's, Aikin. It is understood that this will include the redecoration of the church, possible enlargement of the chancel and the building of a porch. The money for the porch was left by the late Rev. Henry Chamberlaine, who was for many years rector of St. Matthew's Church, New York, and for a few years prior to his death rector of Susquehanna and St. James Parishes.

New Chapel for All Faith Missions.

Plans have about been completed for the erection of a new chapel for All Faith Missions, Tunis Mills. The old building will be moved to the rear of the lot, and in time repaired and fitted up for a Parish house. The new chapel will be of Gothic design, and finished on the exterior with shingles, and while small will be attractive in appearance, and in every way suitable to the needs of the congregation. Mr. John H. Bailey and Mr. Gustif F. Mielke are the building committee of the vestry. The men of the congregation went into the woods and cut the lumber for the frame work, etc., and it is now being made ready for the builders at the mill. In a very short time the work of construction will be well under way, and the new chapel, which has been a dream of many years, will be about to be realized.

Department of Religious Education.

A series of conferences in the interest of Church schools was held in the Diocese, April 15-19. These meetings opened in the southern end of the Diocese in the field covered by the Rev. Hugh V. Clary. The following day the conference moved to Cambridge, which serves as a center for that section of the Diocese. Wednesday was devoted to Talbot County, centering at St. Michaels. Thursday meetings wer held at Sudlersville to serve for the Parishes and missions of that neighborhood. Friday, the nineteenth, the last conference was held at North East as ac enter for Cecil County.

One of our aims in these institutes is to reach to some extent those Church school workers and teachers who cannot avail themselves of the Peninsula Summer Conference at Ocean City, and also in a general way to stimulate interest in this very important department of Parish life. It would be helpful if we could get the interest in and reaction not only of all Church school teachers and workers, but also of parents to this whole problem of the Church school.

Miss Lily Cheston, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, conducted these conferences, and she comes to us highly recommended as a successful worker in Church schools, and a teacher of exceptional ability. It was hoped to make these meetings conferences where the peculiar local problems would be frankly discussed and remedies suggested rather than just talks on the part of the leader.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Masonic Stone in Cathedral.

Bishop Freeman, of Washington, Sunday, April 21, officially placed in the Washington Cathedral a stone given by Potomac Lodge, Ancient Free Masons. The gavel used by the Bishop is the same that was used at the laying of the cornerstone of the national capital building and other historic structures. All the officers of Potomac Lodge were present, headed by John E. Chrisman, Worshipful Master.

Special Services in Cathedral.

Services of special character have followed close upon one another recently at Washington Cathedral. April 21 at 3 P. M., there was a service held for the dedication of a stone for the Cathedral by Potomac Lodge No. 5. The Society of Colonial Wars in the District of Columbia held a very special service in Bethlehem Chapel a week later, April 28, at four o'clock, when the Bishop of Washington was the preacher.

Other special services at the Cathedral have been: Memorial service for Marshal Foch, April 29, 4 P. M.; dedication of Bishop Harding's tomb, April 30, 4 P. M.; commemoration service for Admiral Dewey, May 1, the anniversary of the Battle of Manilla in 1898. On Ascension Day, May 9, there will be the dedication of the altar in the Chapel of Joseph of Aramathea, at 10 A. M.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Bishop Tucker at Virginia Beach.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker, who is recovering from an operation for appendicitis, went with Mrs. Tucker to Virginia Beach on Thursday, April 25. By doctor's orders he is to rest and not to resume any of his regular duties before May 15.

In Interest of St. Luke's, Tokyo.

Bishop Tucker and our clerical and lay delegates to the last Triennial Convention are issuing invitations to a dinner on May 13, for Dr. Rudolph Bolling Teusler, Director of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan.

Prominent Church members have been included in the one hundred and fifty invitations. The dinner will be held at Westmoreland Club, Richmond, at 7 P. M. There will be a charge of $1.25 per plate. It is requested that replies be sent promptly to Mayo Memorial Church House, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond.

It is to be expressly understood that no pledges or offerings will be expected at the dinner. All are urged to come and learn about a great mission work of the Church, even if they feel unable to contribute.

Bishop Tucker, who was himself a missionary in Japan for twenty-five years, will preside at the dinner and will make the preliminary address, and then Dr. Tuesler will speak.

As many already know a $2,656,500 campaign is now well under way to provide funds to erect the new St. Luke's International Medical Centre. In this plant, construction of which already has begun, the famous Tokyo hospital, twice almost wiped out by earthquake and fire, will be established for the first time in fire-proof and quake-proof buildings.

That St. Luke's is a great Christianizing force is the opinion held by all familiar with its work. During the General Convention last October, the Hon. George Wharton Pepper, former United States Senator and former member of the National Council, stated in an address that "St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, is the outstanding achievement of the Church in the mission field".

The General Convention endorsed the whole program of the campaign and left it to the various diocese to carry it through in any way they thought best.

Dioceses all over the country have been forming committees and raising large sums. This dinner is the first step taken by the Diocese of Virginia in this direction.

Virginia should be particularly interested in St. Luke's, because Dr. Teusler, its founder and directing genius since 1900, is practically "a son of Virginia". He was born in Rome, Georgia, but lived in Richmond, received his medical degree from the Medical College of Virginia, and also Mrs. Teusler is a Virginian.

Joint Program.

The centennial celebration of the Diocesan Missionary Society of Virginia will be held in Richmond May 14-15, and the annual diocesan council will be held in Richmond May 15-16.

The program for the joint services follows:

(A missionary exhibit will be held in St. Paul's Parish House of the Missionary Work being conducted in the four Dioceses in Virginia and West Virginia.)

Richmond Convocation.

The Richmond Convocation will be held in the Church of the Ascension, Highland Park, May 8.

The program for the day follows:

10:30 A. M.—Quiet Hour, conducted by the Rev. J. C. Ambler.
11:30 A. M.—Holy Communion and sermon by the Rev. J. C. Wagner.
1:00 P. M.—Lunch.
3:00 P. M.—Business session.
8:00 P. M.—Evening Prayer and sermon by the Rev. W. H. Laird.

Acca Temple.

The Acca Temple Patrol in a body attended the Evening Service at St. James' Church, Richmond, Sunday, April 28, as a memorial to their deceased brethren.

Override Vestryman Washington—After 156 Years.

At the meeting of the vestry of old Pohick Church, near Alexandria, held April 17, a resolution which was tabled at a meeting of the vestry of the same church, presided over by George Washington, of Mount Vernon, in 1773, was taken from the table and adopted. It provides for the building of a vestry house at the rear of the church proper, in accordance with the original plans, recorded in the original vestry book. It was tabled, as the records show, because of "the burdensome condition of the church finances".

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett. D. D., Bishop

Bishop Darst Holds a Mission at Salem.

A week of mission services were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Thomas Campbell Darst in St. Paul's Church, Salem, Va., of which the Rev. Roland J. Moncure is rector.

The mission lasted April 14-21, services bein held every evening except Saturday, with two morning Communions and a children's afternoon service on week days. The Bishop spoke at the high school on Monday and addressed the Kiwanis Club shortly before the Thursday evening service.

Music for the mission was rendered by the St. Paul's choir at most of the services; the Junior choir on Sunday nights. Monday night, the choir of Christ Church, Roanoke, and Thursday night the choir of St. John's, Roanoek.

In spite of the rain and cold in the early part of the week, there was always excellent attendance.

This part of Virginia is almost home to Bishop Darst. He was born at Pulaski and graduated from Roanoke College at Salem in the class of 1899, and the same institution conferred upon him the degree of D. D. in 1914.

As Bishop of East Carolina, as Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, as one of the foremost preachers in the Church today, as a son returned to his people, this visit of Bishop Darst is a benediction to the congregation of St. Paul's and to the entire community, among whom the splendid influence of this mission will be felt for a long time to come.

Diocesan Lenten Offering Celebration.

Following a custom adopted a few years ago, the Sunday Schools in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia held a Diocesan Lenten Offering Celebration in Christ Church, Roanoke, in the afternoon of Sunday, April 14. The Rev. W. Taylor Willis, rector of Christ Church, opened the service and introduced the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley of St. John's, Roanoke, who took charge as Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

Delegations were present from a number of points in the diocese. Since reports on the Lenten Offering had not been made by several important schools, it was not possible to announce the total. Sufficient information was in hand, however, to award the three banners.

The banner for the largest total offering, won last year by St. Paul's Church School at Lynchburg, was awarded to the School of Christ Church, Roanoke.

The banner for the largest offering per member in the school was won in 1927 and 1928 by St. Peter's at Altavista and that school retains it for another year.

The banner for the largest percentage of total increase over the previous year was returned by Christ Church School at Pearisburg and goes this year to Trinity at Richlands. Trinity won this banner in 1927, but lost it in 1928. We will see if Trinity can keep it in 1930. It's a real stunt to win this banner two years in succession.

An especially interesting part of the service was a discussion by Mr. M. A. Smythe, Superintendent of Christ Church School, which had the largest total offering this year. Mr. Smythe described some of the methods used in his school which were particularly effective.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell Bishop

Christ Church, Fairfield, Has Bright Outlook.

The newly-completed parish house, being the first unit of Christ Church, Fairfield, was formally opened on the First Sunday after Easter. This building will be used for services until the congregation is financially able to add the church proper, it is hoped, at no distant date.

Thus ends a long wilderness sojourn in Masonic lodges, school auditoriums, etc. Time was when it seemed that the congregation would be forced to move into the mortuary chapel of the local undertaker!

Architecturally, the parish house is a gem, and has received unstinted praise. It is located in the most beautiful section of the city. The chancel furniture was presented by the local Woman's Auxiliary. The seven-branch candlesticks and Eucharistic candlesticks were

COLLECT FOR FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

O Lord, from Whom all good things do come; Grant to us, Thy humble servants, that by Thy holy inspiration we may think those things that are good, and by Thy merciful guiding may perform the same; through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ASCENSION DAY.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that like as we do believe Thy only Begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind hither ascend, and with Him continually dwell, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

ADJUSTMENT.

The light is there, else shadows could not be.
The vale is but the twilight of a day
That closes silently on land and sea
And films my eyes. I can but feel my way.
But this I know: the darkness is not cold,
Nor is it filled with spectres to affright;
The shades are kindly that around me fold,
They shelter from the glare of light divine,
Adjusting my weak vision to the shine
Of glory on the hills above the night.
I will not fear the setting of the sun,
The twilight haze and healing dawn are one.

—John McNab, In Commonweal.

The Teachings of Jesus.

What Jesus taught was, essentially, what Jesus was. He was an example of the things He said. The principles which He taught were the assertions of His inner self. They were not something which He studied and arranged in advance. They came spontaneously out of Himself. For this reason, he rarely referred to any other authority for the confirmation of His teaching. He trusted its authority to the proof of its results. Lives were meant by Him to be proof of His doctrine. He was not a mere pedegogue. He was a builder of life. His teaching was directed toward building great life purposes rather than imparting a list of petty rules. In this His purpose stood in marked distinction from the Jewish teachers of the day. To them, religion was a set of rules. To Him, it was a principle of living. The aim of His teaching was life, not dogma. He was, therefore, little interested in the doctrinal subtleties which concerned the theologians of His day.

There was about the teaching of Jesus an element of finality. He was not presenting a subject just from another angle. He was speaking with authority and conclusiveness. Walter Albion Squires, in a very helpful work on the "Pedagogy of Jesus", says that there was nothing archaic in Christ and that we are not thinking of His teachings in the sense of understanding them in the light of modern scholarship. We are, rather, trying to see Jesus and understand His teachings in the twilight of today. We have the consolation that this twilight is that which comes before the dawn and not that twilight which merges into the dusk. When we follow His teachings, we will come into a new and wonderful day.

Jesus was the teacher incomparable because He taught of life's dynamics. He indicated little concern in the settlement of incidental and theoretical questions which men brought to him. His purpose was greater than to communicate facts. One may teach something new of the clouds and he has given another fact. When he teaches of morals, he communicates a new responsibility. Jesus taught of the things of brotherhood and good will. With them came a gospel which related man actively to a duty concerning them. Also, by it he sought to transfer certain qualities in His personality to men. He tried to draw them from a set of theories to a personality. His purpose was not to get a few good deeds from people. He meant to build good men from whom would flow a constant issue of good deeds.

His task was far from easy. He had no backing from other sources. The highest class of religionists of His day opposed Him. He had to proceed alone. In addition to this, if the people learned from Him, they had to unlearn much else that they had been taught. He was under the necessity of making a deep impression and making it very quickly. He could not continue with those taught, giving them line upon line. Something must be planted so deeply in their consciousness that it would live after His personality was removed. He left no book written by His own hand. His teachings were dropped in communities, many of whose inhabitants were unfriendly and in constant campaign against Him.

He tried to broaden the thinking of His day. When they wanted to think only about a revival of the Kingdom of David, He told them of a Kingdom of moral and spiritual grandeur When they were thinking of a tribal and racial deity, He told them of the universal Fatherhood of God. They thought from man, upward to God, thus making their god a sort of exaggerated man. He led their thinking from God, downward to man, thereby making man like the Divine. They talked of a god in the temple. He told them of a God who is everywhere. They raised the question, "Who is my neighbor?" He answered, "Who is not?" They thought that a great man was one who lorded it over others. He taught them that the greatest man is the servant of all.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

There is no holiness if Thou, Lord, withdraw Thy presence; no wisdom profiteth if Thy Spirit cease to direct; no strength availeth without Thy support; no watchfulashrdletashrdl unaun port; no chastity is safe without Thy protection; no watchfulness effectual when Thy holy vigilance is not on guard. —Thomas a Kempis.

The Abiding Presence.

We might ask ourselves just how influential the living Christ of the Eastertide is in our lives. Is Christ just a figure of history? Does He occupy in our minds a place alongside Moses, Joshua, Jeremiah, John the Baptist, and St. Paul? Is He one of the world's greatest character to be spoken of in the same list with the Greek philosophers, the Latin conquerors, and the Anglo-Saxon leaders? If He is merely one of the heroes of history Easter has not been properly observed.

Perhaps Christ is one of the resonant awakening voices of the past. His clear statement of the Golden Rule, His Beatitudes, His Great Commission still rings clearly in our ears with the voice of Socrates or Spinoza or Confucius. We hear His pleading and rebuking words and recognize Him as one whose voice has ever been that of mastery and winsomeness.

To St. Paul and to the disciples after the first Easter Christ was more than a figure of history or a voice of leadership. He was an Abiding Presence. His place of residence was in the hearts of His followers. "Christ liveth in me" was St. Paul's declaration. "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me" was his assertion. Christ in him was St. Paul's power for a new life.—Geo. Wm. Brown.

At the Auto Show.

We are not in a position to understand how the Romans felt after Raphael had given new immortality to their city. We may notice only the influence of successive skyscrapers upon the dispersion of sunlight. If we do get radiant architecture or painting, the environment crushes in upon it until the poor whisper of beauty is drowned in the prevailing roar. The one really important aesthetic appeal of the age is made, it seems to us, by the annual automobile shows. Of course these sedans and roadsters first suggest the force of their engines, geared to whirl you down roads at a pace which makes the seven-league-boot person of yore seem a tortoise. The entire mechanism of the automobile has been refashioned during a few years. Marvelous things have been done with pistons, so that the tiniest fraction of an inch in the diameter of trim steel rods expresses itself in momentous power. One is invited to behold, this year, a supercharger which makes possible the speed of an airplane. The rarest and most artificial of metals congregate in this engine. It is a summary of the technical ingenuity of man.

But this is not merely a cavernous beauty, suggestive of the extraordinary concordances of animal anatomy. The trim car, always individual from bumper to stop-light, achieves that structural perfection which is, after all, the secret of building. No problem of structure is more difficult, for instance, than the treatment of the upper space —the achievement of an ending against the sky which will bring what these stones have to say to a harmonious conclusion. How well the contemporary automobile triumphs over this difficulty may be seen from a comparison between the low-hung, eminently graceful bodies of the present with the top-heavy conveyances of a few years ago. Perhaps the change has been dictated less by a desire for loveliness than by the demand for swiftness of motion. But there the thing is, as unmistakable as the proportions of Georgian colonial, or an Hellenic column.

Why, then, does the ensemble fail to impress itself upon us as an art creation in the same way as a great picture or church does? "Technique" offers no satisfactory explanation. The skill of Leonardo involves just as much exhaustive knowledge of materials and laws as does the composition of a Renault Do we not still marvel at the knowledge of engineering possessed by the pyramid builders? The fact that an engine is concealed in this neat automotive house is likewise hardly decisive. After all, who would fail to admire Carcassone if it were suddenly equipped with all the mechanical devices which are known to modern war?

Well, possibly the automobile has little to say. It is not an "art for art's sake", but an art for the sake of something in which we can never be deeply interested. The haste, the luxury, the practical necessities of the modern era are phrased in the outlines of every good sedan. This summarizes all the pressure from without which the life of today exercises upon us. It is partly a confession of the extent to which we have been victimized by things not ourselves. But when we listen in the shadows of Cartres, or go to look carefully at Memling's canvases, we cross the threshold of another realm, in which every movement is startling, arresting, grandly significant. There comes home to us the pounding of the spirit's pulse, beating out rhythms as tranquil as all eternity, and yet constantly as novel as birth itself.

It may be that the automobile, viewed simply as an aesthetic thing, is actually a resume of our important modern heresies. Though it arouses us to incessant going, it brings us nowhere. By the mere fact that it does so much it may be keeping us from doing largely. At any rate we shall be wise not to forget that all the deepest hopes of our race, its reading of death and its interpretation of the universal veil, were born during moments when some man sat tense, his finger on his lips.—Commonweal.

GOD'S VOICE.

Mary Beale Carr.

I hear God's Voice in whispering breeze,
I see His hand in budding trees;
I feel His touch May days like these.
And for rich blessings everywhere
I offer up a heart-felt prayer.

O God, Thou art so good to me,
Thou judgeth ever tenderly,
May I grow daily like to Thee
And may I bear the clear impress
Of all Thy love and kindliness.

Is God Waiting?

I was standing on the wall of a great lock. Outside was a huge lake vessel about to enter. At my feet lay the empty lock, waiting. For what? Waiting to be filled. Away beyond lay great Lake Superior with its limitless abundant of supply, also waiting. Waiting for what? Waiting for something to be done at the lock ere the great lake could pour in its fulness. In a moment it was done. The lock-keeper reached out his hand and touched a steel lever. A little wicket gate sprang open under the magic touch. At once the water in the lock began to boil, and seethe. As it seethed I saw it rapidly creeping up the walls of the lock. In a few moments the lock was full. The great gates swung open and the huge ship floated into the lock now filled to the brim with the fulness inpoured from the waiting lake without.

Is not this a picture of a great truth about the Holy Spirit? Here are God's children, like that empty lock, waiting to be filled. And, as that great inland sea outside the lock was willing and waiting to pour its abundance into the lock, so here is God willing to pour His fulness of life into the lives of His children. But He is waiting. For what? Waiting, as the lake waited, for something to be done by us. Waiting for us to reach forth and touch that tiny wicket gate of consecration through which His abundant life shall flow and fill.

Is it hard to move? Does the rust of worldliness corrode it? Do the weeds and ivy-vines of selfishness cling about and choke it? Is the will stubborn, and slow to yield? Yet God is waiting for it. And once it is done, He reveals Himself in fulness of life even as He has promised; even as He has been all the time willing and ready to do. For all the barriers and hindrances have been upon our side; not upon His. They are the barriers not of His unwillingness, but of our unyieldedness. And so you say you got all of Christ, when you were saved? Doubtless you did, but the point in issue here is not whether you got all of Christ, but did Christ get all of you?—James H. McConkey.

Doing His Will.

No one can earn his way into the kingdom of God by giving, going or doing. However, it is very certain that many are brought into the kingdom after they have done the will of our Lord, and certain it is that all who have been brought into the kingdom must and will do His way. In the eighteenth chapter of Luke we are told of a very pious and highly moral sort of a ruler who came to the Lord, and yet went away from Him full of sorrow. He was filled with sorrow, we are told, simply because he would not go and do what Jesus told him to do in order that he might be what Jesus wanted him to be: "Sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me." Here was an instance in which it was necessary to put the deed before the being. In order to be, he must first do. This is clearly an instance in which it was necessary for the individual to come to be through in obedience to the command of his Lord. And Jesus said, when the multitude spoke to Him about His mother: "Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and my sister and mother." It is only by the grace of God that one is redeemed, saved, born into the kingdom. But it often requires even for grace, and more grace, that one get up and go and do something in the name and for the sake of their Lord. The ripest and the richest Christian characters this writer has known have been those who, like the Master, "have been about their Father's business", and like Him again, "went about doing good".

One may speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and one may give millions, but unless one have the spirit of the Christ and acts in the spirit of the Christ, such deeds avail nothing for the doer; but certain it is that one who has the spirit of Christ and one who wishes to develop in himself or herself the spirit of Christ and have the spirit grow stronger and stronger, will be doers of the Word and not hearers only, and will not only be willing to sacrifice, but will sacrifice and will deny one's self in order to sacrifice. Doing has its reflex influence on the life, and reenforces the life and the mood of life. Prof. James, the psychologist, pointed out that if one in a rising mood of anger will refrain from the clinched fist, the drawn muscles, the outward manifestations of anger, one will soon find the mood disappearing and the anger vanishing. Reaction is equal to action, and our deeds react upon us and change our very being. The kingdom of God and the entrance to that kingdom cannot be purchased at any price, but those who would enter the kingdom and those who would remain in the kingdom must do something more than express a belief; one must act, one must do in keeping with that belief, if one is to grow in the power of His might and become His true follower and constantly share His fellowship. Jesus said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me", and so must His followers if they would keep company with Him and enjoy the comradeship of His great and divine personality.—Christian Sun.

The Words of Jesus.

No other words spoken on earth have had such a history; no other words carry such cargoes of wonder. They are the birds let loose from a region above us. just out of our reach, of which we are dimly aware, and toward which both faith and wisdom point. They appeal to some identity within us half forgotten, but vaguely remembered. They operate upon something below the surface of our lives. Their influence rises and grows of itself and builds itself into a temple within men. They speak in answer to a deep cry of the soul; they quench an intolerable fear; they make this world, even at its darkest, something of a home. They bind us something within us which must not lie broken too long, lest life turn bitter. God made us to need such words, and now that they have been spoken, it is as if the silence round about us has found a voice, singing like music in the hearts of men.—Jos. Fort Newton.

The Evil of Worry.

I am more and more amazed to see how fond people are of carrying unnecessary burdens in this life. I do not wonder they find it difficult to get along The burden of unnecessary conventionalities! Some people have the burden of the tuft-hunter, the burden of the men who are always bowing down before their fellow-men, all the unnecessary burdens that Jesus never bore. Some people wonder how Jesus could ever bear such a load upon his heart and soul, but then He did not bear your burdens; He would not have borne them for worlds. He never loaded Himself down as you do with the false things in the world, the things that don't matter, that you allow to press your souls down and become a burden upon your lives. He never bore them, and so He was free to bear upon His heart the great concerns and interests of the Kingdom of God. He found room there for your care, and for your burden, and bore them in infinite compassion and love.—Silvester Horne.

GETTING ACQUAINTED

I got acquainted very quick
With Teddy Brown, when he Moved in the house across the street,
The nearest one you see.

I climbed and sat upon a post
To look, and so did he;
I stared and stared across at him,
And he stared back at me.

I s'posed he wanted me to speak,
I thought I'd try and see—
I said "Hello!" to Teddy Brown;
He said, "Hello!" to me.

St. Nicholas.

The Tree That Sang.

Timothy Todd had heard that there was to be a May party in the village, but he had not been asked to attend it.

"Why should I be?" he asked himself. "We have been at The Lodge only a week, and I haven't had a chance to go to the village school yet? But I would like to see the Maypole and the queen."

Timothy was sure that he was going to enjoy living at The Lodge. His grandfather was to have charge of the lawn and garden and the orchard that sloped down from the big house to the water. It was so large a place that Timothy had not been able to explore it all yet.

"I'll get acquainted with the grounds and the barns and the birds first," decided the boy. "Maybe the boy on this place would be too proud to speak to The Lodge boy."

There was one spot on the grounds that Timothy liked better than any other—a part of the orchard with gnarled old apple and pear trees.

"There ought to be a dryad living here," Timothy told himself. He stood under a great pear tree, trying to look up into its green boughs, but the branches were so crooked and the blooms so thick that he could not see. Timothy did not know that he had spoken aloud, but suddenly the tree began to sing in a sweet, clear voice:

"I once had a sweet little doll, dears—
The prettiest doll in the world.
Her cheeks were so pink and so white, dears,
And her hair was so beautifully curled.
But I lost my sweet little doll, dears,
As I played in the fields one day."

Then the tree stopped singing and laughed merrily. Timothy was surprised. No doubt about it; there was a dryad in this old part of the orchard. "I don't like the idea of being alone here, for she might turn me into an old stump," thought the boy, "but I might look about a bit and see if I can find a lost doll."

May Eve was his first chance, for grandmother had needed kindling wood cut, and there was grass to be raked for grandfather. But toward twilight he started out to look for the dryad's doll. Up and down the garden and through the new and the old orchard Timothy went. After a while he did come upon a doll, exactly the kind of doll a dryad would have if she took time from her tree tending to play. It was a wee little French doll with pink cheeks and yellow curls.

"She's probably gone to the party in the village," the boy told himself. "She's gone to hide herself in the Maypole so as to be there bright and early tomorrow morning." Then Timothy laughed at himself, for he knew this could not be true. He did wonder, though, about the singing tree. Because he wondered so, Timothy went down to the old pear tree the morning of May Day. When he came to that lonely part of the orchard, he heard the tree singing again:

"I found my sweet little doll, dears—"

As Timothy came near, he discovered that the doll was gone. He discovered something else, too—a pair of sandals dangling down from a branch, and there was a sequel from the dryad. The dryad had caught herself on the way down and was about to have a tumble.

"Jump!" shouted Timothy bravely. "Jump, and I'll catch you. I'm here, just below."

There was nothing for the dryad to do but jump. Down she came safely and stood, laughing into Timothy's face, a girl, but apparently a good comrade.

"You must have found Angeline!" she said. "You must be the new boy at The Lodge. Come up to my tree house It's all fixed with streamers and flowers and a lunch for May Day."—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.

Buttons.

Tommy Hudson was one of six children. He had two sisters and three brothers. Tommy's mother made it a rule that the boys should sew on their own buttons when they came off. Tommy knew just how full his mother's hands were and just how hard she had to work. He tried not to grumble, but he did hate to sew on buttons.

One afternoon when he was coming home from school a button came off of his coat. It was a big button and had two holes in it. Tommy did not think it would be so very hard work to sew on that button. But somehow he forgot to make a knot in his thread and it slipped right through. That made him vexed, and he gave the thread a jerk when he drew it through the button again. There was a snap and the thread broke. He had to make another knot and start again. He wanted to throw the button on the floor.

"I wish buttons had never been made," he growled to himself.

He spoke so loud that his young uncle who was reading, heard him and laughed. "What would you do without buttons, Tommy?" he asked. "Cheer up! I know just how you feel, though, and just what a job sewing on buttons seems at first. I had to sew on my buttons when I was in the army. I hated it until I got used to it. Now I never think anything about finding fault when a button comes off. I just sew it on."

Tommy's eyes brightened. He was very proud of his uncle and of the medal his uncle sometimes wore. Somenow it comforted him to think that soldiers had to sew on their buttons as well as he did. He unsnarled his thread and began to whistle. This time the button went on without any trouble.

He had just finished fastening his thread when his mother came into the room. She smiled when she saw what he was doing. "Tommy, do you know they are going to have a button-sewing contest at the church social tonight?" she asked. "The men and boys are going to see who can sew on the most buttons in five minutes. Dr. Slade says if a boy wins he will give him a new jackknife."

Tommy drew a quick breath. He wanted that knife. His own knife was an old one that had belonged to one of his older brothers. It had lost one blade and part of its other blade. "I'm going to try hard to win," he told his mother. "I'm ashamed of my old knife."

"You can try, anyway," said his mother encouragingly. "You have sewed on your own buttons so well lately you ought to be able to sew pretty fast."

Tommy went to the social that evening with his heart making funny little jumps whenever he thought of the button-sewing contest. The buttons proved to be of all shapes and sizes. There were great big coat buttons with accommodatingly large holes, and there were tiny little buttons so small Tommy wondered how he was going to hold onto them. All the buttons were divided as equally as possible, and each boy was given a strip of stiff cloth, a paper of needles and some thread.

Tommy went to work in the most business-like way in the world. One of the little girls whispered to one of the other little girls that Tommy could sew as well as any girl. Tommy heard, and his ears got a little red, but he sewed on and never turned his head or giggled even a little bit or tried to see how far the other boys had gotten with their buttons. Pretty soon all the little girls were jumping up and down with excitement and calling to their friends to hurry and win.

How the people laughed as the needles flew! But Tommy was too busy to laugh. He sewed on the small buttons first. Some of them had four holes. He wanted to look up and see how the others were doing, but he did not dare spare the time. Once his thread caught, but he straightened it out as quickly and gently as possible. It would never do to have it knot or break. The little buttons bothered him the most. But they bothered the others, too. Some of the boys dropped them and had to stop and pick them up. Tommy managed to get them all sewed on without dropping any. The big buttons were almost exactly like those on his coat. His fingers fairly flew when he came to these. He knew just how to thrust the needle through the big holes. He sewed on the last button just as a little bell tinkled.

"Time is up," called the judge. "Tommy Hudson wins. He has sewed every button on."

"He shall have the prize," declared Dr. Slade, and he laid in Tommy's hands a brand new jackknife with two shining blades. "You certainly know how to sew on buttons, Tommy," he added.

"I—I wouldn't if I hadn't had to sew on buttons at home," said Tommy happily

His hand closed over the new knife. He did not know when he had felt so happy. There were worse things in the world than buttons.—Christian Observer.

Terrified Terry.

It was October. There had been three heavy frosts. Terry knew that the nuts were falling. So, on a still, bright Saturday morning, he took a meal sack and a bite of lunch and set out to gather his winter supply. He walked along the winding path that led through the deep woods. Dead leaves rustled under his feet. A little squirrel now and then scampered across his path and whisked up a tree out of sight. A bobwhite called cheerfully to his mate. Terry was entirely happy. He came at last to the scaly bark hickory tree. He kicked through the leaves on the ground, under the tree, and found that there were plenty of nuts. He began picking them up. The hulls were loose. It was no trouble to shell them off. The sack began to get nice and heavy after a while, as Terry kept putting in nuts, a handful at a time. A bold squirrel came out on a high limb and began scolding. Terry laughed. "Don't you worry, mister!" he said. "I'll leave plenty for you!"

After a while a small clock inside told Terry it was noon. So he sat down and ate his sandwiches and his tea cakes, and presently the warm sun filtering through the bare branches made him very drowsy. He lay down and looked across the fields and wooded hills. A haze like soft blue smoke filled the air. It was Indian summer. Terry could see the shocks of corn in a field near by. They looked like rows and rows of small brown tents. How jolly it would be, he thought, if they were tents and brave Indian chiefs lived in them. Terry sighed. He wished he had lived sooner, when men killed deer and wild turkeys to eat and little boys could help fight Indians. It was dull to live now, he decided. You just bought meat at a butcher shop and raised turkeys at home, and little boys had no chance at all to see a massacre.

Terry lay and watched the cornstalk tents slowly change into tepees made of skins. An Indian chief, tall and brown, with war paint on his face and a war bonnet of feathers on his head came to the door of the first tent. He pointed to where Terry lay under the scaly tree. He gave a loud and warlike yell and leaped upon a buckskin pony. At once other Indian braves, all very tall and brown and brightly painted, came out of other tents. They leaped upon other buckskin ponies and, led by the big chief, came galloping straight toward Terry.

On they came, a yelling band, waving tomahawks wildly. Terry tried to get up and climb the tree. But he found he could not move a muscle. Big drops of sweat came out on him. The Indians were upon him now. They grabbed him and wanted to know what he meant by taking all their scaly barks. Terry told them that they could have them back and welcome! But they said no. They must punish him, or other little boys would raid their nuts. The big chief lifted him upon his pony and away they went. They stopped at last and decided they would burn him at the stake. Terry's teeth chattered so that he couldn't even beg for mercy. He saw the stake ahead with brush all piled around it, ready to burn him up.

At that minute something soft whisked across his face. Terry's eyes opened. It was the cross old squirrel. He'd been trying to get back some of his nuts! Terry gave a big happy shout. It was just a dream, a very bad dream, the worst dream, in fact, that Terry had ever had. Perhaps he had eaten too many paw-paws on the road that morning. The tents were there in the field as before he went to sleep, but they weer made of cornstalks again. And instead of painted Indians Terry saw a flock of friendly blackbirds circling around them. At last he sighed. "I'm glad I live nowadays. I don't reckon a massacre's all it's cracked up to be!"

The sun was getting low. The cows at home would be waiting to be milked. Terry took a handful of nuts and threw them down for the old squirrel. "You did me a good turn, old fellow, when

A Lady Solomon.

A quarrel had arisen. The subject of dispute was a book which was claimed as personal property by two small Hindu maidens, belonging to the infant class of a mission school. The teacher, unable to come to a decision as to whose property it was, called in the help of another, perhaps known for her wisdom.

Holding the book the judge asked whose it was, "Mine, teacher," was the answer from both.

"Very well, then, I'll halve it, and you'll each get a half."

"No, teacher," came promptly from one eager little soul; more slowly, yet distinctly came the reply of the other, "Achcha, very well!"

There was little doubt then in the mind of the judge, but she put another test. Noticing writing in the book she said, "Write on your slates 'my name is so-and-so'."

Promptly one slate was produced, and "My name is Radharana" appeared in character similar to those in the book; from the other disputant came the reply, "I don't know how to write".

MAY.

Maude F. Mumma.

O May, the month of flowers fair,
When fruits sweet blossoms fill the air;
And everywhere I look I see
Things that charm and interest me.

I see the little leaves at play,
Tomorrow they will blow away;
I see the birds go swinging by
Tomorrow, too, they say good-bye.

All up and down the country wide,
I see a change on every side;
And all your blossomed trees in white,
Make me think of angels bright.

I think of happy days to come,
When we are each one gathered home;
With no more heart-aches, no more sighs,
And no more partings, or good-byes.

A gem is not polished without friction; nor is a man perfected without trials.—Chinese Proverb.

Deaths

MRS. VIRGINIA BROWN LAIDLEY.

On the morning of December the 14th, 1928, the many friends of MRS. VIRGINIA LAIDLEY were deeply shocked to hear of her sudden death. About a year ago she had a fall which confined her to her house for several months. She had apparently recovered from that and had taken her place, with her usual alert interest, in the home of which she was always the center in everything that concerned her family and also her place in the social life of the community and in the Church, which was her deepest interest next to her home. She was a devoted, consecrated communicant of St. John's Episcopal Church in Charleston. She was very clear and decided in what she thought the Church ought to stand for, and yet most charitable to those who differed in the changed conditions of recent years. She valued the past, but did not live wholly in it. She recognized the fact that changes must come in many things and was most liberal where no principle was involved. In the missionary work of the Church she was deeply interested and she took an active part in the Woman's Auxiliary, being for many years its President, and during the last few years Custodian of the United Thank Offering for St. John's Church.

Mrs. Laidley was a daughter of the late Judge James H. Brown and Louisa M. Beuhring. She was born September 23, 1847, at Cabell Court House, Virginia (now the city of Huntington, W. Va.); graduated from the Steubenville Female Seminary, Ohio; married the late Judge William Sydney Laidley in 1869. He was one of the most prominent lawyers of West Virginia, a devoted Churchman and for many years a vestryman of St. John's Church, Charleston, and a delegate to the Council of the Diocese and a representative of the Diocese in the General Convention.

Mrs. Laidley was a woman of rare, intellectual gifts, well informed on every subject and a great reader, with rare good judgment; modest and retiring, she yet radiated an atmosphere of culture wherever she went, never for a moment being at a loss for an apt quotation or a well-chosen allusion to a familiar author. As a speaker she possessed wonderful gifts and delighted her hearers with the wide scope of her information and her memory. She was an ideal wife and mother, winning the devotion of her large family by her own devotion, tenderness and understanding and she has left them an inheritance of priceless value in the testimony she ever bore to her Church and religion.

IN MEMORIAM.

MANN S. VALENTINE, JR.

At a meeting of the Vestry of All Saints Church, held April 8, 1929, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

MR. MANN S. VALENTINE, JR., died on February 21, 1929. He had been a communicant of All Saints almost from the Church's organization and for much of that time a member of its Vestry. He was one of the Church's most generous supporters and until his health failed, no member of the congregation was more regular in attendance upon public worship.

Perhaps Mr. Valentine's outstanding Christian characteristics was his charity. The Psalmist's enconium might be applied to him, "He hath dipersed abroad and given to the poor and his righteousness remaineth forever". He was ever ready to help those in financial straits and many poor people blessed him in Christ's name for the relief he had given them. He had a strong and abiding faith unmoved by any of the vagaries of modern thought. Christ had died for his redemption, his conscience bore witness to it and that was enough; from a human standpoint his loss is great—great to his family—to the Church and to the community—but from that of faith, death is the consummation of life and therefore to him it is inestimable gain. We shall sorely miss him, but with the Apostle St. Paul, we "will not be sorry as men without hope for those who sleep in Christ."

To his family we extend our sincerest sympathy and we spread this minute upon the records of the Vestry of All Saints' Church and the Register is requested to send a copy of these resolutions to the members of his family and have same published in the daily papers of this city."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

donated by branches of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Advent and St. Mary's-on-the-Highlands, Birmingham.

The rector, the Rev. G. W. Ribble, D. D., was assisted in the service by the Rev. V. C. McMaster, of St. Andrew's Church, and the Rev. E. R. Neff, associate rector of the Church of the Advent. Short addresses were made by the rector, the visiting clergy and representatives of other churches of the Birmingham District. The senior warden, Mr. R. J. Wilson, sketched the early struggles of the congregation.

The Rev. S. H. Livingston, Ph. D., of Jacksonville, Ala., arrived the following day to conduct the Crusade on Evangelism, which continued through the following Sunday. Each denomination in Fairfield was invited, with its pastor, on a special night of the Crusade, as guests of the congregation. They attended in large numbers.

Dr. Livingston's sermons and conferences were excellent, making a lasting impression for good. A Church School was started the following Sunday, under the happiest of auspices. The outlook for the Church in Fairfield is exceedingly bright.

Church School's Lenten Offering.

The Diocese of Springfield is making rather elaborate preparations for the first of a series of six services for the Presentation of the Church School Lenten Offering. These services are all to be held on Sunday, April 21, at which time the pupils from the schools in the given neighborhood will go to the central church and there present their offerings and take part in an especially prepared service. It is rather interesting to be able to say that it is expected that this years' offerings are going to exceed in total that of any previous year.

Church Club Gives Synod Dinner.

The Church Club of the diocese announces the program for the Synod Dinner, which is to be held at the Champaign Country Club on Tuesday, May 14, which is the evening before the opening of the Synod. Mr. George A. Williams, the President of the Church Club, a member of St. John's Church, Decatur, will be the presiding officer, and the speakers for the dinner are to be Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, President of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Washington, D. C.; the Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, rector of St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio; the Rev. Frederick G. Deis, General Secretary, Field Department, National Council, New York; the Rt. Rev. Joseph M. Francis, D. D., Bishop of Indianapolis, and Bishop White, of the Diocese of Springfield.

For St. Luke's, Tokyo.

The diocese is busy these days in its efforts to complete the raising of its share of money for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo. A determined effort is being made to raise every dollar asked for.

THE SPIRITUAL MESSAGE OF GREAT ART
By Frederick Doyle Kershner, M. A., LL.D.

This book takes six of the great Italian artists, studies their lives and their messages, interprets a number of their greatest pictures and gives reproductions of some of the best. The art'sts are Leonardo da Vinci, Botticelli, Michel Angelo, Raphael, Andrea del Sarto and Titian. The material would be a real help to any person who was interpreting these masters in a group or a school.

America's Greatest Steamship Operator's View On Prohibition

(From Manufacturers Record, April 25, 1929.)

Captain Robert Dollar is perhaps the foremost foreign steamship owner and manager in America. Though eighty-five years old he is full of vigor and vitality. While attending the Foreign Trade Council at Baltimore, Captain Dollar said to a staff representative of the Manufacturers Record:

"When I took over a fleet of 20 ships, five years ago, any number of persons, all kinds of people, told me I could not run them successfully unless I served liquor on board. Not a drop of liquor has been served on one of those ships—and, they are running still, and the passenger list always is filled. If ever I have to turn bootlegger or serve liquor on my ships, I'll give up or go broke—I won't do it. And, what kind of a man would I be if I carried liquor on my ships and at the same time said to my officers and men, 'Any one of you who takes a drink of liquor will be fired instantly?' No, sir; my ships never have carried liquor and never will.

"I was banished from my home—from Scotland, my native land, at the age of 13, by liquor. Our family had a sad experience with liquor and at 13 I left home, and I vowed then and there that never would I touch a drop of liquor, and I never have. In my long life in the lumber business and the shipping business, I have seen hundreds of young men—fine young fellows, with every prospect for fine, useful lives—absolutely destroyed by liquor. Young fellows who started with me, but took to liquor, went into the gutter. All my life, from boyhood, I have seen closely the wretchedness that liquor causes.

"Prohibition has been a Godsend to this country, and above all to the poorer people. And, most of all, it has been of indescribable value to the women and children of the country. It is the women and children who suffer most, in the end, from the evil effects of liquor on the men, and Prohibition has spared the women and children an indescribable amount of suffering. Under Prohibition, money which went to the saloon and the liquor seller goes to the stores for clothing for the women and children; it goes into the savings banks by hundreds of millions of dollars each year; it is invested in automobiles and other recreations. Prohibition is a God-send to this country."

Fathers' and Sons' Banquet.

St. John's Church, Decatur, of which the Rev. S. A. Macdonell is rector, recently had a very splendidly attended Fathers' and Sons' Banquet. It has been noticeable that more of the parishes and missions are making use of these affairs to further win and hold their men and boys.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Albert S. Thomas, Bishop.

St. Michael's New Rector Arrives.

The Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, called from Arkansas to be rector of historic old St. Michael's Church, Charleston, S. C., arrived in Charleston last week with Mrs. Goodwin and their four children. They will live temporarily at 146 Broad Street. Mr. Goodwin succeeds the Rev. Dr. A. S. Thomas, elevated to the bishopric. Desire to have Mr. Goodwin in the Carolina diosese is not new. Ten years ago Dr. Thomas was called from Cheraw, S. C., to St. Michael's. Bishop Guerry nominated Mr. Goodwin for the Cheraw rectorship, but the nomination was declined.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Clayton Torrence, who has been for several years in charge of some mountain work which centered in Neve Hall, Charlottesville, Va., has accepted a call to the rectorship of Somerset Parish, Princess Anne, Pennsylvania. Mr. Torrence will also take charge of Wicomico Parish, Mount Vernon, and expects to assume his duties on the first of May.

The Rev. George Jewell, who has been a Methodist minister, was confirmed and received as postulant by Bishop Gray in St. James Church, Goshen, Indiana, on Saturday, April 7.

The Rev. Charles G. Clark, lately Archdeacon of Brooklyn, N. Y., became rector April 1 of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn.

The Rev. J. Gibson Gantt has changed his address from 1714 St. Paul Street, Baltimore, Md., to Bowie, R. F. D., Maryland.

A BIBLE STUDY

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICE

A PLEA FOR

A Bible Study Service on Sunday evening by the Church, as a Church Organization, in the place of the present preaching service so often poorly attended.

The common people will gladly hear Him through the Bible.

Indifference to God's Word arises from ignorance thereof, and by that indifference the Churches suffer.

The idea is approved by Dr. Francis E. Clark, of Christian Endeavor; Dr. James M. Gray, the Chicago Bible teacher; Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, and by many clergymen and laymen.

May I say that I intend no criticisms of the clergy in setting forth my reasons for advocating this movement; and that I have attempted no consideration of teaching plans, for such must be left to the choice of the minister in charge.

"I simply gave up all thought of ever being able to understand the Bible and am now starting to study Christian Science." Surely this furnishes the "raison d'etre" for the method advocated herein, as well as a powerful text to all Christian leaders.

"Of the worth of the general proposition there can be no question at all, and I am convinced that the failure of the pulpit to be a "teaching pulpit" is directly responsible for a great part of the growing liberalism within the church, as well as of the lamentable weakness of the church in aggressive service that is truly religious and not merely humanitarian or philanthropic. The "Book" is and must ever continue to be the basis of an aggressive, evanelical church."

REV. I. COCHRANE HUNT, D. D.,
Secretary, Lord's Day Alliance.

Dr. Alfred Noyes says very solemnly: "There is an intellectual Bolshevism which is most vicious and is responsible for many faults which are to-day upon us; that this type of Bolshevism has been more responsible, both for the Great War and the present peril of civilization, than has as yet been properly realized. I am not speaking merely of moral standards, but of all intellectual and esthetic standards. Also, their downfall has led us to the brink and to greater danter than our practical men seemed to realize, until they were confronted by its incomprehensible spectre which they called Bolshevism."

"Let us not deceive ourselves about the present position. The intellectual world of to-day is almost completely in the dark with regard to fundamental principles of any kind. The nations that won the war were saved from the intellectual ruin of Germany partly because of their instruction, cleaving to certain codes of honor; but in the almost complete egotism of intellectual Europe, how long can we trust to customs and conventions to prevent the process of rapid disintegration."

Again, let me quote Sir Robert Anderson: "The abolishment of the Bible on the continent is responsible for this condition of the intellectual world."

MODERNISM AND THE MINIMUM OF FAITH

By Rev. A. Z. Conrad, D. D., Pastor Park Street Congregational Church, Boston

I am to speak to you for a while on the subject, "The Mistakes of Modernism, the Irreducible Minimum in Christian Belief, and a Triumphant Church."

We are hearing a great deal to-day about the mistakes of evangelical Christianity from our friends the philosophers. It may not do any harm for us to turn the tables and consider the mistakes of Modernism. I will call your attention to some thirteen of them.

Thirteen Mistakes of Modernism

The first is the assumption that because a thing is modern it is necessarily new. Modernism can make no claim to newness. There is nothing new about it. Certain groups of men have come upon the scene to-day and declare that for the first time in the history of civilization a true revelation is coming through them to the world, but it is not new. Every utterance of Modernism is only a rehabilitation of things which have been often said.

The second mistake is the assumption that in so far as it may seem to be new, it is true and in the line of human progress. But every student of the history of the church knows that the great movements of progress, political, social, and religious, have emanated from men whose convictions have been great upon the lines of what we term traditional Christianity. I say it positively and confidently. Modernism can make no claim to the authorship of great forward movements in the nature of ethical reform, of spiritual or of human progress. It takes tremendous convictions to lift the world out of the rut and face people upward who have been facing downward, and forward who were facing backward, and Modernism has not the conviction which will do that thing, because the conviction which accomplishes this is reached in the truth which is absolutely timeless. Newness has nothing to do with trueness. Neither has remoteness nor antiquity. Truth is as timeless as God. Because a thing is modern therefore it gives it no prestige with people who think and think profoundly.

The third mistake is that the unaided human intellect can deal successfully with the great spiritual realities, that the unaided human mind can compass all the truth necessary to salvation and human perfection. It is a great mistake, because if it were true the world would have found satisfaction in the world, in the superior utterances of superior men, but the world has never found such rest. The unaided mind is not capable of dealing successfully with the profounder, deeper things of the soul. When we enter into the realm of the soul we must have illumination and greater acumen than is given to us naturally. No man is sufficient to grasp the greater truths pertaining to life here and life beyond without God. He must have assistance, but Modernism proclaims very glibly that nothing is essential except painstaking and persistent inquiry by the natural mind.

A fourth mistake is that the Bible is man's ripest and best word about himself and God, and not God's best word about Himself and man, a difference as wide as the poles. With a great deal of gravity Modernists condescend to speak of the Bible as a very

THE GARDEN.

I thought I'd make a garden
One bright and sunny day,
And so I got a little rake
And raked it up this way.

And then I dug down in the ground
To make a place for seeds,
And make a little fence around
To keep out all the weeds.

And then I got some little seeds
And planted every one,
And went away and left them
Because my work was done.

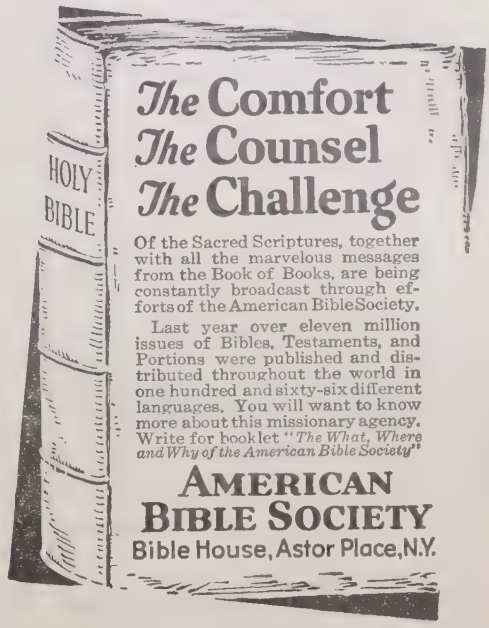
Then God sent the big, round sun
To warm my garden bed,
And then some raindrops, too, He sent,
When clouds came overhead.

One day the brown earth opened,
And there came a speck of green,
And now some little bushes
In my garden may be seen.

For The Southern Churchman.

MOTHER.

Julian R. Meade.



Your portrait is impervious to Time
For it is painted on my heart.
Though invisible, it shall be sublime
As long as love be art.

You are in His sacred place
That you prayed I might revere:
Where you bore my youth with the grace
Of one whose eyes are clear.

You are in your April garden,
With jonquils on your arm;
Or with your Bible open
On some long-beloved Psalm.

The Place of the Departed.

The dead are where God is. That is the real answer. If you believe firmly in the existence of God you will not be distressed by the existence of mysteries which you cannot understand. George Tyrrell once expressed his surprise at the large number of people who appeared to think that the existence of mysteries was a grievance: we have got so used to the exercise of our intelligence, we have become so hardened to what seems like an inner universe of amazing discovery and ingenious invention that we forget we have no right to know anything. We have an inalienable duty to try to find anything and everything out: we believe that man, by the use of faith, may appropriate grace and discover the truth of things he cannot understand—but we have no right to have an explanation of anything which seems mysterious to us. Rather man's reason for existence is to aspire towards what he can never reach, except by the action of the power of God; in the moment of his acknowledgment that he cannot, unaided, discover the truth about God or man, about life or death, that truth will be revealed to him, and only in that moment of acknowledgment will it be revealed. And this is as true of "scientific knowledge" as of all other, for in the end the basis of all knowledge is not, as so many men of science today assume, observational, but faith—faith that observation is true, that there is a law in the world, and that we can, if we obey certain rules, discover that law.—Guardian (English).

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Let us fail in trying to do something rather than sit still and do nothing.

"Give not thy tongue too great liberty, lest it take thee prisoner."

Wherever man is found,
Wherever human woes,
And human needs abound,
The Comforter has come!"

He that avoideth not small faults, little by little falleth into greater.—Thomas a Kempis.

It has been said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear. . . . Remember this: it is your own doing, not God's. He begs you to leave the future to Him, and mind the present.—Selected.

The Bulgarians are said to have among their sayings the following proverb: "Who lives in sin is buried alive."

Sympathy with those who have really suffered is a tremendous help between man and man, but we have God who is expert in grief, "the man of sorrows. He is full of joy now. He is crowned with glory and honor. He is showered with "oil and gladness", but at the heart of it all He wears the scors of His never-to-be-forgotten grief, and He will come to you, and He will understand your sorrow better than you do, because He knows all about sorrow, and will lay His on yours.—H. ASCENSION

Each moment of the New Testament narrative has teaching, promise, guidance, invitation and inducement to our souls to aspire and ascend, assurance for the future to which we must look, for which we must work, in which we must hope, of which we know nothing but the promises given to us. The Saviour, whose departure from earth our Church at this time commemorates, ascended into a cloud and disappeared there as the remaining disciples stood gazing. He vanished, but the power and glory and beauty of His life here and His work and sacrifice live and grow and give the world all the hope it has. Very reverently and humbly, each of us trying to be worthy followers of Christ and servants of His Father may take to ourselves lessons of this Ascension time. All of us must disappear presently from general knowledge and memory. All who know us or of us or care for us or think of us at all will be gone before very long. It is for each of us to determine for ourselves whether what we do and say in our daily lives and intercourse shall live after us for good or for evil. We must decide whether the souls given us shall ascend and be purified and glorified and their gathered glory and purity manifested by act and word and thought, or degraded and debased and held captive by power of sordid motive and vicious purpose.

Among all the millions of men and women who have lived and wrought and gone hence, those whose names and works survive the passing of two or three generations or centuries, may be recorded in one ordinary column; but inheritances from the long dead and forgotten yet live and are potent, harming or blessing. So it will be hereafter. Ripples on the water from a carelessly thrown stone go beyond our sight. From what is said and done today there will be effects and echoes when all now living will be still and silent and buried.

Ascension is the meaning and purpose of human life. There is no other supposition or theory or possibility if we are to consider ourselves as at all superior to the other animals, to whom we are akin in the flesh and in so many instincts and impulses. "Dust thou art, to dust returnest was never spoken of the soul." All the poets who really appeal to our hearts and live beloved in our memories because they had and expressed hearts and souls, all the clear, clean thinkers whose writings the simplest of us may assimilate because their reasoning is plain and their conclusions accordant with our own experiences and observations, call us to strive for ascension, to yearn and long for something above and beyond the encompassing dome beneath which we live.

The philosophy of Christianity and of the life, precept and parables of Christ is that by obedience to that merciful, beseeching, warning voice of Divinity we call conscience we may win beauty, hope, love, triumph over the cares and troubles and burdens that come upon all of us at all stages and ages of our journeys from birth to death. The philosophy of atheism and infidelity is hopelessness, progress from darkness to darkness ever blacker; that we come from nothing and shall go nowhere; that a living spirit to survive the dissolution of the body and rise to endless life in purer and happier realms is scientifically impossible as was the physical ascension of the Saviour through the cloud, attested by a multitude of eye witnesses.

At this special season of the year all nature tells us of resurrection and ascension. The seed that have lain buried and decaying wake to life and growth. Plants and flowers and trees and vines climb as they can toward the sky and bring forth flowers and fruitage and fragrance, loveliness and usefulness. The Gospels tell us of the One Perfect Life, offer us inspiration and guidance for humble emulation of it. From the darkness and stillness or enveloping night and through the opening of intervening clouds came the proclamation of sure promise, the annunciation of the Saviour's coming. He came and completed His Sacrifice for mankind and established His Kingdom over human mind and soul—a kingdom that has widened and gained strength through the years until now the nations are gathered seeking the way to peace on earth and good will. He died as we must, taught us how to die, lived again, as we shall live, and in light of day rose through the hovering cloud, as those of us who try faithfully to follow Him shall rise, to the everlasting beauty and unbroken happiness of the mysterious realm beyond the last clouds. Even while we linger here the souls given us by the Father and Creator may ascend, to be illuminated, purified, quickened to holy aspiration and reverent gratitude, winged with wings invisible and tireless for soaring through any cloud, led by the Leader whose shining pathway cleaves the deepest gloom.

Amid the business of life, doing our daily work as it is given us to do, in any stress of labor or care or test of our strength and energies, our souls may ascend always and gather from above the clouds new consecration to serve the Father and our fellow men, trusting and hoping that somehow, at any moment of any day, we may do some good that by God's grace will live after us. Earnestly striving through all the year to live and think and feel in the spirit of the Ascension season, we will be ready always for the inevitable call, whether it come in the flush and glory of youth, at the noon-tide of maturity or in the fading twilight of age.

As day wanes and the summer night comes we see myriads of glittering stars and a vast firmament the sunlight has hidden from us. When the sun of life goes down and we pass into death the darkness will reveal to us an infinity of splendor surpassing all dreams and imaginations, into which we may ascend, amid which we may abide forever.

HEAVEN AND OUR SAINTED LOVED ONES

By the Reverend E. W. Pfaffenberger

Editor "Western Christian Union", Boonville, Missouri.

Motto:—"The most practical thing in Christian work is to create a good feeling in a troubled heart."

"And behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias; who appeared in glory."—Luke 9:30-31.

These words of St. Luke give us some information concerning the saints in glory. What is the present condition of our loved ones who have died in the Lord? That is the question for the answer of which millions of people have been longing for centuries.

The human family may be divided into two classes, the living and the dead; those who have died and those who are living upon the earth. Our blessed Lord, when He comes, will judge the living and the dead.

"We shall not all sleep (die), but we shall be changed." The living—those who may be living on the earth when our Master comes—will not "die" in the way that all other mortals died before them. But the great majority of the human family belong to the first class—the dead.

Moses and Elijah are examples of these two classes. Moses represents the dead. We are told that God "buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." So Moses was really dead and buried.

Elijah represents the living. He did not die, but he was "changed", or transfigured, and went into heavenly glory without having been in the grave.

These two men appear before our spiritual vision, Moses and Elijah; and the point which we observe in passing, is this: That Moses who had died and was buried, is in the same condition and enjoys the same privileges as Elijah, who had not died, but ascended to heaven on a fiery chariot.

Thus we have a suggestion concerning the condition of the saints in heaven. We may regard all whose bodies are in the grave, as represented by Moses; and as Moses, in the spirit world, was in the same condition as Elijah, we have reason to believe that our loved ones who have died in the Lord, and whose bodies are sleeping in the grave, are in the same condition in the grave, are in the same condition in heaven as the saints who have never died. Our hope is strengthened by the thought of:

I.

The self-conscious existence of our loved ones in heaven. They have left us, but they have not ceased to live; they sleep not in cold unconsciousness; there is no long intermediate state of existence; no long period of sleep between death and the resurrection, as men seem to think. Moses who had died, enjoyed conscious existence with Elijah, who had not died, and now, when we stand at the grave of our sainted loved ones, and the closed eyes, the pale face, and the hands, cold and white as marble, tell us of death, we know just as surely that they are alive as though we had seen them ascend to heaven with our mortal eyes; because Moses, no less than Elijah, appeared with our Saviour on the mountain. Again, we learn that:

II.

Our sainted loved ones are in glory. We quote the text again: "And behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elijah; who appeared in glory."

While it is the general belief that the departed saints attain the highest degree of glory after the general resurrection, thy do certainly enter into unspeakable joy and happiness immediately after death. Elijah was transfigured, and Moses immediately after his death was associated with Elijah in glory. And so it is with all true believers who worship the same God whom Moses worshipped; when they die, they go there where Moses is, in the same glory where Elijah is. Let us remember, therefore, that our beloved who have died in the Lord are now—at this moment—with our Saviour in glory and do not sleep in the grave unconscious of their existence. They have been washed in the blood of the Lamb and are now eternally with the Lord. Praise be God!

III.

We may learn something of the possible presence of our departed friends. Moses and Elijah appeared on a certain mountain in Palestine, in the same locality where they had formerly lived while on earth.

Should those who were once so near and dear to us, and with whom we held sweet communion, be so far distant from us now as many seem to think? May they not often visit the old familiar places on earth, where they once lived? May they not, indeed, oft-times, like the good angels, come very near to us, even though we cannot hear and see them? It is not only a pleasant thought for the mind, and a balm for the bleeding heart, but the general information in the Bible strengthens the belief that the saints in heaven may often come just as near to us as Moses and Elijah did to the Apostles on the mountain.

IV.

We learn that our departed loved ones are united in heaven. Moses and Elijah were united in glory, although they had been separated by a period of five hundred years when they lived on earth, and had different work to do in different periods of time. The children of God live in different parts of the globe. They may live at the same time but never become personally acquainted; or, as in this case, they may live in the same locality, but hundreds of years apart. But there, in glory, all will be united—just as Moses and Elijah, although they had never met on earth, were united in glory. Even so now, Paul and Noah, St. John and Abraham, David and Peter are united in heaven. We read the biographies of the saints and become acquainted with them through their writings. There are many whom we have learned to know and love in this way, as though they were present friends; and at times it almost seems to us as though we could clasp hands with them over the chasm, but alas, there is no hand there. Thank God it will not always be so! In "some sweet day" we will meet those who lived in other places at other times. All the grand old saints, whose lives and writings have been a blessing to our souls, will be with us there even as Moses and Elijah were with Jesus and the Apostles upon the mountain.

V.

We also have reason to believe that there is a personal recognition among our loved ones in glory. Even our earthly happiness is in a large measure dependent upon the tender associations with those so near and dear to us. How strong and beautiful are these ties that bind heart to heart, so that often we value other lives higher than our own.

Should this all cease in death? Are the saints in heaven separated from one another, or do they mingle as strangers?

It cannot be that God has created us with capacities for such tender love, so that our souls are continually hungering and thirsting for it, and our earthly happiness is dependent in such a large measure upon the love of our dear ones, and that this then should all end in death. This life is too short for the full development of love.

We are not told that "there talked with Him two unknown men", but we have here two distinct personalities, Moses and Elijah. We do not know precisely how the Apostles recognized them, but no doubt through spiritual intuition which we all hope to possess by and by and through which we will be able to recognize our dear loved ones who have gone on before.

Within the recent past, perhaps many of the readers have stood at the grave of a loved one, with bleeding heart. And we all have sacred memories of friends and kindred ones so near and dear. We love them tenderly now. And although they have been freed fro mthe effects of sin, and have become like unto the image of Christ, they still retain enough of their personal attributes to be easily recognized. Oh, the joy and blessings in renewing acquaintance and friendship with our loved ones who have preceded us to the better land! There, where sorrow, sickness and death are unknown; no possibilities for misunderstandings; nothing to mar the perfect harmony, and where we need not fear to become separated again by death.

VI.

Another thought—the most precious is, that our departed loved ones are with Jesus. Moses and Elijah were with Jesus. Even in this life, the consciousness of divine presence is the chief source of joy for the true believer. There are times when, in sweet communion with our Lord and Saviour, we realize His presence in a marked degree; and at such times how little and insignificant all earthly pleasure and joys appear! How it sweetens the bitter cup of sorrow and soothes the broken heart! This consciousness of being with our Lord and Saviour, will be our highest joy in heaven. Jesus said: "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am." The Apostle Paul expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ. O to behold the glorified body of Christ! The same Jesus who ascended to heaven in the presence of His Apostles; He whom we have seen here through a glass dimly, and yet have loved and served; to be in His real presence, to see His eyes and hear His voice. In His presence there is joy and happiness forever. We now see Him by faith; our sainted loved ones see Him face to face, with Moses and Elijah in glory.

Is death, then, so terrible? If our departed loved ones are really living, if they are united in mutual recognition, and if they are in the actual presence of Jesus, should we, then, so intemperately grieve over their death as we sometimes do?

That glorious world into which they have entered is just as near to us as death. We stand on the threshold. The spirits of the saints hover over around us. And when the hour comes for us to close our eyes in death, they will bid us welcome in the morning glory of eternal day. O ye, whom we have loved so tenderly, and love just as tenderly today, you are not dead. You were never so much alive as you now are. You are with Jesus; your raiment is white as snow, and your face shines as the sun. Ere long we will greet you in glory; there are only a few steps between us, and we will clasp your hands in the presence of our Elder Brother, whose death has secured our life, and whose love will be our heaven.

* * * * *

Dr. W. W. Keene, a noted physician, in an article on "The Cheerfulness of Death", published in The Outlook, has given to the public the following sweet message:

"See what it does for the Christian. It frees him from accident, sickness and suffering, to which his body has been liable all his life, and from which he has often suffered, sometimes intensely and for long periods of time.

"It frees him from sorrow. No one who has reached even adolescence escapes sorrow. To many, sorrows are multiplied many fold, and bear down even the stoutest heart. The 'weary' and the 'heavy laden' make up the mass of mankind.

"It opens the gates of heaven to him. While we know nothing accurately of the details of heavenly life, we do know that there we shall live in eternal bliss; there we shall be in the presence of God Himself; there we shall see and know intimately our Lord Jesus Christ; there we shall feel the influence of the Holy Spirit; there we shall meet the saints of all ages; there we shall be reunited to the dear ones who have happily preceded us; there shall come in due time the dear ones we have left on earth; there our minds will expand beyond our present comprehension; there all the unsolved problems of earth will be clear as day; there we shall learn why perplexity, disappointment and trouble were our lot on earth and were needful for the orderly and sufficient development of our own character, and of God's large plans, not only for us, but for the race; there, in a word, all that is evil shall vanish away, and all that is good shall be ours forever."

(Than the above, we have not found anything more simple and beautiful, and we appreciate it all the more because it comes from a distinguished physician.)

THE LAST STAND ON NEAR EAST RELIEF

"VICTORY OFFERING" MAY 12

GENERAL CONVENTION last autumn approved the appeal by passing the following resolution:

> Resolved: That we heartily endorse this final effort of the Near East Relief to discharge its duty, and urge both clergy and laity to respond generously and cooperate whole-heartedly.

OPINIONS BY LEADING CHURCHMEN.

Charles E. Beury, President Temple University, Philadelphia; Treasurer Brotherhood of St. Andrew; member National Board of Trustees, Near East Relief:

It is a part of the tradition of the American people that we complete every task we undertake. Tritely phrased, we like to believe we never start anything which we cannot finish.

This has been particularly the case when the task imposed upon us has involved the welfare of less fortunate fellow men in far off, stricken lands. And in the noble response which always has followed these pleas for assistance, that section of the American people which proudly boasts membership in the Protestant Episcopal Church has consistently shared the burden of relief.

Once more the Near East Relief is appealing to us to help them bring to a fitting consummation the great humanitarian work it has been directing for years among the hapless refugees and orphan children of Bible Lands. Through this magnificent relief work, extending over several years, the lives of thousands of these unfortunate people have been salvaged.

But our responsibility did not end there. These lives had to be rehabilitated, and today there still remain thousands of them totally unprepared to be thrown upon their own resources.

About a year ago the Near East Relief sent out an urgent call for a fund of $6,000,000 for the care of the last 32,000 orphans in its custody. The response was spontaneous, but insufficient, making it necessary to give up the rehabilitation work for refugees and to reduce drastically that for the orphans.

At least $2,000,000 more, it has developed, is required to meet the minimum requirements of the orphans.

"The spirit of America," reads the Near East Relief's latest appeal, "demands that Near East Relief finish the proposed minimum training of the orphans in institutions and their proper placement where they may live the useful lives for which they were rescued and trained. . . . While the American people may congratulate themselves upon having done so well, there is serious danger lest we fail in carrying the work to a safe conclusion, and, with our ample means, we must not be recorded as leaving unfinished a task of such human importance."

Soon the Near East Relief is to pass out of existence, after having carried almost to successful conclusion one of the greatest humanitarian projects ever attempted. The finishing touches of this stupendous international philanthropy must prove to be its crowning glory. Then, and then only, may the American people rejoice in the knowledge of a task that has been finished, and a solemn obligation that has been fulfilled.

On Sunday, May 12, congregations of all Episcopalian churches will be called upon to contribute to the "Victory Offering" for the Near East Relief. Let it not be said, as it never has been said, that the Episcopal Church in America has been wanting in true Christian charity, human sympathy and the sacrificial spirit. The welfare of these thousands of human souls is in our keeping. Dare we afford to risk betrayal of so sacred a trust?

Wm. C. Emhardt, Office of National Council; member National Board of Trustees, Near East Relief:

Out of dire necessity the Near East Relief is making virtue out of a disappointing situation. Out of the same necessity they have evolved a program and budget which will enable them to close their institutions with as little harm to America's youthful wards as possible. The liquidating budget of the Near East Relief has been stripped to the bones. Provision is made for the oversight of outplaced orphans and boys and girls earning their own living; shelter and care will be given for awhile to those of very tender age; religious instruction will be continued for awhile; some slight provision made for the much neglected Assyrian people included in the budget at the request of our National Council; and some provision made for the beginning of the training of an adequate priesthood of the native Eastern Church. All this is subject to that ominous proviso that America responds favorably to this last appeal.

The Episcopal Church is one of the two most generous supporters of the Near East Relief today. Naturally that leadership is essential to the successful outcome of this Victory Campaign.

Wm. Jay Schieffelin, member National Board of Trustees, Near East Relief:

Over a hundred million dollars have been devoted to saving the lives of refugees and educating orphan children until they can become self-supporting. There are still, however, thousands of children too young to earn their living, so this last appeal is made to place them in suitable schools and homes. It will take two years to do this, so large gifts may well be made, half of which can be paid this year and half next year. As Americans and as Christians shall we not give joyfully to complete this needed fund?

Others giving their enthusiastic endorsement to this final appeal are: Bishop Freeman, of Washington; Bishop McCormick, if Western Michigan; Bishop Rogers, of Ohio; Bishop Sanford, of San Joaquin; Bishop Stevens, of Los Angeles, Bishop H. St. George Tucker, of Virginia; Bishop Tyler, of North Dakota; Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington; the Rev. George Craig Stewart, of Illinois; Franklin J. Clark, of New York; Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania; Oliver J. Sands, of Virginia.

THE BIBLE: WHENCE IS IT? FROM HEAVEN OR OF MEN?

By C. H. M.

HOW strange! Men can give us a revelation of their thoughts; and infidels have done so pretty plain; but God cannot. What folly! What presumption! Why, we may lawfully inquire, could not God reveal His mind to His creatures? Why should it be thought a thing incredible? For no reason whatever, but because infidels would have it so. The wish is, in this case, assuredly, father to the thought. The question raised by the old serpent, in the Garden of Eden, nearly six thousand years ago, has been passed on, from age to age, by all sorts of sceptics, rationalists, and infidels, namely, "Hath God said?" We reply with intense delight, Yes; blessed be His Holy Name, He has spoken—spoken to us. He has revealed His mind; He has given us the Holy Scriptures. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine or reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." And again, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17;; Rom. 15:4).

The Lord be praised for such words! They assure us that all Scripture is given of God; and that all Scripture is given to us. Precious link between the soul and God! What tongue can tell the value of such a link? God has spoken—spoken to us. His Word is a rock against which all the waves of infidel thought dash themselves in contemptible impotency, leaving it in its own divine strength and eternal stability. Nothing can touch the Word of God. Not all the powers of earth and hell, men and devils combined, can ever move the Word of God. There it stands in its own moral glory, spite of all the assaults of the enemy, from age to age. "For ever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in heaven". "Thou hast magnified Thy Word above all Thy name." What remains for us? Just this, "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee." Here lies the deep secret of peace. The heart is linked to the throne, yea, to the very heart of God by means of His most precious Word, and is thus put in possession of a peace which the world can neither give nor take away. What can all the theories, the reasonings and the arguments of infidels effect? Just nothing. They are esteemed as the dust of the summer threshing floor. To one who has really learnt, through grace, to confide in the Word of God—to rest on the authority of Holy Scripture, all the infidel books that ever were written are utterly worthless, pointless, powerless; they display the ignorance and terrible presumption of the writers; but as to the Scripture, they leave it just where it ever has been and ever will be, "settled in heaven", as immovable as the throne of God.* The assaults of infidels cannot touch the throne of God; neither can they touch His Word; and, blessed be His Name, neither can they touch the peace that flows through the heart that rests on that imperishable foundation. "Great peace have they that love Thy law, and nothing shall offend them." "The Word of our God shall stand for ever." "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the Word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you" (1 Peter 1:24, 25).

Here we have the same precious golden link again. The word which has reached us, in the form of glad tidings, is the Word of the Lord which endureth forever: and hence our salvation and our peace are as stable as the word on which they are founded. If all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass, then what are the arguments of infidels worth? They are as worthless as withered grass or a faded flower; and the men who put them forth and those who are moved by them will find them to be so, sooner or later. Oh! the sinful folly of arguing against the Word of God—arguing against the only thing in all this world that can give rest and consolation to the poor weary human heart—arguing against that which brings the glad tidings of salvation to poor lost sinners—brings them fresh from the heart of God!

But we may perhaps, here, be met by the question so often raised, and which has troubled many and led them to fly for refuge to what is called "The authority of the Church". The question is this, "How are we to know that the Book which we call the Bible is the Word of God?" Our answer to this question is a very simple one, it is this, The One who has graciously given us the blessed Book can give us also the certainty that the Book is from Him. The same Spirit who inspired the various writers of the Holy Scriptures can make us know that those Scriptures are the very voice of God speaking to us. It is only by the Spirit that any one can discern this. As we have already seen, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned". If the Holy Spirit does not make us know, and give us the certainty that the Bible is the Word of God, no man, or body of men can possibly do it; and, on the other hand, if He does give us the blessed certainty, we do not need the testimony of man.

We freely admit that, on this great question, a shadow of uncertainty would be positive torture and misery. But who can give us certainty? God alone. If all the men upon earth were to agree in their testimony to the authority of Holy Scripture; if all the councils that ever sat, all the doctors that ever taught, all the fathers that ever wrote were in favour of the dogma of plenary inspiration; if the Universal Church, if every denomination in Christendom were to assent to the truth that the Bible is, in very deed, the Word of God; in a word, if we had all the human authority that could possibly be had, in reference to the integrity of the Word of God, it would be utterly insufficient, as a ground of certainty; and if our faith were founded on that authority, it would be perfectly worthless. God alone can give us the certainty that He has spoken, in His Word; and blessed be His Name, when He gives it, all the arguments, all the cavillings, all the quibblings, all the questionings of infidels ancient and modern, are as the foam on the water, the smoke from the chimney top, or the dust on the floor. The true believer rejects them as so much worthless rubbish, and rests in holy tranquility in that peerless Revelation which our God has graciously given us.

It is of the very last possible importance for the reader to be thoroughly clear and settled as to this grave question, if he would be raised above the influence of infidelity on the one hand, and superstition on the other. Infidelity undertakes to tell us that God has not given us a book-revelation of His mind—could not give it. Superstition undertakes to tell us that even though God has given us a Revelation, yet we cannot be assured of it without man's authority, nor understand it without man's interpretation. Now it is well to see that, by both alike, we are deprived of the precious boon of Holy Scripture. And this is precisely what the devil aims at. He wants to rob us of the Word of God; and he can do this quite as effectually by the apparent self-distrust that humbly and reverently looks to wise and learned men for authority, as by an audacious infidelity that boldly rejects all authority, human or divine.

Take a case. A father writes a letter to his son at Canton, a letter full of the affection and tenderness of a fath-

---

*In referring to infidel writers, we should bear in mind that by far the most dangerous of such are those calling themselves Christians. In our young days, whenever we heard the word "infidel" we, at once, thought of a Tom Paine or a Voltaire; now, alas! we have to think of so-called bishops and doctors of the professing Church. Tremendous fact!

er's heart. He tells him of his plans and arrangements; tells him of everything that he thinks would interest the heart of a son—everything that the love of a father's heart could suggest. The son calls at the postoffice in Canton to inquire if there is a letter from his father. He is told by one official that there is no letter, that his father had not written and could not write, could not communicate his mind by such a medium at all; that it is only folly to think of such a thing. Another official comes forward and says, "Yes; there is a letter here for you, but you cannot possibly understand it; it is quite useless to you, indeed it can only do you positive mischief inasmuch as you are quite unable to read it aright. You must leave the letter in our hands, and we will explain to you such portions of it as we consider suitable for you". The former of these two officials represents infidelity; the latter, superstition. By both alike would the son be deprived of the longed-for letter—the precious communication from his father's heart. But what, we may inquire, would be his answer to these unworthy officials? A very brief and pointed one, we may rest assured. He would say to the first, "I know my father can communicate his mind to me, by letter; and that he has done so." He would say to the second, "I know my father can make me understand his mind far better than you can". He would say to both, and then too with bold and firm decision, "Give me up, at once my father's letter; it is addressed to me, and no man has any right to withhold it from me".

Thus, too, should the simple-hearted Christian meet the insolence of infidelity, and the ignorance of superstition—two special agencies of the devil, in this our day, in setting aside the precious Word of God. "My father has communicated His mind, and He can make me understand the communication." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." And "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning". Magnificent answer to every enemy of God's precious and peerless Revelation, be he rationalist or riteualist!

We feel it to be our sacred duty, as most surely it is our high privilege, to press upon all to whom we have access, the immense importance, yea, the absolute necessity of the most uncompromising decision on this point. We must faithfully maintain, at all cost, the divine supremacy and all-sufficiency of the Word of God, at all times, in all places, for all purposes. We must hold to it that the Scriptures, having been given of God, are complete, in the very highest and fullest sense of the word; that they do not need any human authority to accredit them, or any human voice to make them available; they speak for themselves, and carry their credentials with them. All we have to do is to believe and obey, not to reason or discuss. God has spoken: it is ours to hearken and yield an unreserved and reverent obedience.

Never was there a moment, in the history of the Church of God, in which it was more needful to urge home on the human conscience the necessity of implicit obedience to the Word of God. It is, alas! but little felt. Professing Christians, for the most part, seem to consider that they have a right to think for themselves, to follow their own reason, their own judgment, or their own conscience. They do not believe that the Bible is a divine and universal guide book. They think there are very many things in which we are left to choose for ourselves. Hence the almost numberless sects, parties, creeds and schools of thought. If human opinion be allowed at all then, as a matter of course, one man has as good a right to think as another; and thus it has come to pass that the professing Church has become a proverb and a byword for division.

And what is the sovereign remedy for this widespread disease? Here it is, absolute and complete subjection to the authority of Holy Scripture. It is not men going to Scripture to get their opinions and their views confirmed, but going to Scripture to get the mind of God as to everything, and bowing down their whole moral being to divine authority. This is the one pressing need of the day in which our lot is cast—reverent subjection, in all things, to the supreme authority of the Word of God. No doubt, there will be a variety in our measure of intelligence, in our apprehension and appreciation of Scripture; but what we specially urge upon all Christians is that condition of soul, that attitude of heart expressed in those precious words of the psalmist, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee'. This, we may rest assured, is grateful to the heart of God. "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

Here lies the true secret of moral security. Our knowledge of Scripture may be very limited; but if our reverence for it be profound, we shall be preserved from a thousand errors, a thousand snares. And then there will be steady growth. We shall grow in the knowledge of God, of Christ, and of the written Word. We shall delight to draw from those living and exhaustless depths of Holy Scripture, and to range through those green pastures which infinite grace has so freely thrown open to the flock of Christ. Thus shall the divine life be nourished and strengthened; the Word of God will become more and more precious to our souls, and we shall be led by the powerful ministry of the Holy Ghost into the depth, fulness, majesty and moral glory of Holy Scripture. We shall be delivered completely from the withering influences of all mere systems of theology, high, low, or moderate—a most blessed deliverance! We shall be able to tell the advocates of all the schools of divinity under the sun that, whatever elements of truth they may have in their systems, we have in divine perfectness in the Word of God; not twisted and tortured to make them fit into a system, but in their right place in the wide circle of divine revelation which has its eternal centre in the blessed Person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

NEW LIGHT ON THE DEITY OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

After some twenty years spent in investigations and research among many readings of ancient manuscripts and versions of the Old and New Testaments and other related ancient literature, William Phillips Hall, President of the American Tract Society, has developed a remarkable discovery concerning "the Name" of God and its relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ.

This discovery brings about a recovery of what clearly appears to be the original fundamental interpretation of God in Christ as taught by the apostles and the Church of the apostolic age; an interpretation which has been but incompletely understood, and much obscured in the incomplete readings of the later manuscripts and versions of the Old and New Testaments, for many centuries.

Stated briefly, the discovery is this: With the Jews and Jewish believers in the Lord Jesus Christ of the apostolic age, that is, from about 33 to 100 A. D., the revelation of the God of the Bible was summed up in what they called "the Name", that is, "the Name" of God, usually expressed in the Hebrew Old Testament by four Hebrew letters, corresponding to the letters JHVH or YHWH in the English, which they believed might not be uttered and referred to as "the ineffable (or, unutterable) Name", and which they habitually expressed as "Lord" in the languages employed by them; and which they never called upon, or invoked in prayer or otherwise except as "the Name" of God, or—according to their creed, then as now, expressed in the words: "Hear O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord" (Mark 12:29)—as "the name" of all that God is.

So when Jewish believers in the "Lord" Jesus Christ of the apostolic age—who as Jews had always used the word "Lord" to express "the Name" of all that God is—called upon, or invoked, His Name as "Lord", or "Lord Jesus", they obviously so called upon, or invoked, the word "Lord" in His Name as "the Name" of all that God is.

Mr. Hall clearly shows in his book entitled "A Remarkable Biblical Discovery, or 'The Name' of the God According to the Scriptures", just published by the American Tract Society, that these facts constituted during the apostolic age, and still constitute, the supreme Biblical evidence of the Deity of the "Lord" Jesus Christ, the co-eternal Son of the eternal "Lord" God the Father. This book can be secured from the American Tract Society, 7 West Forty-fifth Street, New York.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee," Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by the Rev. James L. Smiley, of Annapolis, Md.:

> "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us.
> Unto Him be glory in the Church of Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end, Amen."—Ephesians 3:20, 21.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well very near us?

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF MOTHERHOOD

Reverend Dr. Percy T. Fenn

THE gentler and fairer sex has come into its own! After a struggle—written sometimes in blood—the rights of our women have been acknowledged, and nearly all the handicaps and disqualifications against which they have fought for centuries have been removed. And we are heartily glad!

A woman is no longer regarded as the chattel of man—except in pagan countries—but as his helpmeet, his equal, his evangel. And in almost every sphere of life her influence is as potent as that of man. In some it surpasses it!

We see her exerting her wonderful powers in the home, in society, in the church, in commercial life, even in the halls of legislation. She is given her rightful place upon our school boards, she is active and efficient in her clubs, in our parent-teachers' meetings, she has proved her worth in every kind of war activity. But it is in the home that she shines preeminent.

A writer has said: "Woman is the highest, holiest, most precious gift to man. Her mission and throne is the family, and if anything is withheld that would make her more efficient, useful, or happy in that sphere, she is wronged and has not her rights." And this is true.

For in the home the woman shines more as mother than as wife! Almost every writer testifies to this. Coleridge says: "A mother is a mother still, the holiest thing alive."

Henry Ward Beecher said: "A mother is as different from anything else God ever thought of as can possibly be. She is a distinct and individual creation." And De Beaufort said: "The future of society is in the hands of the mothers. If the world was lost through woman, she alone can save it." The responsibility of motherhood is, therefore, tremendous, and by many mothers, it is not as yet understood.

The advancement of woman to a competitive place in the life of the world, and the multitudinous opportunities that have been given her of doing her part for the elevation of mankind, and of alleviating human suffering, have so crowded her life as to make her almost incapable of doing justice to the duties which belong to the home, and of discharging the big responsibility of motherhood. We see this everywhere.

There are homes in almost every community that bear all the evidences of neglect because the mother has undertaken too many responsibilities outside the home. Perhaps these outside duties are in some cases more congenial, but that is not sufficient excuse. The hospital, or the school board, the club, the sewing-circle, or even the church, should never be permitted to obscure the duties of the home.

We have known mothers—many of them—to be faithful in the discharge of every obligation outside the home, whilst the home bore every evidence of neglect, and the children were permitted to roam the streets, and to grow up like "Topsy".

If a mother be forced to choose between the home and the world outside, she should choose the home, and even confine all her energies to that. For the investment is the best the world can offer. Her real kingdom, in which her influence is all-pervading and permanent, is the home.

The little lives that have been entrusted to her are absolutely under her control, and to her has been committed the awful power of controlling, fashioning, and inspiring all future generations. It has been asserted, even demonstrated by statistics, that the mother's influence is stronger than that of the father, and that the majority of those who have become great in the world, have owed their greatness to their mothers. This is an awful thought!

It was Herbert Spencer who acknowledged that "The child takes most of his nature of the mother, besides speech, manners and inclination". "One good mother," says George Herbert, "is worth a hundred schoolmasters." And an old Spanish proverb says: "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy." And it was Napoleon who said: "The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother."

When Napoleon and Madame Campan were one day discussing the defects of the old systems of instruction, he asked her what was lacking in order that the people should be properly educated, and the reply was, "Mothers". "Yes," said the Emperor, "here is a system of education in one word. Be it your care, then, to train up mothers who shall know how to educate their children." For:

"The baby has no skies
But mother's eyes;
Nor any God above
But mother's love.
His angel sees the Father's grace,
But he the mother's, full of grace;
And yet the heavenly kingdom is of such as this."

But if a mother is to discharge her duty to the child, she must not forget that he is a tripartite being; he is made up not of body alone, but of body, mind and soul, and these parts must be carefully trained if he is to be a complete, well-rounded man. Many mothers forget this!

We are hearing a good deal today about the care of the baby's body. The government at Washington has a bureau whose business it is to educate the mothers of our land as to how they should feed and clothe the baby, and thus reduce the awful and needless mortality. Such a bureau as this is of immense value to the nation, and it should have been organized centuries ago. But if the body be carefully nurtured, and the body alone, the boy will grow into a well-nourished animal, and nothing more!

The mind must receive its share of the training, and the soul must be educated if the boy is to grow up into useful citizenship. This is what so many of our mothers are forgetting. The mother's influence should extend to, and control, the development of the little mind. Careful consideration should be given to the school-life and its influences and environment, to the books that are read, and to the recreations and pleasures that are provided.

And when we come to the moral life we find the responsibility almost appalling, and too frequently shirked. Some mothers seem to think that if the body and the mind are trained the soul does not matter. Or worse still, many do not think of this at all.

A tiny child we know, had listened to another child in the same Sunday Kindergarten, as she quietly and accurately recited her memory and other work, and she said to her teacher, as a look of perplexity stole across her face: "My mother says she never has any time to teach me my lesson. I wish my mother were like yours!"

Another child of five confessed to her teacher that she had never been taught to pray! Her mother paid no attention to such matters. Still another child was reminded by her teacher of certain services that were to be held on some week-day—services to which her mother, a wealthy woman, never came—and she said to her teacher: "Won't you please telephone my mamma about that service so that I may come to it?" This is both pathetic and tragic! And it proves to us that good mothers are the need of our nation.

Such cases are not by any means the result of a lack of love. These mothers would be willing to die for their little ones. But, unfortunately, they do not seem to know how to live for them. In many cases it is the result of thoughtlessness, or of worldliness; in some it is the result of ignorance. But, of course, there is never any desire to make the child suffer. But all the same it has its effect upon the child's education, and the bitter fruit is seen in after years. Here are two examples: One takes the form of a little poem and describes the brutality of a boy upon whom his mother had lavished her love, but whose moral training had been pitifully neglected by her. This is how it runs:

A poor lad once, and a lad so trim—
A poor lad once, and a lad so trim,
Gave his love to her that loved not him.

"And," says she, "fetch me tonight, you rogue,
Your mother's heart to feed my dog!"
To his mother's house went that young man—

To his mother's house went that young man,
Killed her, and took the heart and ran,
And as he was running, look you, he fell—

And as he was running, look you, he fell.
And the heart rolled on the ground as well.
And the lad as the heart was a-rolling heard—

And the lad as the heart was a-rolling heard
That the heart was speaking, and this was the word:
The heart was weeping and crying so small—

The heart was weeping and crying so small,
"Are you hurt, my child, are you hurt at all?"

The other story tells us of a man who became very famous in his day, who had been carefully trained by a pious mother. One day he was tempted by his companion to unite with them in committing an indiscretion which he knew his mother would disapprove, and he burst into tears, saying, "What would my mother think? I care nothing for myself—but my mother!"

If, therefore, the mother would do her biggest work in the world, and train up the future citizenship as it should be trained, she must devote herself with superabundant enthusiasm to the discharge of this great responsibility of motherhood, by the painstaking education of her child's threefold nature—body, mind and soul!

MODERNISM AND THE MINIMUM OF FAITH.

superior book, but only on the level of the natural human intellect, the unaided mind, and not supernatural revelation.

Books That Emphasize the Certainties.

A fifth mistake is the assumption that when we enter into the realm of religion we are in that of the speculative where absolute certitude is not to be expected. It is Modernism's conviction that there are no absolute finalities of which we can be sure as we can with respect to material things. That is absolutely untrue. We are surrounded by truth when we enter into the realm of theology, and can come to finalities just as absolute as any other truth we may discover.

I would commend to students Dr. Harris' book which follows along in a logical way the process whereby man attains to certainty and emphasizes how positively certain we may be with respect to the great matters of the soul. I also commend those two noble volumes by Dr. Madison, The Growth of the Spirit of Christianity, in which he shows by contrast what the unaided mind discovers, and what is discovered by the mind resting in the Word of God. These two books furnish a great foundation for extensive study of truth. A third is the greatest book from the standpoint of Christianity given to the world in a decade, that of Edwords, The Holy Spirit the Dynamic of the Church. All these books emphasize the absolute certitude of our traditional faith.

Another mistake of Modernism is that sin is a misfortune and that we are victims. That sin is a disease and not a diabolical, iniquitous, damnable thing that comes up through deliberate departure from God and violation from His law. Modernism wants us to treat sin pathologically and not redemptively, but Jesus Christ made a definite proclamation of His conception of sin when He went to the cross to eradicate it.

Modernism makes a further mistake in assuming that the progress of the world is to be accomplished by culture. No one disparages culture. Association with refined things refine the soul, but Modernism makes the mistake of believing that they can save the soul. They can no more save the soul than Lady Macbeth can cleanse her hands by walking to and fro and crying, "Out damned spot!" It did not go at her command. The soul of man can only be cleansed through the cleansing power of Jesus Christ, through His atonement. Modernism therefore is met squarely by the Book.

Again, Modernism presents Christ only as the great example of self-effacement and martyrdom. But His death was vastly more than martyrdom. It was a voluntary sacrifice of life, that man might have life and have it more abundantly.

Lesson From a Steel Plant.

Then again Modernism makes the mistake of declaring that prayer is an excellent exercise morally, but not a procuring cause. We hear a great deal of the self-efficient bigotry of man who assumes that God would change any of His plans to meet any human requirements. They say prayer is not a procuring cause but merely a subjective satisfaction through association with the invisible and real whereby we come into a more happy relation with God. But prayer is power procuring. It gets us into the presence of God and brings power to bear upon the problems of life.

I stood one day in a great steel plant. I went to speak to the men at the noon hour. Here were hundreds of men who at the signal of the whistle left their tables where they had been working, and as they left there was a silence all through the establishment. These men had been taking great steel shafts and paring them down to one sixteen-thousandths of an inch. Not one had any capability for that. Only a steel machine can do that with hardened steel. I noted when the men went back to their tasks they geared themselves into a great central shaft that ran all through the factory, threw themselves as it were into that power which was turning by a great generating force near at hand. Every man became a thousand men when he called power to his task. That is what prayer does. By faith we gear into the infinite, and when a man has learned the secret he discovers that prayer is a procuring cause, and not merely a helpful exercise.

Modernism inveighs against creeds, and says that a creedless church makes for freedom and self-expression. Does it? On the courthouse in the city of Worcester, Mass., these words are written: "Obedience to law, that is liberty."

What is a creed? An orderly statement of great truths and our individual conception of them.

Why this inveighing against creeds? As a matter of fact a creedless church is a spineless church, a church that never does anything in the way of reclaiming men or establishing missions in far off lands. The church with a creed believes things, and the church that believes things, does things.

Why is it that the liberal church in New England has made no progress in the last hundred years? Where have they established missions? Have they sent any Livingstone to Africa? Any Judson to Burma? Have they produced a Newton? A Knox? A Taylor? Have they caused any desert places to bloom with the flower of Christian graces? After one hundred years of vast expenditure of wealth they have nothing more to show for it than they had one hundred years ago.

But what is true of the evangelical churches of Boston? They have been multiplied in proportion to their allegiance to truth as stated in the great creeds of the church. These are facts not to disputed or controverted.

Modernism is simply trying to rid the church of the great statements of faith. They are historic, but are not to be received merely for that, but because they are found in God's Holy Word and are true. I believe in the Apostles' Creed from beginning to end. I love to recite it, but large numbers of New England churches will not permit the Apostles' Creed to be recited because they believe in a creedless church. What they do believe in is an effiminate, ineffective church. This is one of the great mistakes of Modernism.

A still further mistake of Modernism is that the utterances of Jesus Christ are subject to revision by man. His mistakes can be corrected, it says. The moment you take that position you have eliminated all the authority of Jesus Christ. You have made Him a creation of man and not the power of God unto salvation. You hear in some pulpits today, and read in some books, "Jesus Christ was greatly mistaken in this", which to you is a blasphemy, because you believe in the finality of the utterances of Jesus Christ, and that when Jesus has spoken, that ends it. That is final with me. I am willing to risk my eternal destiny on the fact that Jesus has spoken and what He has said is final. Modernism denies this. Therefore, shall we not take issue with it?

"All Scholars," a Misleading Phrase.

Then again, Modernism says that modern discoveries and archeology discredit traditional belief. The traditional belief regarding the Bible and the atoning work of Jesus have been discredited by the discovery that man evolves upward and is perfected unaided and without redemption! But the Bible declaration is definite regarding this and meets Modernism squarely and you cannot take both. If you take the Bible you cannot take the Modernism.

Another mistake of Modernism—and I shall not have time to dwell further upon these mistakes—have you heard it? "All scholars," have you ever heard that? "All scholars" have repudiated the atoning work of Jesus Christ.

Professor A. P. Fitch came to deliver an address before the Congregational Club of Boston (Lord have mercy on the colleges with such men as instructors!). He came before the Congregational Club and said: "All scholars have come to perfect agreement regarding the person of Christ. He was born the way all of us are born. No scholar of any distinction today, or any man of average intellectual ability believes in the Deity of Christ."

Later on, with reluctance, the Congregational Club passed a motion saying: "The Congregational Club believes and glories in the Deity of Jesus." But it was passed by a bare majority!

"All scholars" as a mark of fine scholarship is a very elastic term. It may have application to one line of thinking or another, but as a matter of fact the profoundest and most intensive thinking is never done except through the indwelling of the Spirit of God. The man who stands nearest to God, manifest in Jesus Christ, will do the deepest thinking, the longest thinking, the strongest thinking, and the most dependable thinking. The greatest scholars of today and of all time, are the scholars who have been under the illumination of the Holy Ghost. "All scholars"—never allow yourself to be stampeded with those two words.

What Is the Irreducible Minimum?

That is to say, what is the least you can believe and still be truly and honestly called a Christ-ian, a Christ-man or a Christ-woman?

What is the least you can believe? I will tell you. You must have a belief in the personality of God. There is not much difficulty of conviction there. You must have a belief secondly, in the fatherhood of God. God has a loving interest in humanity through which man can have a certainty for well-being. He has a fatherly interest.

You must have a belief also that Jesus Christ was God manifest in the flesh. You have the Bible for it, and the activities of Jesus Christ in favor of it.

You must believe in the Holy Spirit. He truly is the dynamic of the individual life, and the dynamic of the church.

You have to believe in the necessity of individual regeneration. Modernism stresses social redemption and social salvation. We hear a great deal of it. When these men who are proclaiming social salvation will bring just one, not one thousand, but just one person who was down in sin and became conscious of iniquity and through the proclamation of social salvation said, "I will arise and go to Christ for cleansing", and the response has brought a cleansed life, a life made over by the proclamation of social salvation, then we will have reason to stop and think a little while. It can show no such results.

There is a social salvation. But, how? By the salvation of the units of society. By the redemption of the individual; the transformation of the individual life. Modernism emphasizes sociology as against theology, and talks about better housing as the finest expression of humanity; better feeding; better clothing and environment. Never has there been a life regenerated by environment. To be a Christian you must believe in regeneration. When you reject it you reject the essence of Christianity.

To be a Christian you must have a belief in the resurrection of the dead and the immortality of the soul, and in the judgment to follow, the separation of the just from the unjust. You have to believe in judgment before you can believe in Christ. No one has ever found in the Word of God, nor in the utterances of holy men, such pictures of the results of guilt and the results of belief in Christ as Christ Himself has given. He spoke in parables that man might see. He spoke in parables because the truth was so tremendous that was the only way to portray it.

You have to believe in the sufficiency of the inspired Word of God, otherwise you have no Christianity, but only tradition. There is no Christianity unless Christ is truly portrayed.

You must have a belief in the triumph of the kingdom, to be a true Christian. It is the most wonderful picture ever drawn by human imagination. It has to be realized by the marvelous portrayal of Jesus Christ. With His cross impending, the shadow falling upon His path, knowing Him in fear, and His enemies crucify Him, He went on with His portrayal. Then, in that marvelous utterance He said, "Be of good cheer I have overcome the world". The victorious Christ! You have to believe in the complete victory of our Lord.

Jesus' Triumphant Return.

Another factor in the irreducible minimum is a belief, which I hold confidently, as to the triumphant return of Jesus Christ, concerning which there is no reason for any one to have doubt. I believe in the triumphant return of Jesus Christ, a visible return, and that He will come to His own.

We are living in a time terrible in its manifestations of iniquity and tribulation on every hand. This world has never seen a tragedy equal to the tragedy on a colossal scale which is being enacted in Russia, where guilty men, law-hating men, gospel-despising men, Christ-defying men have undertaken to change civilization, and bring in a new order to humanity. Every crisis of humanity seems to pale into insignificance with the awful calamity brought about by Lenine and Trotsky. They are murderers of the worst type, and on a larger scale than has ever been known. They have no God, no government, no law.

There you have sin as it is approaching its finish. And is it not true that sin when it is finished bringeth forth death? There you have the natural man. If you want a picture of the whole world with Jesus and Calvary left out, see Russia as represented by Lenine and Trotsky and you have it, a dark, black, burning revelation of evil, because it is man giving himself free expression. Self-expression is good when it is the expression of redeemed self, but evil when it is the expression allowing sin to control and have the body.

"I Believe in a Triumphant Church."

"It is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

There you have the proclamation. Our own country is not free from calamity nor any state. None of the cities can point their finger at any other. With our police strike in Boston we can well afford to be quiet when other cities give expressions of lawlessness, such as is manifest in Chicago. And, by whom? Not by the people who own allegiance to the Lord Jesus.

Do you know the ones who will ultimately save the world from its viciousness? It is those who have faith in the redemptive realities to humanity. I long to see America rise in her might and join hands with every other nation and say, "Let us have peace, and peace forever", but that will never come about by conferences It will only come about through Christian faith and its wider promulgation. But do not despise conferences, for they are more or less creative, but my friends, the great need of today is a new vision of Christ our Lord.

I conclude with this. You and I have nothing to fear. The Lord is a great God and great King above all kings. In His hands He holds the corners of the earth, and gathers up the mountains as a very small thing. His purposes are not to be thwarted or overthrown by men. If you are on the side of God's Word, Jesus Christ, the Apostles, you are on the winning side. I would rather be popular with the prophets, and the poets, and the Apostles, and above all with Jesus Christ in Glory, than to be popular with the crowd that will honor you with degrees and give you a high position along ecclesiastical lines in proportion as you repudiate traditional truths.

All a man has to do in Boston if he wants to be invited to say prayers in Harvard College is to rise and say, "I have made a great discovery that I have been in error. I have come to complete repudiation of many of the traditions of the Church. A rosier day has come, and we in this latter day, with the wonderful illumination granted to us through science and the great discoveries of our day, have now a gospel that is more rational". All I would have to do is to say that, and some time within the next week or two I would be asked to say prayers in Harvard and conduct services.

My friends, we have nothing to fear. It is our business not to concern ourselves a whit with what man says, but with what God says. Let us take our position firmly and positively. Line up beside Christ. The day has come when every man and woman with convictions must have the courage of those convictions and make declaration of that without fear or favor. It is ours to take our stand firmly by the Cross and fight for the truth in every circumstance. Who are to be the liberators of the future? Those who have the greatest reverence for the Law of God. That is liberty. The world is still in bondage; multitudes of souls are still in bondage; a great dark spiritual bondage, who are yet members of the church. They need something of the courageous convictions of those who have the fear of Go dand know it, and they will yet put things right in the ecclesiastical world. I say confidently, and without hesitation, the hope of the Church in America for the immediate lies with the great Bible Institutes. They must furnish the leadership which will conduct the people out of darkness into the marvellous light of truth.

Book Reviews

A BIBLICAL THOROUGHFARE: By Neville Stuart Talbot, M. C., D. D. Cloth. Pp. 350. The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $3.00.

The author announces on his title page that he desires to have the "General Public Share the Main Results of Biblical Scholarship". If the general public cares to follow him in this expedition into the realm of critical synthesis, it will prove an interesting experience. For the writer puts his material into readable form and charms the reader by his sincerity. Of course, some of us wonder if anything is gained for the good of the general public by attributing Isaiah to two authors, which is doubted by many erudite scholars; locating the book of Daniel at an age centuries subsequent to the events there recorded, which is open to much questioning; and splitting up the Pentateuch into sections involving intricate situations, in order to deprive Moses of its authorship. We need only in this latter phase, refer the writer to Robert Dick Wilson, the learned Orientalist, who in his "A Scientific Investigation of the Old Testament", declares, concerning Deuteronomy: "For the assumption that Deuteronomy was written in, or shortly before, 621 B. C., there is absolutely no direct evidence. The testimony of Deuteronomy itself is that it was given by Moses on the plains of Moab" (p. 36). And the hypotheses that the Hebrew idea of origins came from Babylonia, is valiantly met by Bishop Du Bose in the Biblical Review of October, 1926. The contrary will eventually be admitted when the scholars get their right mind, and further confirmation of the Scriptural story is obtained by the increasingly vindicating excavations in the lands of the Bible. Our writer thinks, with many of his school, that Genesis is not history (in the beginnings) but some day he may change his attitude. We have heard so much of "assured results" which in turn have been succeeded by contrary results that we are puzzled to think where we are yet to arrive in this seductive meandering in the scholastic world. Sometimes we wonder if the "wisdom of the wise" may not be in peril of question, as it once was (1 Cor. 1:19-21). We do not set a premium upon ignorance; but we do doubt the stability of a process that calls itself scientific and is ever changing its position. Has the author ever given intelligent study to "The Failure of the Higher Criticism", by Emil Reich?

Now, a reviewer is never happy to condemn a book. He instinctively longs to commend it to the reading public with every impulse of genuine sympathy. And this reviewer does appreciate this effort for its readableness, and its downright honest purpose to help those who shall peruse its pages. The tone is reverent and spirit uplifting. If the readers will fortify themselves against the complacent spirit of assurance as to the findings of scholarship, which we must protest in many instances are generous guesses, they will obtain much that is inspirational and heart-satisfying.

"MADNESS OF WAR."

Mr. Editor:

In a review of the "Madness of War", by E. L. W., in the April 6 issue of The Churchman, I find a criticism of General Lee's position that is not warranted by the facts, i. e., that the tragedy of his life was because he failed "to put first things first". That the case is mis-stated and that the reverse is true, can be readily proved. Will quote from three Northern witnesses and one Southern, a no less a person than Lee himself. Many others could be given did space permit; these, however, will show my point.

Gen. Morris Schaff, of Boston, in his Life of Jefferson Davis, states the case for Lee and the Confederacy thus: "In spite of disasters and privations, the Southern people were willing to fight on. That spirit in Davis was the color bearer and never quailed; the trumpet for him and for Lee and the self-respecting was the principle involved, a principle we venture to prophesy which will be the rallying ground for the people of the United States when the rights under the Constitution are all in the constricting folds of the Lernean Hydra of complete centralization."

Dr. Arthur W. Littlefield, well-known New England divine, thus states the case in the January 1924 issue of "The Libertarian": " 'The South tried to divide the country; Lincoln saved it,' that is erroneous notion in these parts still; nobody up here, with very few exceptions, understands that the South tried to save Federalism and the Constitution of the Fathers as against Imperialism and the Constitution of the Protectionists. The South, though defeated, really saved to America, and as we now see, the world all that was best in American nationality—the Constitution of the Confederacy furnishes ample proof of that. Lee's shrine at Lexington, not Lincoln's tomb, will become the shrine of American patriotism, when once history is told correctly! . . Both Henry Clay and Calhoun saw clearly that Federalism would develop eventually into Imperialism and that the central government could and would coerce the states whenever one section got control of that government. This, of course, actually happened in the tariff legislation inaugurated and controlled by the North. . . . In order to be true to the American ideal, one must know no sections nor mere habitat. I am simply an American patriot trying to be true to Principles, and loving the South, not only for her own sake, but because she was true to the Principles that the fathers thought they had established and secured in the Constitution of 1787-89. Personally, I don't care for any re-writing of the Constitution; I want a new emphasis upon the Jeffersonian principles and those of the Confederacy inculcated among the American people, and for that I am working mightily! (Incidentally, Dr.

Littlefield staged a lecture tour in the South on "The Unfinished Work of the Confederacy".) The historic fact is, that the Northeastern States have nearly destroyed not only the Constitution, but also the fundamental American ideals of local self-government and a Federal Union built upon State sovereignty. The signs of a new revolt, akin to that of the Sixties, are ominous, but with bullets never again, only ballots now and evermore. Surely, the 'Lost Cause' is having a most glorious resurrection! I wonder how many Americans—especially Southerners—realize it?"

Gamaliel Bradford states the case in The New York Times, February, 1925, thus: "Of all the great political questions pressing upon the country for solution today, none is more important than the relation of the State and Federal governments. The encroachment of the federal power has been so steady and so slow that few stop to realize the radical changes it involves; and fewer still to consider how these changes may be best met. It was the protest against this tendency which largely animated the thinking men of the South in the Civil War, however, slavery may have been the immediate provoking cause of that great contest. And the result of the war was to increase immensely the federal power and influence. The dangerous aspect of the matter is that, as every year sees the gradual increase in vigor and dominance of the government at Washington, so there is an even greater corresponding tendency to weaken and degrade the state governments. And unless some remedy can be found for it, it is difficult to overestimate the peril to which our whole system is exposed. The attempt of the North to maintain the union was nothing but forcible conquest, and the surrender at Appomattox marked the most tremendous step in the progression that had gone on from the beginning to undermine the state governments and increase the power of the federal. I hope you may see fit to allow my brief discussion to serve as introduction to the letter of General Lee to Lord Acton, which should be widely circulated for the benefit of those who have misunderstood the position of the Southern leaders."

Lastly, General Lee states his own case, in his letter to Colonel McCulloh, a member of the faculty of Washington and Lee, who at the time of the writing of this letter (September 28, 1869), was on a mission to France connected with this institution. I quote from this letter as follows: "I am very much obliged for the kind sentiments felt for the South and the sympathy extended to our people (by the French). Every brave people who considered their rights attacked and their constitutional liberties invaded, would have done as we did. Our conduct was not caused by any insurrectionary spirit, nor can it be termed rebellious, for our construction of the Constitution under which we lived and acted, was the same from its adoption, and for eighty years we had been taught and educated by the founders of the Republic, and their written declarations which controlled our consciences and actions. The epithets that have been heaped upon us of 'Rebels' and traitors have no just meaning nor are they believed in by those who understood the subject, even at the North."

After reading these testimonies, the conclusion is inescapable that Lee's objective was "the principle involved"—that he fought to preserve not only for Virginia, but every state in the union—"the American ideals of local self-government and a Federal Union built upon tSate soveyngiert in other words, a government, of the people, by the people, and for the people; the "eternal verity" on which all human liberty rests, and if this is not "putting first things first", then I fail to understand the English language.

WITH PLEASURE WE PUBLISH.

Mr. Editor:

A propos of the little criticism about St. Stephen's College that has appeared in your paper, would you care to publish the following student poem as a comment? It will perhaps show that St. Stephen's produces something besides "radicalism".

Collect.

O God, grant that as the stars shine
In the darkness and chaos of the night, reflections
Of the sun, so may we shine in the darkness and Chaos of this wicked world, reflections of Thy Glory. Through Jesus Christ Our Lord.
Amen.

If you think that this signifies nothing, will you please tell me so. I mean it as an answer to the question, "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?"

Church Intelligence

Dr. Elliott and St. Luke's, Tokyo.

Dr. Mabel E. Elliott, head of the Children's Department of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, who is now in the United States, was the first woman to be granted a physician's license in Japan. She is the only American doctor on the St. Luke's staff besides Dr. Teusler. The methods being instituted by Dr. Elliott in the care of children, like the work in all departments of St. Luke's, are revolutionary for Japan. Accustomed to live, eat and sleep by their children's very bedsides in Japanese hospitals, the mothers at first found even the requirement that they leave their children entirely in the hospital's care a startling innovation. However, the rapid improvement in their children's condition soon convinced them of the wisdom of the modern methods.

Diseases of children in Japan are similar to those of children in America, according to Dr. Elliott, except for diphtheria, which is more serious there because of the lack of propaganda in the interest of prevention, and trachoma, a disease of the eyes which afflicts entire families.

Gratifying results are being obtained in the Hospital's Public Health work affecting children, according to Dr. Elliott. She cooperates with Dr. Kameyo Sadekata, a remarkable Japanese woman physician educated at Ann Arbor, in the maintenance of maternity clinics, pre-school and school clinics, the first ever established in the Empire. Ten thousand children of Kyobashi Ward are examined regularly at the St. Luke's school clinic and 602 babies were enrolled in the "well baby" clinic last year. The significance of this work is indicated by the figure on the mortality rate for infants coming under the Hospital's jurisdiction, which is 2.5 per cent as compared with the mortality rate for infants in Tokyo as a whole, which is 20 per cent of the lowest rate found anywhere in Japan, which is 14.5 per cent.

"Japan is watching the public health demonstration which the authorities of the city of Tokyo asked us to conduct, with the greatest interest," Dr. Elliott reports. "The most encouraging factor in relation to our work is not merely the immediate results, though they are so convincing that the Japanese urge an expansion of our service. The encouraging factor is that the Japanese people, once they are convinced of the feasibility of modern hospital methods, will spare no pains in having them adopted throughout the Empire."

Indian Minister Dies While Driving Car.

The Church in South Dakota lost its foremost Indian minister in active service in the sudden death of the Rev. William Holmes, of Wakpala, who passed away on April 10. Mr. Holmes was Superintending Presbyter of the Standing Rock Mission. He was driving his car to White Horse where he had an appointment to meet Archdeacon Ashley, when he was suddenly stricken with heart disease and died immediately. Another Indian priest who was with him noticed his condition and managed to stop the car. The burial was at his old home in Santee, Neb. Archdeacon Ashley had charge of the services.

The Rev. Mr. Holmes was educated at the old St. Paul's School at Greenwood, and studied for orders under Bishop Hare. He was sixty-seven years of age, and had given many years to the service of the Church, first as helper and catechist and afterwards as deacon and priest.

He served for several years as Superintending Presbyter of the Santee Mission. Five years ago, when failing health forced the Rev. Philip Deloeia, Superintending Presbyter of the Standing Rock Mission, to give up his work, Mr. Holmes was appointed to succeed him. He was probably the best read man among our Indian clergy and assisted Archdeacon Ashley in translating into the Dakota language the Niobrara series of Church School lessons prepared for the Indian field in South Dakota by the Rev. Dr. Lester Bradner. He was also a member of the Board of Examining Chaplains.

Mr. Holmes' going makes the need for young white clergy in the Indian field more acute than ever. The old veterans in the Niobrara Deanery are passing, and unless some young white clergy volunteer for service in that field, the Church is going to be faced with a very grave problem as to how to carry on this the most outstanding feature of the Church's domestic missionary work.

Dr. Franklin to Address Huron Synod.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, vice-president and treasurer of the National Council, is to make an address at the annual Synod of the Diocese of Huron, meeting in London, Ontario, May 15. Mr. F. W. Sutherland, of St. Thomas, Ontario, chairman of the Laymen's Association of the Diocese of Huron, in his first inquiry about the matter wrote:

"The Anglican laymen of Huron Diocese are endeavoring to develop something of the loyalty among the men of the Church that we in Canada hear from time to time is being developed among your men throughout the various dioceses of the United States; and it has occurred to me that at our Annual Synod, the second evening of which is to be given over to the laymen's program, we would gain inspiration and enthusiasm from an address from one of your outstanding laymen. The international note of good will that such a speaker would naturally sound, would obviously be an added pleasure to our Churchmen."

The Rev. C. E. Snowden, of the Field Department, who replied to the letter, was born in Canada, as of course a good number of our clergy were, including Bishop Brent, Bishop Rowe and Bishop Anderson.

Pennsylvania Diocese Elects Dean Drury

Dean Samuel Smith Drury, Headmaster of St. Paul's School of Boys, Concord, N. H., was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Pennsylvania on the fifth ballot at the convention held for that purpose Monday, May 6, in Holy Trinity Church, Rittenhouse Square, Philadelphia.

Tense interest in the election prevailed throughout the diocese, which far overshadowed interest in the annual diocesan convention on the two following days, May 7-8.

Part of this tension can be explained by the four declinations that have followed previous elections. The major portion of the feeling, however, is attributed to the fact that the two leading candidates, Dean Drury and Rev. John M. Groton, of New Bedford, Mass., seemed to have an equal chance of election.

Dean Drury is said to have had the support of the Catholic party within the diocese, the conservative members of the non-Catholic group and of the alumni of St. Paul's School within the diocese. He has been at the school ten years and is said to have completed his work there.

Dr. Drury has the special distinction of being the only man who ever declined a call to Trinity Church, probably the richest parish in the world, and the church the most famous in this country. It is 252 years old and stands on Broadway, New York City, at the head of Wall Street. Dr. Drury was called by t hevestry in 1921 to succeed the Rev. Dr. W. T. Manning, elected bishop of the diocese of New oYrk.

Dr. Drury declined because of his love for his chosen work of teaching boys. He is a native of Rhode Island, 51 years old, graduate and D. D. of Harvard and was ordained in 1905. He was associated with Bishop Brent while the latter was in the Philippines and later rector of churches in Boston and Providence.

The Diocese of Pennsylvania is to be congratulated upon the splendid spirit which has prevailed over its many disappointments, and now upon its choice of so consecrated a leader as Dean Drury.

W. A. Officers' Conference.

Alabama and Oregon were among the seventeen dioceses from which about fifty women came to the Woman's Auxiliary officers' conference held at Taylor Hall, Racine, Wis., April 26 to 30. The greater number came from Wisconsin, Illinois and parts adjacent, but Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Colorado and South Dakota were also represented.

The aim of the conference was to consider the great study theme of next year, the world mission of Christianity, and the relation which social service and religious education bear toward it; and to consider how best to relate the work of the Auxiliary to that great theme.

After presentation of the world mission of Christianity, by the Rev. D. A. McGregor, the Rev. Harold Holt and the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., outlined its social and educational aspects. Dr. Adelaide Case led a discussion on modern educational methods, and Dr. Franklin had a session on the subject of gifts. The national officers of the Auxiliary led discussions about the work in the parishes and dioceses, and Miss Elizabeth Matthews had the closing session on enlisting others.

Mrs. Paul Barbour, of South Dakota; Dr. Case and Miss Matthews led the devotional hours of the conference in the evening. The Racine clergy had the early services in the school chapel.

Increasing Demand For Bibles.

Apparently the Association for the Advancement of Atheism and the Russian Soviets and their American sympathizers and aids, inside and outside theological seminaries, institutions of "higher learning" and yellow newspaper offices, have failed to diminish the demand for the Holy Bible. The American Bible Society reports 1,000,000 more Bible distributed last year than in any preceding year of history. The total output, from the American Society alone, was over 11,000,000, of which 4,500,000 went to China. Dr. W. L. Lingle, of Richmond, reports 75,000 copies of the Scriptures made for reading by the blind distributed in the year. The Society has been supplying the blind ninety-five years. There is increasing demand from the Latin-American countries.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop

E. W. Moore's Bible Class.

The E. W. Moore's Bible Class, St John's Parish, Church Hill, Richmond is the second largest Bible class in the city, surpassed only by St. Andrew's. A member of the class has written for us the following brief history:

As well as I remember the Bible class was started by the late Mr. J. S. Moore, in one of the rooms in the frame Sunday-school building. Among the first members of the class were Messrs. Geo. R. Doane, L. C. Figg, John P. Schermerhorn, Jr., D. Seva Richardson, John B. Welsh and Joseph B. Welsh.

Mr. Moore became ill and resigned. About that time a Bible class that met in the church, with Mr. Gordon as the teacher, was started and the members from Mr. Moore's class joined that class, but Mr. Gordon died and the class chose Mr. Macon for the teacher. Unfortunately, Mr. Macon moved from the Hill. Then interest in the class lagged until the members dwindled down to about eight, Mesrs. Doane, Gilliam, Gretter, Leibig, Martin, Phillips, and Welsh, who held the class together until the Men's Association was organized. In the meantime, the teacher, Mr. Phillips, died, and Mr. E. W. Moore taught the class temporarily until we could get a teacher.

About that time the members of the Men's Association thought it would be a good idea to start a Bible Class; that is, a large Bible Class and our class to merge with them. This we did.

After a great deal of persuasion, Mr. E. W. Moore, son of J. S. Moore, consented to become the teacher and most all of us that belong to the Men's Association joined the Bible class.

After the long and faithful efforts of a few earnest men, with Mr. Ernest W. Moore as teacher, the Men's Bible Class of St. John's Church began to grow and take on new life and interest. Mr. Moore was singularly gifted and fitted for this work, and became a most eloquent speaker and forcible and capable teacher, endearing himself to all who listened to his instruction.

One Sunday morning he was reading to the class the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. He came to the beautiful words, "In My Father's House are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you," when he was taken sick and in a few hours later went to be with the Lord in those mansions about which he had been reading so shortly before.

It would seem that his sweet spirit of affection had been imparted to the class, for they manifest a splendid spirit of brotherly love.

Mr. W. A. Powell is the present faithful and efficient teacher. It is especially gratifying that a teacher should have been found for the class out of our own ranks. He has excellent helpers in the officers of the class and in the men themselves. The class has grown marvellously and does a wonderful and good work, especially among the less fortunate in the parish, and in the community of which they are and Old St. John's Church is a part of.

At the present time they are editing and financing a parish paper called "The Informant", the printer of this paper, and members of the editorial staff being all members and associates of this wonderful class of men.

Now, with one hundred members on the roll and a fine attendance, they are growing more and more, and reaching after better things.

Centennial Celebration and Diocesan Council.

All plans are practically completed of the joint program of the Centennial Celebration of the Diocesan Missionary Society and the Diocesan Council, meeting in Richmond, May 14-15 and 15-16, respectively. The hours of the various services were published in last week's issue of the Southern Churchman.

The services will be held in St. John's Church, St. Paul's Church and the Monumental Church. It was hoped that Bishop Stires would be able to give the address the night of May 15, but he has written that he is not well enough to make the trip.

Rev. Roy Mason will give a stereopticon lecture on the Mountain Missions in St. Paul's Parish House May 15, 5 P. M.

Bishop Tucker Well Again.

It is reported that Bishop H. St. George Tucker, who has been recovering from an operation for appendicitis has returned from Virginia Beach to Alexandria, much improved in health, and is now in good shape for the meetings of the Diocesan Council on May 15.

Rappahannock Valley Convocation.

The Rappahannock Valley Convocation met at Christ Church, Middlesex, May 1-2.

The Rev. Laurance Brent, of Fredericksburg, preached at the opening service.

A business session occupied the afternoon hours, the main point of discussion being the proposed change in convocational lines to be recommended to the council.

The Rev. W. D. Smith, of Richmond, preached at the evening service.

The following morning the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon gave an address on "Missionary Work Within the Convocation". The Rev. E. C. Pedrick spoke on the Y. P. S. L.; Miss Lucy Gibson on the G. F. S.; the Rev. W. D. Smith on "Evangelism".

After an elaborate luncheon served by the ladies of the church, the Laymen's Association meeting was held. The association passed a resolution of appreciation for the late Mr. Robert Beverley. Mr. R. Carter Beverley made an address.

Annual Convention of Woman's Auxiliary.

With a program that levied upon the best talent in the Church and with a record of accomplishment in the year 1928 that was unique, the annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of North Carolina was held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, April 9-11.

The women reported that they had raised over $26,000 during 1928, in spite of the fact that theirs is not a money-raising organization. Inspirational speakers at the convention included Bishops Darst and Penick, the Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, editor of the Spirit of Missions; Captain B. F. Mountford, of the Church Army; Dr. Mabel Elliot, of the staff of St. Luke's International Hospital; Miss Sally Dean, of Richmond, Va.; and Miss Foonyee C. Woo, principal of St. Paul's Girls' School, Hongkong. Mrs. Frank S. Spruill presided over the meetings. Mrs. A. S. Lawrence, of Chapel Hill, was elected Diocesan U. T. O. Custodian; and Mrs. H. S. Hartzell, of Rockingham, was made diocesan box work secretary.

Layman Extraordinary.

At a largely attended service on Easter night, the congregation of St. Mary's, Speed, honored Mr. Sam S. Nash, layman extraordinary of the Diocese of North Carolina, and of Calvary Parish, Tarboro, in particular. This service commemorated the forty-fifth year of Mr. Nash's service at this church. He organized it forty-five years ago, and has served it as Sunday-school superintendent and lay reader ever since. Mr. Nash is the dean of a staff of laymen of Calvary Church that serves a number of county missions.

The Lenten Offering of the Church Schools.

The annual presentation service of the Church Schools' Lenten offering was held in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., the Rev. Robert P. Kreitler, rector, April 19-20. Miss Mable Lee Cooper and the Bishop addressed a large congregation Friday.

On Saturday morning an address was made on Rural Missions by the Ven. Almon A. Jaynes, of Central New York. Offerings in the five fields of service were made by members of the many schools present from all parts of the diocese amounting to over $11,500 with a number of schools to be heard from.

In the afternoon a beautiful pageant, The Crucifixion, was reverently given in the church by St. Luke's Young People. This meeting for the presentation service was one of the best and most largely attended in our history.

Convocation of Reading.

It met in St. Mary's Church, Reading, on April 15-16. The Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, of Calvary Church, New York, with four witnesses, explained his work, and his co-workers gave testimony as to the old power of the Gospel to redeem souls from sin and utter worldliness. They made a favorable impression, but really it is not something new—it is just actually giving God a chance in one's life—most of us simply don't.

The Rev. Dr. Batton, of the General Theological Seminary, spoke learnedly on the Earlier Prophets. After that he presented the needs and objective of the Seminary to the G. T. S. men of the convocation. A number of subscriptions were received and a committee was appointed to get all the G. T. S. men to get together at our next annual convention which meets in St. Peter's Church, Hazleton, May 14-15, to take further steps in securing at least $25,000 from the diocese as our share in the new endowment and equipment fund.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Y. P. S. L. Annual Convention.

A growing sense of responsibility and the development of leadership were manifested in the sixth annual convention of the Young People's Service League of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, which was held in Trinity Church, Columbia, April 12-14.

The program included the presentation of a model program on Personal Evangelism by the League of St. Timothy's, Columbia; a preparation service led by the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, rector of Christ Church, Greenville; Corporate Communion at 7:30 in the morning.

Reports from the parochial Leagues of the diocese showed much help rendered the churches through contributions and through service to choirs, Church schools, and many other phases of the Church's work; $88.72 was reported sent to Bishop Colmore for an altar in the chapel at Barahona, Porto Rico, to be constructed in the place of one destroyed by the storm last year.

Officers of the Diocesan League elected for the coming year are: President, Mr. Arthur Dehon; Secretary, Mr. Joe Faulk; Treasurer, Miss Josephine Pendleton; Editor of the Y. P. S. L. page in the Piedmont Churchman, Miss Lilla Miller; additional members of the Executive Committee, Miss Lettie Green and Mr. Lucas Mitchell. The Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, of Columbia, continues as Executive Secretary.

After supper and a marshmallow roast around the camp fire, there were helpful talks on Life Work by Mr. F. F. Whilden, the Rev. S. Thorne Sparkman, and the Rev. L. N. Taylor.

On Sunday morning at the Church of the Good Shepherd four of the League boys conducted the service. The Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., preached to the large gathering of young people and installed the new officers.

The business of the Y. P. S. L. was suspended for a while on Saturday during the presentation service of the Lenten offering of the Church Schools of the diocese, which was held in Trinity Church, under the direction of the Rev. Capers Satterlee, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education. Christ Church School, Greenville, presented the largest offering of $1,278.88 St. Mark's, Chester, had the largest per capita offering of $8.70. These two schools were awarded scholarships to the summer camps at Kanuga Lake, Hendersonville, N. C.

The total offering was $5,120.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. D. Wing, D. D., Coadjutor.

Y. P. S. L.

The Young People's Service League is working actively throughout South Florida, and with a rapidly increasing membership, is also maintaining increasing interest in Church work along various lines which promises a helpful forward movement for this diocese.

League members are to hold an interdiocesan meeting with members from the Diocese of Florida in Grace Church, Ocala, on April 27-28, and anticipate an enthusiastic gathering, both beneficial and enjoyable.

Colored Congregations Hold Evangelistic Services.

Keen interest in evangelistic services were shown throughout Lent among the colored congregations in South Florida, with large congregations attending in each mission. Under a careful schedule arranged by the Rev. John R. Lewis, of West Palm Beach (who had been appointed chairman of the Committee on Evangelism by the Colored Convocation of this diocese), the colored clergy exchanged pulpits, holding preaching and teaching missions of most helpful nature in the different fields. The Rev. G. M. Blacket, of St. Agnes, Miami, officiated for a week in St. Peter's, Key West; the Rev. H. Randolph Moore, of St. Peter's, Key West, gave this mission in St. James, Tampa, and also visited St. John's, Orlando; the Rev. John E. Culmer, of St. James, Tampa, visited St. Patrick's, West Palm Beach, St. Matthew's, Delray, and St. Mary's, Deerfield; the Rev. John R. Lewis, of St. Patrick's, West Palm Beach, held the mission in St. Agnes, Miami. Hearty congregational singing and use of the question box marked these missions, and the zealous band of colored priests, who are working faithfully in their own fields, each gave of their best effort to make each mission fruitful for the other flocks to whom they ministered.

St. Peter's.

Significant is the brief item from St. Peter's Church, St. Petersburg, Fla. (the Rev. Evan A. Edwards, rector): "This was a record Easter, the largest attendance, largest number of communions and largest offering in the history of this parish. But greater than any of these is the spirit of the congregation—a spirit of devotion and desire to live the risen life. St. Peter's looks to the future with humble gratitude and joyous hope."

COLLECT FOR SUNDAY AFTER ASCENSION DAY.

O God the King of Glory, Who hast exalted Thine only Son, Jesus Christ with great triumph unto Thy kingdom in heaven; We beseech Thee, leave us not comfortless, but send to us Thine Holy Ghost to comfort us: and exalt us unto the same place whither our Saviour Christ is gone before, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

MOTHER'S VOICE.

Putnam W. Kyle.

I go into the tranquil house
And call my Mother by her name
And lo! her silvery voice answers me
And every woe is lulled to rest,
All cares depart and I, in peacefulness
Towards all the world, run up the stairs
To be fast-held in her dear arms again.

One Sunday morn, when Spring an infant was,
I went to God's own house to pray for her,
And as I knelt in adoration there
He thought it best to still her silvery voice,
To take her fragrant spirit home at last.

I can not go into the silent house
(Its four walls hold no more her silvery voice),
But stand beneath a blossomed apple tree,
Or hold a new-born baby to my breast:
Then comes the silvery echo of her voice
That clothes my naked soul from human eyes
And fills my empty heart with Love divine.

Whitsunday.

That which God brought to pass fifty days after Jesus rose from the dead is quite as important in relation to the Kingdom of God as is the Resurrection. Pentecost, or Whitsunday as we now say, witnessed the final stage in a series of divine acts, through which the Father's redemptive will began realization. Just as the covenant by faith in Christ is a new covenant as compared with the Old Testament and the law, so the new kingdom—the Kingdom of God on earth—began its establishment through gifts shed forth on Pentecost.

To regenerate sinful men and to nourish them in a new life, God the Holy Spirit gives power. It is of a distinct kind. It is not material. If by natural forces we refer to the forces that are found in the world visible to the eye, then the powers given by the Holy Spirit are not natural. But they must not be classed as supernatural if by that term we mean some rare revelation of God. They are spiritual powers, and they are constantly available to call men to believe in Christ, and to gather, sanctify and enlighten them, and preserve them in the true faith.

Because this power comes from no merit or worthiness on our part, we call it grace, divine grace. Such a title is correct; grace is the free gift of God, to receive which no man is deservant. Indeed it is of so distinctly a divine character that we do not "naturally" want it. But it comes in response to a divine purpose. God desires men to be transformed from this world's conditions into citizenship in His Kingdom. To enable them to be so changed, He gives freely and constantly of divine grace. To disregard the provision thus made, whereby the spiritual life may be begun and continued in fellowship with God, is to block the divine purpose and destroy the means of salvation.

The celebration of Pentecost is less the petition of the Church that God will once more manifest grace in an extraordinary manner than its fervent prayer that we may use the power He constantly bestows upon us.—Selected.

Mothers' Day.

H. H. Smith.

Since Jesus Christ came into the world as a babe, motherhood has been exalted to a place of highest honor. Who will question the fact that the incarnation has forever ennobled and sanctified motherhood? The Jewish mother regarded herself as highly honored of God, and the Jewish mother was right, for every mother is really a co-worker with God. Would that every mother realized the full import of her sacred privilege and weighty responsibility. Wherever mothers have responded to their high calling in a worthy manner, they have blessed the world. Thomas A. Edison bore this testimony to the influence of his mother: "My mother was the making of me. She was so true, so sure of me, and I felt I had some one to live for, some one I must not disappoint." D. L. Moody said: "All that I have ever accomplished in my life I owe to my mother." Regarding motherhood from the standpoint of a statesman, Theodore Roosevelt said: "The mother is the one supreme asset of the national life; she is more important by far than the successful statesman, or business man, or scientist."

The true mother finds her greatest joy in her children. The mother who is more concerned about dress, or pleasure, or society than she is about the welfare of her children, is not worthy of being a mother. The true mother is ever alert to give her children the best training possible. A mother once invited some children to her home, that they might have the right kind of associates, and they all played in the yard on the beautiful lawn. Another mother, seeing the children romping on the lawn, said: "Those children will spoil your beautiful grass. I could never allow that." The wise mother replied: "I'm raising children, not grass!" Some mothers neglect their children for bridge, or golf, or the club, or some other pleasure. Mothers need recreation for their own welfare as well as that of their children, and should have helpful recreation and diversion, but some mothers become absorbed in these things to the neglect of their children. What can be more pathetic than the case of a young man, who stood before a judge to be sentenced for some crime, and when asked if he had anything to say, replied: "Ah, Judge, if I had only had a mother!" Some children who are not motherless are virtually orphans from neglect.

The character of the mother is of the greatest importance. Remember the child's creed: "I believe in God, and in my father and mother."

"The baby has no skies,
But mother's eyes.
Nor any God above
But mother's love.
His angel sees the Father's face,
But he the mother's full of grace."

The following poem by Dr. Van Dyke should help us to enter into the spirit of Mothers' Day:

Prayer for Mother.

"Lord Jesus, Thou hast known
A mother's love and tender care;
And Thou wilt hear, while for my own
Mother, most dear, I make this birthday prayer.

Protect her life, I pray,
Who gave the gift of life to me;
And may she know, from day to day,
The deepening glow of life that comes from Thee.

As once upon her breast
Fearless and content I lay,
So let her heart, on Thee at rest,
Feel tears depart and troubles fade away.

Her every wish fulfill;
And even if Thou must refuse
In anything, let Thy wise will
A comfort bring such as kind mothers use.

Ah, hold her hand,
As once her hand held mine;
And though she may not understand
Life's winding way, lead her in peace divine.

I cannot pay my debt
For all the love that she has given;
But Thou love's Lord, wilt not forget
Her due reward—bless her in earth and heaven."

MRS. WOO.

A True Story.

A missionary and his wife were sent to a crowded district in China to establish a station. They had not been there long when they heard of Mrs. Woo. She was a widow of about sixty-five years of age, living all alone in a dirty little hut, and earning fifty cents a week by braiding silk. The people said that Mrs. Woo had a demon; and so she had—a demon of an uncontrolled temper. Only angry replies were given to those who spoke to her, and her temper, when fairly aroused, terrified the whole community. The neighbors, poor as they were, said they would gladly bear the expenses of a coffin to see her buried.

The missionary's wife frequently passed Mrs. Woo's house, and whenever she saw the widow sitting by her door, saluted her pleasantly. At first the only reply was a surly muttering or a scowl; but after a while the greeting was returned, and in time the missionary stopped to chat with Mrs. Woo about her silk braiding. It was not long before the missionary began to speak of Christ and to invite Mrs. Woo to the meetings. One Sunday she came to church. Dirty and unkempt, with a defiant scowl, she was a contrast to the women around her. But she learned the Bible text, which each week was hung up in front and taught to the entire congregation.

The next Sunday Mrs. Woo was there again, and she continued to attend regularly and to learn the text and hymns. The first change noticed in the woman was a regard for her appearance; then the hard look on her face began to soften, and the outbursts of temper to be less frequent. At the end of few months Mrs. Woo was received into the church.

One day she came to the missionary's wife and said: "I want to learn to read. I want to be able to read the texts that are put up in church every Sunday. I want to read the hymns and the Bible."

The missionary's wife offered to teach her if she would come to her house every day for one hour.. Think of it! an old women undertaking to learn those difficult Chinese characters, three or four thousand of which must be known in order to read the New Testament! It was a weary task, and one requiring infinite patience on the part of the missionary; but both teacher and pupil persevered day after day and months and months until Mrs. Woo could read the Gospel of Mark and the familiar hymns. Then the lessons ceased.

Soon after this, the missionary noticed that Mrs. Woo was no longer braiding at her door when he passed, and when an assistant told him that Mrs. Woo was not working, he called to inquire into the matter.

"Have you much work now, Mrs. Woo?" he asked.

"I'm not working any more; I'm preaching all the time."

"Preaching all the time! But how do you live?"

"It's this way. You remember the red handkerchief you gave me last Christmas?"

"Yes."

"Well, I fold my Bible and hymn book in that and start out in the morning. I go to several houses, and in each the people says, 'That is a very pretty handkerchief you have.' And I say, 'Yes; would you like to see it?' Then I open it and take out the Bible, and read and preach, and then I take out the hymn book and read hymns. Then I go on, and by the time I reach a house when it is time to have rice, and the people ask me to have some, and I eat, and then I show them my handkerchief. In the afternoon I go on preaching, and I reach another house in time to have rice; and so I live."

Rejoiced as the missionary was to learn of the work Mrs. Woo was doing, he could not approve of her manner of living.

"The people will call you a 'rice Christian'." he said, after trving in vain to show her that she could not keep on in that way. "They will say that you are making money out of your religion; that you became a Christian so that you need not work any more."

Finally they agreed upon a compromise. Mrs. Woo was to work in the morning and to go about preaching in the afternoon.

In time the missionary and his wife went home on a furlough. "There will be no interest among the women when we return," said the wife, sadly. "There are good workers for the men, but there is no one to look after the women."

The furlough ended and the missionary returned to China. It was the first Sunday, and he went to church to meet his people again. The men came in and took their seats. Then women began to come. Presently all the seats were filled and women stood in the aisles. Last of all came Mrs. Woo, leading two of her friends, and pushing her way through the crowd to a place as near the front as she could go.

The next day the missionary called on Mrs. Woo.

"How have you done it, Mrs. Woo? How did you get so many women to come to church yesterday?"

"Oh, I just went on preaching. I would go from house to house with my red handkerchief, and I would read the Gospel to the people, and then I would sing hymns to them. On Saturday I say, 'Tomorrow is worship day; you must go to church'. When they make an excuse, I say, 'I will come for you if you will go.' Then on Sunday I go to the houses for the women. Last Saturday I said: 'You must go tomorrow; the missionary will be there.' And I stopped for those who did not like to go alone, and so they went to church."

The missionary thought that Mrs. Woo's faithfulness should be rewarded. At his request she was enrolled among the regular workers, and paid from the missionary fund, that she might devote her whole time to teaching.

Instead of the woman with the demon the terror and hatred of the neighborhood, Mrs. Woo became the best colporteur in the field, distributing more literature and reaching more people than any other assistant.—Christian Observer.

Vignettes of the Seaman.

Little Stories From the Seamen's Church Institute.

The approving eyes of a hundred or more sailors rested upon a slight trim little girl in smart tailored costume who found her way into our lobby. She was a stenographer from the Middle West who had come to New York for the Labor Day week-end to visit her "kid brother". He had written her on Institute stationery a few days before and she thought to find him here.

She told her mission to the little group who gathered about her. None of them knew the kid brother, but several wished audibly that they had been born in that role. One of them had a more practical suggestion: "I'll take you up to the Social Service, Miss."

Our records showed that we had found a job for the Kid on a private yacht. A phone call to the yacht club disclosed the fact that the yacht was off on a holiday cruise—no way of locating it.

The big sister (she said she was twenty-eight) lingered to talk about the kid. How did he look when he came to get the job?

We had to admit that he had been in the hospital, and our keen little visitor soon pried loose the information that we had tided the Kid over for a few days.

"Oh, do let me repay you," she offered eagerly. But our Relief Secretary shook her head. "No, your brother is the sort who will pay us back when he can. It will be better for him if he does it himself. We help sailors to help themselves."

The big sister agreed. Wisdom had come to her in the process of bringing up the Kid. Her eyes filled as she admitted, "I did work rather hard to give him his schooling and I do want him to turn out all right."

We made her promise she would telephone us when she had arrived safely at the home of the relative with whom she was to stay in New York, and we promised to let her know if we heard from the Kid.

It looked rather hopeless, but as it happened Fate took charge of things. An intelligent night telephone operator at the Institute took down the message that the big sister had arrived safely at such and such an address. Later she got another message telling how the Kid could be reached. The two like names seemed more than a coincidence to her and she decided to do a little telephoning on her own account.

The result of it all was that the Kid was able to spend part of the holiday with his big sister; and she took a night train back to her job, happy and gratified that the Kid seems to be "turning out all right".

Once in a great while it pays to be careless. Charlie Snyder will vouch for this.

He stayed at the Institute one night and departed in the morning to see the town, leaving his wallet, containing fifty dollars and his papers, under his pillow. He had change in his pocket and didn't miss the wallet.

Late in the day a waterfront "professional" clubbed Charlie over the head and Charlie knew no more until he came to in the Broad Street Hospital the next morning. Of course he thought he had been robbed of his wallet. Well, it was all in a life-time, so he reasoned.

But he had lost his hat, too, and in his extremity he appealed to the Institute for a cap. He could hardly believe his eyes when we handed him his billfold. He gave the cleaning woman who had found it all she would accept —five dollars. Then he deposited thirty-five dollars in our bank and sallied forth with remaining ten in his pocket and in his heart a new faith in the workings of fate.

A very pale sailor appeared in our Social Service Department, escorted by a police officer and a stranger. Taylor had broken the law and the stranger had turned him over to the officer. The officer realized that it would be an easy matter "to send the boy up", but there were extenuating circumstances.

In the first place, Taylor had been sorely tempted, and in the second place he had bungled the job, showing that he was not an habitual evil-doer. The officer tried to persuade the complainant to "give the kid a chance".

In answer to the usual police department question, "Where do you live?" Taylor mentioned his only home—25 South Street.

It was the first time our Relief Secretary had ever been called upon to act as judge and she pondered the matter carefully. Finally after two days, she agreed to be responsible for Taylor if the stranger would withdraw his charge.

Taylor passed through some anxious moments pending the decision. He was so a-tremble he could scarecly express his gratitude.

"Perhaps you shouldn't thank me," said our Relief Secretary. "You know it is sometimes harmful to a boy to help him out of a scrape. It might have done you good to be sent up. The only way I can feel that I have done the right thing is to know that you have behaved yourself."

Taylor promised. Then he got a job. He has just returned from it—a long voyage with a good record. Apparently it has done him more good than being "sent up".—The Lookout.

GARDENERS.

The sun, the wind, the warm, sweet showers
Have turned roots and seeds;
The garden's full of fruits and flowers—
Who'll war upon the weeds?

The weeds that hide the struggling beans
And all the violets vex,
Let's get down on our hands and knees
And pull them up by pecks.

Then how the happy plants will thrive,
Their thanks in beauty showing!
Oh, it is good to be alive
And keep the garden growing.

Beppo.

"Sammy! Oh, Sammy!"

"Ma'am?"

"Come and bring me a bucket of water, like a smart boy."

Sammy made one more dash after his playful little dog, and came to the porch for the bucket. Tip followed close at his heels, barking and barking. Sammy grabbed the bucket and rushed at him, and Tip swept away like the wind.

"Oh, the moonbeam fell
Through a chink in the wall,
A chink in the wall,
A chink in the wall;
Oh, the moonbeam fell
Through a chink in the wall,
And hit me on the head."

Singing this song at the top of his voice, Sammy swung himself down the path toward the spring-house. He looked across the long stretch of forest below him, and beyond to the soft, pink clouds in the evening sky, and his heart was glad.

Coming to the moss-covered spring-house, he suddenly halted and stood motionless and stared. Before him, leaning against the door, was a golden-haired boy in green tights! He looked as if he had just jumped out of a circus poster. He seemed to smile at Sammy, and then Sammy saw that he looked very pale and weak. In that same moment he fainted, and Sammy caught him in his arms.

"Mother!" he yelled at the top of his voice. "Mother! Mother!"

Presently she appeared on the porch.

"Run here! Quick!" he shouted. "Run!"

She hurried swiftly to the spring-house.

"Mercy!" she exclaimed, wide-eyed. "Who is it? What's the matter?"

"He fell in my arms!" cried Beppo breathlessly.

"Here," she said, catching hold of him, "lay him on the ground."

Gently they let him down. Then she got some water and bathed his face. In a few moments he opened his eyes.

"Oh!" he murmured weakly.

"Poor poor," said Mrs. Krinkle. "Do you feel very bad?"

"I—I don't know," stammered the boy.

Mrs. Krinkle dried his face with the corner of her apron.

"Now," she said, "let us help you up and we'll take you to the house."

So presently they were climbing the hill together, the needy little stranger amply supported by the arms of his new-found friends. When they reached the cottage they took him to Sammy's room, and in a little while he was fast asleep beneath the white covers of Sammy's bed.

And he slept and slept and slept. Sammy peeped in from the door at least a dozen times during the afternoon. And so did Jack and Pete and Sue and Marianna, and not a few times also Mrs. Krinkle herself.

It was after supper before he awoke, and then it was because of Sammy, who came tipping in through the semi-darkness and fell over a straight backed chair.

"Uh!" he grunted, scrambling to his feet.

"What's the matter?" came a voice from the bed.

"Oh!" exclaimed Sammy in awkward confusion. "Is that you? Are you awake?"

"Yes," came the answer.

Sammy ran to tell the others, whereupon in came the whole family, Mr. Krinkle leading with a lighted lamp, and the dog and cat bringing up the rear.

"Hello, my boy!" greeted Mr. Krinkle cheerily. "Feelin' better?"

"Yes," the boy answered.

"That's fine," continued Mr. Krinkle. "What's your name?"

"Beppo."

"Beppo," repeated Mr. Krinkle. "That's a new name to us folks around here. Beppo. Do you hear that, boys? Beppo. Well, well. Are you hungry, Beppo?"

"Hungry as a thousand bears," Beppo replied.

"Fine!" exclaimed Mr. Krinkle. "Do you hear that, mother? Run and bring some supper, and plenty of it. Get enough for a thousand bears."

Beppo's eyes twinkled as he looked into the smiling faces before him. Mr. Krinkle set the lamp on the chimney piece and crossed to the chair by the bed.

"Well, Beppo, my boy," he said, "seems like you jes' sorter dropped from the sky or somethin', don't it? Leastways it does to hear 'em tell it. Where'd you come from, anyhow?"

"The circus," Beppo answered.

"The circus!" repeated Mr. Krinkle. "You come from the circus?"

Beppo nodded. Mr. Krinkle and the others stared.

"The real, sure-enough circus?"

"Sure," said Beppo.

"Run off, you mean?" questioned Mr. Krinkle.

Beppo nodded again. Mr. Krinkle rubbed his chin thoughtfully.

"What for, sonny?"

"They beat me."

"Beat you? They beat you? What for?"

"Cause they learned me a new trick, and I missed it."

"And when you missed it they beat you?"

Beppo nodded. "Every time," he answered.

Mr. Krinkle was frowning now.

"What kind of a trick was it, sonny?"

"A trapese stunt—swingin' from one to tother with a flip between."

"Humph!" grunted Mr. Krinkle. "And what other tricks did you do?"

"Aw, different kinds, acrobat stunts, mostly trapese tricks."

Mr. Krinkle reflected a moment.

"Where'd you leave 'em, sonny?" he asked.

"Dumplin," replied Beppo.

"Dublin, you mean," Mr. Krinkle corrected.

"Yes," nodded Beppo.

Mr. Krinkle paused, still frowning.

"When was that?"

"Two days ago."

"Thursday?"

"I don't know."

"And where have you been since then?"

"On the mountain."

"On the mountain? By yourself?"

Beppo nodded. There was a moment's silence.

"Where'd you sleep?"

"On the ground, under a pile of leaves."

There was another brief silence as they all stared in wonder at the little stranger.

"What did you have to eat?" continued Mr. Krinkle.

"Nothin'."

"You ain't eat nothin' for two days?"

Beppo shook his head.

"Jumpin' crickets!" exclaimed Mr. Krinkle. "Sammy, run—oh, nere they come now."

As he spoke the door swung open and in came Mrs. Krinkle and Marianna, carrying two trays full of steaming hot supper. Mr. Krinkle got up.

"Come on, boys,' he said, "everybody, but Mother. Come on and let him eat."

They filed slowly out and shut the door.

"Boys," said Mr. Krinkle, "I guess he needs a home. How'd you like to keep him here?"

"Fine!" they answered in a chorus.

"To live, you mean?" asked Sammy.

"Yes, if Mother's willin'."

"Whoopee!" shouted Sammy. "And we'll learn all his tricks!"

"And make a trapese," added Jack.

"And have a big circus," added Pete.

"Yes, Man!" yelled Sammy.—J. C. J.

Quee-Quee, the Little Playfellow.

Now, that Big Brothers had started in school, little Richard was very, very lonesome. True, he could haul the big wagon around the house all day long without Big Brothers to tell him he had had it long enough, that they wanted it now, and he had better go and play with his kiddie kar; but somehow now that he could have the wagon he didn't seem to want it (That's the way it is with many things, you know. We want them and want them and want them, until we get them, and we find out that we don't want them after all.)

What Richard wanted was some one to play with. Of course, there was Betsy. the dog, but she was too fat and lazy to be much fun. If he tried to haul her in the wagon she jumped out before he had gone five feet. And there was Blackie, the kitten, but Blackie was a scared, wild little kitten that lived in the barn and only came to the house to be fed; she would never so much as let Richard stroke her. And then there was Billy Clyde, the goat, but Billy Clyde had grown so that he was too big and rough to play nicely with a little three-year-old. Once or twice Billy Clyde had butted Richard over onto the hard ground, and Richard began to feel that he didn't like the little billy goat any more.

And then one morning a little playmate arrived for Richard. It was the funniest little playmate you ever saw. I know you could never guess what it was, so I'll have to tell you "right off quick". It was a fat little black-and-yellow baby duck. The old hen that had been sitting on duck eggs left her nest and only one little duck hatched out. Then hen refused to own it, so mother had to take it into the house and keep it warm behind the stove.

"Quee-quee!" called the little duckie. It, too, was lonesome.

Richard took the little duck up in his warm, fat hands and the little orphan cuddled down so contentedly that Richard carried it around and around the room. When he put "Quee-Quee'," as he and mother named the little creature, back in its box, Quee-Quee refused to stay. He hopped right over the edge onto the floor and went running as fast as he could go toward Richard. Richard put him back and threw a cloth over the box, but a moment later Quee-Quee found a knot hole just big enough for him to squeeze through. He dropped to the floor and made a bee line for Richard's feet.

Thereafter Quee-Quee went wherever Richard did. Richard would walk around the house and Quee-Quee would tag along behind. Whenever Quee-Quee got tired Richard would put him in the wagon and haul him around. Quee-Quee never seemed to mind the ride but would stop crying because he was tired, settle down in one corner and enjoy the sensation of being carried around the house instead of walking or running.

One day Richard went down in the cornfield to hunt for Billy Clyde, who was eating weeds. Mother chanced to look out of the window just as he had found Billy Clyde and started for home. What she saw made her laugh. She began to repeat to herself the old nursery rhyme, "The cat began to catch the rat, the rat began to gnaw the rope, the rope began to hang the butcher," etc., for there heading procession came Richard and Quee-Quee, almost invisible in the grass, followed close at his heels; next came Blackie, followed by Betsy, who in turn was followed by Billy Clyde.

Richard is no longer a lonesome little boy. Quee-Quee cries for him whenever he is out of sight. Quee-Quee neither bites nor scratches nor butts him over; he is just a harmles little bunch of down that is growing like a weed.

Don't you think Quee-Quee would make a lovely little playfellow? Richard is sure he couldn't have a nicer one. —Baptist Standard.

The Unthoughtful Boy.

Did you ever hear of the boy who never spoke to his Father? No? Well, let me tell you about him.

The Father provided everything for his boy, a house to live in, clothes to wear, food to eat, toys to play with, everything that heart could wish, but he never once said, "Thank you, Father".

The Father was wonderfully kind and loving, strong and good, gentle toward the weak, thoughtful for all, and again and again had shown his tenderness and love to this boy, but never did he say, "Father, I love you".

The boy was often disobedient and rebellious and brought shame and reproach on his Father, but never did he say, "Father, forgive me".

The Father was wise, and always ready to help, to teach, to guide; but never did the boy say, "Father, show me the way!"

And the boy had brothers, some of whom did not seem to have as many of the good things of life as he had; but this boy never seemed to care; at any rate, he never asked his Father to help his brothers.

There never was such a boy? Oh, yes, there are many of them, I fear! Every boy who does not pray is the boy who never spoke to his Father.

"When ye pray, say 'Our Father—' "
—Jack-in-the-Pulpit.

The City Mouse.

Things go by twos at the corner of Cherry and Maple Streets, in the wee country village of Matthews. There are two little yellow and white cottages, set in two little green flowery yards; and in each house there are two children about the same ages: "Six going on seven," and "three going on four." The only difference is that in the lower house the children are boys, John and Rob; and in the next house they are girls, Beth and Susie.

These two twos have lovely plays together, sometimes in one yard, sometimes in the other, and they do not fuss with each other—at least, not much.

But a litle cloud came between the two twos last week. John and Rob came out from breakfast almost bursting with the news that a city cousin was coming to see them—coming that very day. Her name was Edith Fairly, and eight years old.

"Can we play with her?" asked Beth.

"No," said John, positively, "she won't want to play with country children, 'cause she lives in a big house, in a big city, and rides in a big auto'bile."

"Won't she play with you and Rob?" Beth asked, awed by John's description of his cousin.

"Course, 'cause we're her cousins," John answered proudly.

The little girls' mother found Beth and Susie moping alone, and asked what was the matter. They told her about the coming of the city cousin. To cheer them up, Mother Evans told Beth and Susie the story of the city mouse who thought the country was horrid, and the country mouse who couldn't stand the city. "But maybe," she said, smiling, "this little city mouse will be different."

Mother Evans' "maybe" came true. The next morning three children (instead of two) burst forth from the corner house, and the first thing the little stranger did was to spy two little girls in pink gingham on the other side of the fence. "Oh, won't you come and play with us?"

From that minute the nice times began. The city mouse knew more ways of playing than anybody you ever saw; she thought "Queen Anne's lace" was a pretty flower, and white clover smelled

Man bets on himself

A good bet for others

MANY a man has failed to land the job he went after, just because he looked seedy. The Boss looked him over and probably figured that a man who'd let himself slump would let his job slide, too.

"That experience brought me up short," the wise ones declare afterwards. "That very day I started on a whole new scheme of living. Say, you'd never have known me for the same man six months later. I'm betting on myself now, all right. So is the outfit I'm working for.

"There are thousands of people in this condition. Half-hearted. Down on their luck. And don't quite know why. Yet, the answer is so simple. A slowed-up, sluggish system—an excess of poisons in the body.

"Regular treatments with Nujol start things functioning again as they should. Nujol not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them), but aids in their removal."

Start now to take Nujol regularly. Keep it up for the next three months. At the end of that time we'd be willing to bet your stock has gone way up. That you're worth more to the people you work for—and to yourself.

Nujol can't possibly upset you. For it contains absolutely no medicine or drugs. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York. Sold in sealed packages only. Get a bottle today.

sweeter than roses, and she was just crazy about the thrush and the robin that were hunting bugs in the grass.

"My daddy was a country boy," Edith said, "and he takes me out to the fields on the 'lectric whenever he gets a holiday. He says roses and tulips that people plant in gardens are only God's stepchildren, but wild flowers are God's children He loves best."

The two twos' little hearts glowed with pleasure at this praise of their country home. "Mother said you would be different from the city mouse in the story," said Beth; and as Edith had never heard the story (nor John nor Rob), Beth had to tell it.

"Oh, I'm a very different city mouse!" laughed Edith, rolling over on the green grass. "Do you know," she said, sitting up, with a sober look on her face, "the only thing that keeps me from having the bestest time out here with you is 'membering 'bout there being such lots of little girls and boys who can't come to the country. I wonder"—she went on, with a sigh—"I wonder if grown-ups aren't making a mistake somehow, 'cause it does seem as if God meant children to live in the country. What else did He make the daisies and buttercups for?"

The two twos shook their little heads. They couldn't answer that question.—Child's Gem.

Gladstone was once asked why he went to Church: His asnwer was: "Because I love England."

Quicker Death to Roaches

It is easier and quicker to kill roaches with Flit because Flit has a greater amount of insect-killing ingredients, although harmless to humans. Spray cracks and corners. The more powerful Flit quickly drives roaches into the open. Spray them direct. They run and hide but die quickly.

Ormond Beach Mission.

The Venerable James G. Class, Archdeacon of South Florida, has accepted a unanimous call to take charge of the mission at Ormond Beach, Fla. For some months past, Archdeacon Glass has given Sunday services at this mission, in addition to his large work for this diocese as secretary and actuary, his zealous labors deeply appreciated by all in the mission congregation, and they rejoice that he has consented to take regular charge. During Lent, Bishop Reese, of Ohio, conducted classes in Personal Religion for this mission on Thursdays, these classes proving most helpful. Bishop Vincent, of Ohio, also spent part of the late winter at Ormond Beach, where other noted visitors were the Very Rev. R. L. McCready, D. D., Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Ky.; the Rev. S. D. McConnell, D. D., and the Rev. Frank E. Bissell, of Rochester, N. Y.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Monthly Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington was held on Tuesday, May 7, at St. John's Church, Bethesda, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at ten A. M. Other features of this all-day meeting were box luncheons at one o'clock, business session and election of officers, and address by the Rev. Dr. Sherman.

Potomac Assembly.

The Executive Board of the Potomac Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held its first meeting on Wednesday, May 8, at Diocesan House. Mr. J. Harris Franklin, President of the Assembly, presided. Potomac Assembly was organized in the past February, when the present officers were elected. The immediate work under consideration now of the Executive Board is the extension of the Junior and Senior Brotherhood in the Diocees of Washington and neighboring counties of Washington.

The service of dedication of the monument in memory of the late Bishop Harding, which took place in the afternoon, April 30, was impressive and beautiful. The small Chapel of the Resurrection was filled with friends of Bishop Harding and of the Cathedral. The choir of men and boys under the direction of Edgar Priest, sang the processional hymn, "Jerusalem the Golden', unaccompanied, as they proceeded from Bethlehem Chapel to the Chapel of the Resurrection. Evensong was sung by Canon DeVries and Dr. Dudley and this was followed by the service of dedication, conducted by Bishop Freeman.

An anthem, "What Are These", by Sir John Stainer, was sung in place of a prayer hymn.

The unveiling was participated in by a young grandchild of the late Bishop Harding. The white marble monument in memory of Bishop Harding and his wife is very beautifully carved by the same English sculptor who made the Satterlee monument. It has at the Bishop's feet the figure of the little dog who was Bishop Harding's pet and often laid at his feet in this way.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Woodcock, of Kentucky, who had been a classmate of Bishop Harding, when they were theological students together. In the procession, which left in the same way they had entered, was the choir, about twenty diocesan clergy, the standing committee, the Cathedral chapter and the Bishops.

Church at Vienna Restored.

On the occasion of the completion of the restoration of the church building at Vienna, which was directed by the Ven. James B. Lawrence, D. D., rector of Calvary Church, Americus, Ga., an all-day meeting was held recently, which was attended by many church members from Americus and friends from other communions in Americus, Cordele, Hawkinsville, and other surrounding towns. Three services were conducted during the day by Archdeacon Lawrence assisted by other ministers, and at noon an old-fashioned basket dinner was served on the church grounds.

Daughters of the King Convention.

The thirty-sixth annual convention of the Daughters of the King in Maryland was held Saturday, April 27, at the Church of the Advent, Baltimore. Bishop Murray was the Celebrant of the Holy Communion at eleven o'clock, assisted by Bishop Helfenstein and the Rev. Percy C. Adams. Bishop Murray preached on the Motto of the Order:

"I am but one, but I am one,
I cannot do everything, but I can do something.
What I can do, I ought to do.
What I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will do.
Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

After luncheon, the convention was greeted by the rector of the Church of the Advent, and by the President of the Maryland Council. Following Chapter reports and other business, the Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman, acting rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, made an address. Miss Florence Wells Jones and Mrs. C. McLean Bingley were elected delegates to the Provincial Synod at Harrisburg, next October.

The following will be the officers for the next year:

President — Miss Florence Wells Jones.

Vice-President—Mrs. H. Norbert Paul.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. M. H. Maulsby.

Corresponding Secretary—Miss Mary Wirth.

Treasurer—Mrs. Robert F. G. Kelley.

An encouraging amount of good work was reported. A week-end Bible class is held at the Florence Crittenton Home. Religious services at hospitals and other institutions are regularly attended. Thousands of visits were paid to the sick, shut-in inmates of institutions and hospitals, and parishioners, and to those about to be confirmed. "For His Sake" the Rules of Prayer and Service for the Extension of Christ's Kingdom are being observed.

The Graduating Class of the Nurses' Training School at the Church Home and Infirmary, Baltimore, held their commencement exercises on Friday evening, April 26. Bishop Murray delivered the diplomas and awards to twenty-two graduate nurses.

Notable Confirmation.

Providence, R. I.—Sunday, April 28, Bishop Perry confirmed a class of thirty-six at the Church of the Holy Spirit, Fruit Hill. In the class were two ladies over fifty years of age who were formerly communicants of the Roman Catholic Church. The Rev. George E. Manson is the rector.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Fiftieth Anniversary of Boy Choir.

St. Luke's Church, Brooklyn, celebrated, on the evening of St. Philip and St. James' Day, the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the boy choir. There was a congregation of about a thousand, and the service was a joyous and beautiful out-pouring of praise to God. Three choirs took part: those of Heights, and of Grace Church, Jamaica. St. Luke's, of Grace Church, Brooklyn The organist of St. Luke's was in charge, and he had the assistance of Frank Wright, Mus. Mac., organist of Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights, who conducted; and of Dr. John Hyatt Brown, Wm. Armour Thayer, Edward A. Hillmuth, Jr., and John Whitehead Turner at the organ. The combined choirs numbered a hundred and twenty-three. Sitting together in a church were a large body of former members of the choir of St. Luke's. The rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Rush R. Sloane, B. D., made an interesting address on the purpose and history of the choir, beginning in 1879.

St. Simon's Seeks Incorporation.

A meeting of the congregation of St. Simon's Mission, Brooklyn, was recently held to express an opinion on the question of incorporation as a parish. It was announced that the pledges recently sought for parish support were short of the amount determined upon as necessary, and additional pledges were asked. The sum of $1,050 was at once subscribed, which was more than the announced deficiency. It was thereupon unanimous voted to ask Bishop Stires' official approval of their wish to incorporate and apply for admission to the convention.

St. Simon's was started in the fall of 1911, in a store on Avenue J, when the section known as Midwood, in the northern part of the old Town of Gravesend, was developed as a residential district. Within a few months a fine plot on the corner of Avenue K and East Twelfth Street was purchased, and a portable chapel erected. Growth was satisfactory for several years, but the neighborhood gradually became predominantly Jewish, and a new location was sought. When this was found at Avenue J and East Twenty-ninth Street, the first property was sold and a brick parish house was built on one end of the new property. If the proposed incorporation is successfully accomplished, it is proposed to begin at once to raise funds for the erection of the church, on the corner adjacent to the parish house. The Rev. Louis A. Parker is the recently appointed minister-in-charge. His predecessor, who labored seven years in this field, and successfully accomplished the removal to the new location, was the Rev. Herbert E. Covell, now of Denver, Col.

Nurses Graduated.

A class of sixteen nurses was recently graduated from the School of Nursing attached to St. John's Hospital. The graduation was held in the new St. John's Chapel (Walter Gibb Memorial) adjoining the Hospital.

Long Island Rector to Lecture at G. T. S.

The Rev. Charles H. Ricker, B. D., rector of Christ Church, Manhasset, and Chairman of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, has been asked to give the course on pedagogy at the General Theological Seminary next year, in succession to the Rev. Prof. Boynton, retired.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Quinn, D. D., Bishop.

"Now Let Us Build For the Children and Youth."

A campaign has been instituted in Trinity Church, Galveston, the Rev. Edmund H. Gibson, rector, for funds to build a parish house to cost $150,000. This old Texas parish, which on Easter Day had dedicated a beautiful set of chimes, under Mr. Gibson's direction, is showing great signs of energy.

The plans for the new parish house, which will be the last word in equipment for religious education, include a beautiful cloister, connecting with the church. The motto of the campaign is, "Now let us build for the children and youth".

The new parish house will be known as the old one which was built in 1880 was known as the Eaton Memorial, having been named after one of the great rectors of the past.

The building committee is headed by Mr. Fred W. Catterall, while Mr. Wm. M. Morgan is chairman of the solicitation committee.

Personal Notes

The Rev. J. J. Clopton, rector of St. John's, Bellevue, Dayton, Ky., has resigned, effective May 15. Mr. Clopton has served the church for over forty years and is resigning to take a much-needed rest. He will make his home in Lexington.

The Rev. Clifford W. French, B. D., rector of St. Gabriel's, Hollis, N. Y., will resign his cure June 1. He will seek no other parish work for the present, but hopes to accomplish certain literary work that he has been planning for some time. He has been at St. Gabriel's for fourteen years, having taken it when it was a cathedral mission. Under his rectorship it has been admitted as a parish and has built an $80,000 parish house.

The Rev. R. Maxwell Bradner has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Nativity, Brooklyn, N. Y., after three years' tenure. He will become rector of St. Margaret's Church, Staatsburgh, in the Diocese of New York.

The Rev. Miles H. McCormick has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Ascension, Westminster, Md., to take effect July 31, 1929. In September, the Rev. Mr. McCormick will begin his new work with the American Arbitration Association, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fifth Street, New York City. Bishop Murray has given his hearty approval to this plan and has consented to release Mr. McCormick for this work, while retaining his canonical connection with the Diocese of Maryland.

The Rev. Hugh McD. Martin, formerly Dean of the Cathedral of St. Luke the Beloved Physician at Ancon, Panama Canal Zone, has accepted a call to Slaughter Parish, Rapidan, Va., which has had no rector since the Rev. Mr. Romilly left.

A RELIGIOUS SIGN-PAINTER ANSWERS HIS CRITICS.

Sir,—If you will publish this I will thank you, as I am one of the sign-painters that have been causing so much trouble on our highways.

I still have more signs to put up, and, thank God, I will put them up if the devil takes them down the same day. I have already experienced this in several cases. The devil has always tried to destroy God's Word. America is called a Christian nation, but we are getting lukewarm. Rev. 3:15, God says: "I will spue thee out of my mouth," and He is doing it now. Look at the murder, robbery, adultery and lawlessness creeping over our beloved country. We need to get hot for God. Try to drink lukewarm water and you will spue it out of your mouth. There is power in hot water. Look at steam, conquered both land and see. If we will get hot for God we can win souls and conquer the world in Jesus' name. God says if we fail to give warning to the wicked we will be held responsible, too. Don't fear man; "fear God and keep His Commandments, for this is the whole duty of man".

PLAIN TALK FROM THE BISHOP

Bishop William T. Manning, of the New York Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, is fortunately not afraid to call a spade a spade. His firm stand against the communist propaganda favoring free love which is flooding our country both openly and secretly, his call to the church to oppose it, and his statement that it is high time parents should know what is being taught to youth in the churches and colleges, makes his address of great value and timeliness.

"It is time for our honest, unsuspecting people to wake up to what is going on among us in regard to those standards of morality and right living which have been the strength of our race and acceptance of which has been the mark of all progress from barbarism toward civilized life.

There seems now to be a group in the church itself which holds that the church may 'consider with open mind' sanctioning fornication among our young people with the use of birth control to guard against the coming of children. This is, in plain words, what the high-sounding phrase 'companionate marriage' means, and yet this proposal was mentioned as one to which consideration should be given at the recent church conference in San Francisco and its consideration is being commended by not a few professors in our universities.

I was shown only a few days ago a questionnaire which was sent out by a male professor in one of our best known women's colleges (presumably Smith College) to the young women of that institution, in which not only is the so-called 'companionate marriage' definitely suggested, but the questions asked of these girls and of such a nature that it would be improper for me to quote them here. And within a week or two I have had a letter from a young woman student in another college in another part of the country telling me that in her sociology course she has been assigned 'companionate marriage' as her topic for a paper which she is to prepare. And I see that a prominent preacher in this city, if he is correctly reported, preaching to a body of students, scoffed at the idea of 'trying to send a new generation into the world with a definite code of right and wrong' and told these young people that the old ideas of 'right' and 'wrong' have been dropped and the criterion of behavior is simply what we happen to regard as 'beautiful' and 'ugly'—which means, I suppose, that there is no longer any law of God which is binding upon us and that our only standard is our own taste or preference. If this is true, if there is no law of God which must be obeyed, we need not wonder if our young people adopt 'companionate marriage' or any other suggestion. Judge Lindsay's advocacy of 'unmarried unions' is publicly commended by college professors, writers and other well-known people, among them some ministers of religion.

I call attention to these facts because I think it is time for all of us, especially for those of us who are parents, to realize what the situation is. We would not knowingly allow a newspaper or magazine to come into our homes which suggested to our young people to enter into 'unmarried unions' and to practice birth control so as to escape having children. Why, then, should we allow this suggestion to be made to them by ministers of religion or university professors under the specious plea of 'open-mindedness'? Dean Ingle said truly the other day that one of the greatest features of the present time is our 'lack of the capacity for moral indignation.' If I thought that the church would listen with 'open mind' to such a proposal as this I would not lift another finger for the building of the cathedral or for any other cause in the church. I know that the church will not listen to it, but it is time for all of us to speak our minds and to use plain words.

It is time for us to say that the advocacy of 'unmarried unions' and 'sex experiments' is not only shameful but damnable—a sin against God, and an affront to all right-minded people, both young and old. And it is time for us to see to it that we know what is being taught to our children in our churches and in our universities."

Issued by the Massachusetts Public Interests League, Inc., 210 Newbury Street, Boston, Mass., whose objects are: To defend the Constitution of the United States, and to oppose bureaucratic and socialist legislation.

THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL.

To-day the glorious Gospel is the only message that can bring a converting and regenerating dynamic (Rom. 1:16, 17); the only Gospel that can fill the everlasting vacuum in the soul of man. The one thing supremely needed to-day by the Episcopate, the professorate, and the pastorate of England's Church and every other is a realized experience of Christ's saving grace, and an intrepid proclamation of it to all, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. It is this that revived the Church of England in the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries. It is this alone that can revive the Church and the nation in the twentieth. The Gospel always will be news; a new thing when revealed in the Holy Spirit. And it will always be glad news to those who have ears to hear its marvelous import. As Mr. Tennyson replied to the old woman who told him one day that "there's only one piece of news that is new, that Christ died for all men," "That is old news, and good news, and new news" (Lord Tennyson Memoirs, i. 169). And to all, scholarly or unscholarly, yesterday, to-day and to-morrow, it was, and is, and ever will be the glorious Gospel: Christ absolutely necessary; Christ exclusively sufficient; Christ instantaneously accessible; Christ perennially satisfying. To stand by this glorious Gospel unashamedly is the duty of the day.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

He who would be Spirit-filled must be self-emptied.

"Truth withheld is sometimes a worse deception than a direct misstatement."

Forget the troubles past, and imagine each day that you do but begin.—St. Augustine.

All God's giants were men who did great things for Him because they reckoned on His being with them.—J. H. Taylor.

A preacher once said: "An extemporaneous preacher, speaking with deep emotion, is in danger of making exaggerations: but when I try to preach on God's love to man I am never afraid of exaggerating."

"They that bow their heads before God may hold them erect before the world."—A. S. Wilshire.

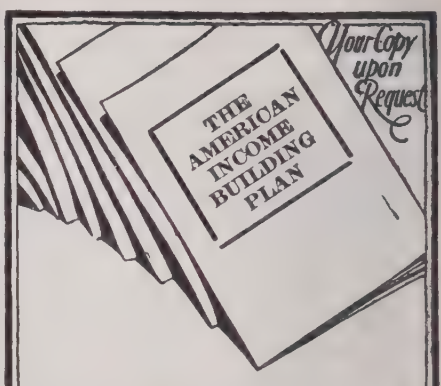
The more we realize Christ the less shall we ask questions for He is the answer to everything that really matters.—Rev. Dr. William Porkess.

Unthanked, unnoticed and unknown,
Blamed sometimes and misunderstood;
Yet if our Lord but sees our work,
And by His grace shall own it good,
It will not matter what men say,
Since God is Judge of all, not they.

I see my way as birds their trackless way.
I shall arrive—
In some time, His good time, I shall arrive;
He guides me and the bird. In His good time.
—Browning.

"Jesus, who hast made Thine own the cause of all who suffer wrong, make me to find room in my heart for the poor and oppressed, the sick and the sorrowful, that so I may find room in my heart for Thee."

To commend Christ for men's acceptance as the great exemplar, the way-shower, the teacher of disinterested goodness, is not enough. We are missing the greatest thing of all, namely, that He is the bestower of life eternal in the midst of time, the enabler, the fulfiller.—Dr. R. J. Campbell.



The wild asses of the desert
And the chittering hyenas
Have self-expression
In full measure,
And they remain
Asses and hyenas
While man through self-denial
Has attained some semblance
Of the divine.
—Doane Robinson.

ZANIES

"Zany" is an old English word, of continental origin, now almost obsolete, descriptive of a type of humanity which, unfortunately, is not obsolete. Webster defines "zany" as a subordinate fool, or clown, who apes ridiculously the tricks of his principal. Ben Jonson is quoted as applying the term to any ape or imitation of a contemptible or unworthy leader or exemplar. Closely akin to the zany is the "jackanapes". That word, originated, apparently, five or six centuries ago, seems almost prophetic for application to some of our present day apostles of the evolutionary hypothesis. It was intended to describe a fellow who made his trade going about to public gatherings with an ape which he exhibited the antics, and grimaces of which were supposed to amuse rustic crowds and draw reward in small coins.

Because this country is the most active and progressive and the richest of all, it is the special and chosen field for the exhibition, demonstration and manifestation of the zany, the jackanapes and the quack of all varieties and of both sexes. In politics, literature and the arts we have these clowns and emissaries and posturers, clowning, gibbering, capering continually, eagerly and anxiously striving for public attention and such pence as there may be to be gathered. In religion and sociology they are especially busy and loud. The easiest, cheapest, quickest way to be noticed is to shock the prevalent sense of decency, to desecrate what the masses of the people, by training, habit and instinct regard as sacred, to cater to the coarsest tastes and the grossest curiosity. Therefore, on these two most important concerns of humanity the zany, the jackanapes and the quack, all reckless and greedy, most diligently concentrate. In the newspapers, filling news columns with slime and smut and editorially upholding atheism, obscenity, immorality and social destruction, in college and university faculties, in open and disguised agencies of anarchy, even in the pulpit and under sanction of ecclesiastical titles sometimes, zany, jackanapes and quack clamor for the applause of the shallow, the perverted and the silly.

The types and their antics and shameless and shameful endeavors, with the invariable result of the detestation and contempt of the public instead of the admiration and following so hysterically sought, are not new. They may be found in every chapter of history. This country has been infested by zany, jackanapes and quack and their vicious labors almost from its beginning. John Marshall's Life of Washington tells us that in 1792 and during years thereafter societies modelled after the Jacobin clubs of the French revolution were organized in the United States, with headquarters at Philadelphia, to oppose the then newly created constitution, to overthrow the government, just established, to exterminate religion and destroy morality. Then, as now, the mischief making, notoriety pursuing types were represented most prominently and actively by important talent, from the continent and Great Britain. Attempts to ally us with the blood soaked, crazily communistic, wild, vile and vicious doctrines of Robespierre and the directory were far more open and flagrant and, for a time, successful than the present efforts to impregnate and poison us with the distorted and hideous lunacies of Russia. The French directory had what seemed to be conclusive evidence that this young republic was ready to be its tool and slave, to join in repudiation of God and Church and law and morality. Genet, appointed agent and representative of the revolution, came here as a conqueror, made triumphal progress from Charleston to Philadelphia, insolently defied and flouted President Washington and the Cabinet, undertook to give orders to Congress. Washington was abused, denounced, derided brutally—more venomously than the lowest partisan publication would dare assail any public man now—described as tyrant, aristocrat, betrayer and oppressor of the people. The newspapers published and edited by Messrs. Frenea and Bache were vociferous leaders in these attacks, but had strong following. Washington in his patient, tireless labors for peace and sanity and the permanence of the country could command a majority of but one in the Senate. At Charleston, S. C., Gideon Henfield, defying the laws of his country and treasonably serving Genet and the French, was acquitted by a jury in the face of indisputable proof of his guilt; and the verdict was applauded rapturously by the so-called "Republican" societies, by the zany, jackanapes and quack press and the noisiest of the populace.

Since 1793 we have had successive demonstrations for destruction and screams and convulsions for overthrow of Church and State and civilization. We have had invasions and intrusions and progresses, some of them almost like the brief triumph of Citizen Genet, by apostles of atheism, infidelity, anarchy. We have had free love and communistic establishments and experiments and settlements which have arisen, apparently flourished, faded, vanished, been forgotten except by close and curious students of history. We have had outbreaks of atheism, long ago, in our educational institutions like the now conservative, respectable and justly respected College of William and Mary and University of South Carolina. Conflicting interests, standards and conceptions led us into fearful and bloody civil war. We fought it out, man fashion, the vanquished accepted defeat loyally and bravely and the victors learned to respect and adopt some of the most cherished principles of their former foes. Zany, jackanapes and quack ruffian, fanatic and thief, combined fantastic folly, craziness and craft to make that a war permanently destructive. The merciful guidance of Jehovah—working largely through the wisdom and conservatism of the Protestant Episcopal Church—and the conscience and common sense of the American people made of a vast multitude of individual woes and miseries a magnificent collective blessing and the world's most potent and stable force for good. We have had organizations of anarchists and murderers, including the Chicago Haymarket bomb throwers of forty years back, and the alarming indication of sympathy with them by the majority of the voters of the great State of Illinois. Now we have, here and there, feeble, feverish bids for notoriety by attacks on Christianity and the Almighty and all constituted authority. Members of perhaps half a dozen of the several hundred colleges and universities unite to proclaim as martyrs a couple of Italian anarchists, thieves and assassins. Professors who are authors of many unread books and laborious producers of dishevelled theories seek to advertise themselves as "advanced" by putting before young women questionnaires filled with filthy suggestion. Unitarian propogandists, seeking painfully to a hair distinguish and divide 'twixt South and Southwest side, preach sermons and distribute pamphlets to prove that the Saviour was not Deity and tell us confidently of what was done and thought on the planet Mars at the time of the Crucifixion, assuming to know that on Mars is not only life, but advanced thought and information denied us here. The Rev. Russell Bowie, ordained Episcopalian clergyman, publishes a book rivalling in incoherence and unintelligence the Unitarian declaration. Clattering scientists and modernists contradict each other in great outpourings of words prepared for publication and leading to endless confusions, none of them even pretending to know more than did the author of the book of Genesis, thousands of years ago, that the earth once was without form and void and that darkness lay on the face of the deep. A woman violates moral and statute law by circulating, through the mails and otherwise, books purporting to explain and expound how to make sexual sins safe and easy and is convicted, after fair trial before a competent and honest jury. Immediately organizations and newspapers assail the courts—the same kinds of organizations and newspapers that applauded the acquittal of the Charleston law-breaker a hundred and thirty-five years ago. Busy Professor Barnes, of Smith College, in Massachusetts, former champion of the Italian anarchists, works himself into the newspapers once more by organizing an irresponsible group of raw students at the University of Pittsburgh to protest in behalf of bomb throwers and anarchists in San Francisco who sent death into the ranks of a patriotic parade at the beginning of our participation in the World War, professor and followers assuming that they are more virtuous and honest and know more of the crime and trial than judge and jury on the spot seeing and hearing all witnesses and defendants. Professors of the University of Missouri and the Oklahoma Baptist University imitate and dance after the vicious clowns at Smith College by circulating indecent questionnaires and are dismissed, promptly and properly. Thereupon newspapers and writers of a certain kind emit dismal wailings over alleged suppressions of free speech and thought.

So zany, jackanapes and quack come screeching and whooping discordant and raucous outcries, obtruding on disgusted and tired spectators repulsive and grotesque burlesque of real motive and purpose. They do no very great or far-reaching harm. Humanity has learned that its enduring advancements and continuing progress came from servants of God and believers in Christ. Magna Carta has a special clause protecting the rights of the Church. The independence of these colonies was won and this republic was established under leadership of a vestryman of old Pohick Church, here in Virginia, and by help of other praying and pious men. Influence of zany, jackanapes and quack lessens and wanes with each new generation. A resistless army or more than fifty-four million members of Christian churches in the United States stands to testify of the spreading and eternal triumph of the Cross. Nevertheless, some drifting, wind blown, unguided, unsettled minds are misled to misery and mischief. It is well, therefore, that some agencies of militant righteousness and sense have come forward to meet and beat back zany, jacanapes and quack. The Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs, Department of American Citizenship, is, most appropriately, among the leaders. The International Reform Federation swings into line, with special attention to the circulation of the birth control literature, standing sturdily by court and legal authority and for execution of the law. Fine Bishop Manning, New York, adds his potent, outspoken voice.

Zany, jackanapes and quack probably will be given good reason to feel that, like the invaders of the Bible belt of some sources of years ago, they have stirred a hornet nest through this country.

Alfred B. Williams.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

By Charles G. Trumbull, Litt. D.

(Editor of The Sunday School Times.)

Joel 2:28, 29. Luke 11:9-13. John 3:5-8; 14:16, 17-26; 15:26, 27; 16:7-15. Acts 2:1-21, 32, 33. Romans 8:1-17, 26, 27. 1 Cor. 12:1-13. Ephesians 1:13, 14; 3:14-21; 4:1-6, 30.

Golden Text.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God (Rom. 8:14).

FOR some strange reason most Christian people have little realization of the tremendous place God has given to the office and work of the Holy Spirit in this present age of grace. This lesson is to be welcomed, therefore, as it focusses the study of the Christian world on this vital theme. The Scripture selections have been made with wisdom and thoroughness. Any class or student going through them faithfully will gain a rich insight into the ministry of the Third Person of the Trinity. Let us be careful to remember that the Holy Spirit is not an influence or a force, but just as literally a person as the Father and the Son.

The Holy Spirit is seen at work repeatedly in the Old Testament, but under different conditions from those that followed Pentecost. Eight centuries before Christ came God promised, through Joel, to pour out the Spirit upon all men in a new way at some later time, "afterward". This promise was kept on the day of Pentecost, in part at least; it may await its entire fulfilment at some time still future, both for Gentiles and for Jews.

The Lord Jesus during His earthly ministry promised His disciples that the Father would "give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him". It has been noted that "none of the disciples, with the possible exception of Mary of Bethany, asked for the Spirit in the faith of this promise".

To Nicodemus, the Lord revealed the great truth that entrance into the Kingdom of God is possible only when one is "born again" by the Spirit. The first birth for every one is "of the flesh", natural. The second birth is "of the Spirit", supernatural. So no one can be saved except by the power and action of the Holy Spirit in his life.

To His disciples, the night before He was crucified, the Lord gave a fuller revelation of the work of the Holy Spirit. In answer to the prayer of the Son, the Father would give them "another Comforter", who would abide with them for ever. This was "the Spirit of Truth". Christ had been their great Comforter in His visible bodily presence; now that He must be taken from them the other Comforter would be given. The world—that is, the unsaved—cannot receive this Spirit. But when this Holy Spirit came to the disciples in the name of Christ He would teach them "all things" and bring back to their memory what Christ had taught them. Moreover, His great work as the Spirit of Truth was to be a witness to Christ; "He shall testify of Me."

Then the Lord added a surprising revelation. It was best for the disciples that He Himself should "go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you". And there were vital blessings that they could never have until the Holy Spirit did come, blessings that even Christ could not give them during His earthly ministry. The mutual dependence of the members of the Godhead upon one another is very impressive and very beautiful. There are things the Father cannot do without the Son. There are things the Father and the Son cannot do without the Spirit. There are things the Spirit cannot do without the Father and the Son.

Three great parts of the work of the Holy Spirit are now revealed. When He should come He would convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.

The great sin of the world, which the Holy Spirit brings home, is its rejection of Christ.

Christ is the righteousness of God, and when Christ left the world to go to the Father the world had no righteousness left in it; therefore the Holy Spirit had to take Christ's place in this and show the world the real meaning of righteousness.

The word "judgment" has never been popular with men, most of whom prefer Satan's rule to God's. The Holy Spirit faithfully confronts the world with the necessity of judgment, and with the fact that "the prince of this world", of Satan, is already judged of God until his eternal destruction, and therefore, all who accept Satan's rule must be so judged.

Christ went on to declare that the Spirit would show them things that they could not understand, or "bear", if He (Christ) were to tell them then. The Spirit would guide them "into all truth"; this was done when the Spirit came and completed the full revelation of truth for mankind by inspiring the writing of the entire New Testament. Predictive prophecy was to be part of the Spirit's ministry: "He will shew you things to come." But above all else, the Spirit's great work is to make Christ known, both to unbelievers and to believers, and to glorify Christ. What only Christ is, and what only Christ can do for men, is revealed and explained by the Holy Spirit.

The fulfilment of these promises concerning the Holy Spirit came on the Day of Pentecost, and the second chapter of Acts should be studied closely. It was, after Calvary and the Resurrection, one of the greatest days in the history of the world. Without it Christ's death and ressurection could not have accomplished for a lost race what God purposed.

The eighth chapter of Romans tells how Paul passed from the bitterness of sin's bondage and defeat into the glory of Christ's freedom and victory, by the work of the Holy Spirit. It was the Spirit who showed Paul Christ's sufficiency in answer to the despairing cry of Romans 7:24. Then all of chapter 8 reveals the glories of the life lived in the Spirit, made free by "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus". An entire lesson could well be given to the study of this chapter.

Further blessings wrought for us by the Holy Spirit, as shown in this lesson, are these:

He prays for us as we cannot know how to pray for ourselves, and thus He helps our infirmities.

He not only enables us to know Christ, but he enables us to call God "Father".

Dwelling within us, He is the first-fruits of our coming redemption in the resurrection or change of our bodies.

He alone enables any man to say "Jesus is the Lord".

He distributes different spiritual gifts arbitrarily, according to His own perfect will, to different Christians.

He baptizes every child of God into the "one body" of Christ. This is the only "baptism of the Spirit" recognized in the Scriptures, the "one baptism", and it is inseparably a part of salvation; there can be no regeneration without it.

Every believer is "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise".

He strengthens the "inner man" of every believer who is willing to let Christ reign in the heart and thereby be "filled with all the fulness of God".

He alone enables us to comprehend "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge".

He pleads with us not to grieve Him, as we are certain to by any sin whatsoever.—The Globe, Toronto.

THE WITNESS OF PROTESTANTISM AGAINST ROMANISM

By the Reverend F. B. Meyer, D. D.

"And they said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John 4:42).

THE Protestant faith, as we are all aware, existed some centuries before the name itself was coined. We may speak of St. Paul, the apostle, as the chief Protestant. But fifteen centuries passed before the nineteenth of April, 1529, when the Elector of Saxony headed an influential deputation into the great hall of Spiers in order to protest against the emperor's decision to limit the rights of true liberty and religion. These were called Protestants, and their followers derived the same title.

The central thought in Protestantism is from the word "testis", which, as you know, stands in English for "witness". So that every time we read the word "witness" in our Bible, the Roman Catholic reads "testis" in the Latin Vulgate.

The prefix "pro" reminds us how in the war with the Boers the word "pro-Boer" was constantly used. Pro means "standing for", "in behalf of", "on account of".

Therefore when we use the word Protestant, we really mean that we bear witness to something that is clearly defined, and that we stand for it, on behalf of it, to propagate it, to maintain it.

Surely the sentences we have already cited as our text and the story out of which they come prove to us the immense power of witness-bearing. Not argument, nothing destructive, but everything constructive, positive, emphatic.

Her witness, on the part of this woman, really brought the whole of Sychar to the feet of Christ; though ultimately they did not rely on her witness because it had brought them likewise into face-to-face fellowship with Himself. And the whole of the city that Jesus had redeemed congratulated themselves that they now knew Him, not simply because of the testimony of the woman, who must have been a soul of great power, or she never would have influenced a whole city as she did, but because they had been brought into personal and living contact with one whom they recognized as the Messiah.

We, therefore, are here today to bear witness, and I want to intimate some of those great out-standing features of witness bearing which are probably familiar to all, but need to be reiterated on such an occasion as this.

I.

We bear our witness as Protestants to the fact that the soul of man can come into right relations with God through the private study of the Word of God under the teaching of the Spirit of God.

We hold that that study will commend itself to every thoughtful soul who feels that God speaks to it from its pages. We no more doubt that than we doubt when we are standing on the sea beach that we breathe in the ozone together with the distance of the horizon and the expanse of the heaven above.

The Bible bears its own witness to the earnest and devout mind. I stand there and listen to the Saviour speak. I hear Him talking to Nicodemus. I am deeply moved as He calls sinners to His side and describes them as the lost sheep, the lost money-piece, and the lost son. I come presently to stand before the cross. I see Him dying for me. The sight touches my heart. I come into face-to-face fellowship with the Redeemer and His redemption .

Proceeding, I listen to the great teachers, to Augustine, to Luther, to Wesley, and to others, and I gladly receive the fresh light they shed upon the sacred page. But directly they begin to dictate to me what I shall believe or disbelieve, then my soul revolts. I have received directly the eternal words of life. They may help me along the lines on which I am already thinking, but they have no authority to command this, or the other interpretation to which they may have arrived.

The essential principle of our faith is that the Holy Spirit in His illumination is not given simply to pontiff or priest, but to every humble soul, man or woman, who pores over the sacred page and desires the teaching of God Himself.

We have two or three witnesses: The external authority of the Word of God; the internal working of the Spirit of God, which gives us an intuition which is even more correct in its decisions than the findings of the intellect; the confirmations of experience. And when in this way we have been brought into union with the Eternal, there remains in our minds a certainty.

A friend of mine, going into a room of a Roman Catholic, found Spurgeon's photograph on the wall. She, having expressed surprise, received the answer: "He often helped me." And then, discussing the decisions of the Church as far as he knew them, he indicated that he was not at all sure of the ultimate result.

How different from Blaise Pascal, emerging from the Catholic Church. He writes (the manuscript being found after his death in 1654), "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God not of philosophers and savants, but of those who seek Him. Certitude! joy! with floods of tears."

How little we understand the meaning of that hour, unless indeed, we have passed through it! I think we feel this as we stand together here and face the eternal future, the infinite horizon, with such assurance. So that, with the Word of God on the one hand and the enlightening Spirit on the other, we have a certitude, a certainty, which enables us to face the future and the past.

II.

We surely stand and witness as Protestants, that the church is composed of all those who are united with the Lord on the strength of the testimony of the apostles.

Directly a soul unites itself by living faith to the Saviour, whether that soul has passed through the rite of baptism or not, if it is brought truly into union with Jesus Christ, apart from all ceremony and teaching and law, that soul is part of the Christian Church, inhabited by Him that filleth all in all.

One would have thought scholarship would have saved people from the mistake of thinking that the Church was founded on an apostle. Most of us know the difference between petros, a pebble, and petra, the bed-rock from which the pebble is hewn.

Our Lord had received from Peter that great confession when he said that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, and Jesus turned to him and uttered that great announcement, carefully choosing His words, "Thou art a pebble, and upon this bed-rock, upon the basis of union with the Son of the eternal God, upon that will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

And that Peter took it in that sense is clear, because in his own epistle he says, "To whom coming as to a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual structure."

Therefore we dare to affirm that the dying thief who in the last hour cried to Christ, that he, equally with the apostle Paul, or the greatest saint of the living God which has ever adorned Christianity, are component parts in the Church of the Living God, which was built, not upon Peter, but upon the fact of the eternal Sonship of Jesus Christ.

III.

Will you note that also the power to bind and loose, and the power of the keys, is not confined to the apostle merely? We witness to this as being the function of the whole Church.

In the eighteenth chapter of Matthew this power to bind and loose is attributed to the church meeting in the name of Christ. It is a very remarkable statement.

The Church, by her prayer, saved Peter from execution. She has a binding, restraining power over evil. And when the Church sent forth the disciples, she was loosing them against the powers of evil.

It is surely an interesting matter to feel that the power to bind and loose is therefore not confined to the apostle. He had the power, and as a man was able to exercise it, but the Church has the power also. In her union with Christ she has the same power.

Was it not with the key that Peter opened the door of faith to the Jews at Pentecost, and Paul the door of faith to the Corinthians? Do you not believe that Brainerd opened the door of faith to the Indian, that Judson opened the door of faith to the Burmese, and Carey to the Indian?

And do you not think that the teacher who bends over the infant class is also seeking to unlock the mysteries of the Kingdom of God?

There are holy men, there are groups of people who are living evidences that the Holy Spirit has power to restrain evil and to promote good, and to unlock to the yearning, humble soul the treasures of God's grace.

IV.

We bear witness also to the fact that we need no intermediary between ourselves and the Eternal.

The idea of a priest seems to be indigenous to the thought of man. You remember in Judges where we are told that all men did as they would, Micah invited a priest to his home and said, "Now God will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest".

Men have always longed to get some holy man who would stand between them and divine purity. "Come here," says a man to his fellow, "be free from the fret of life, live wholly before the Eternal and then intercede for me, uplift and comfort me."

That is the ideal of a priest. The priest is called in to baptize a child, to administer extreme unction to the dying. The priest listens to the confession, and pronounces words of absolution. The priest takes the bread and wine and professes to make it into the body and blood of Christ. Against that we protest, believing that the soul through the Spirit has direct contact with the Great Spirit.

None of us know the wonders of our nature. We sometimes have glimpses into ourselves through nature, literature, art, poetry, or music, and we learn the wonders of that nature with which we are endowed, and are content to learn.

We forget that we are endowed with the spirit, which is our aptitude to the eternal as our body is the aptitude to the material. The ego, i. e., the soul of man, stands between two worlds, the eternal and the material, the spiritual and the natural, so that either he can descend from the soul to the body or he can ascend from the soul to the spirit. And when he ascends that spiritual staircase into the upper story of his nature, the spiritual, if the windows are clean, he sees into the eternal, his whole nature becomes illuminated, and the throne of the spirit appears.

Then it is that spirit touches spirit. Then it is we reach out our hearts and almost touch the mountain tops of grace. Then we say to the priest, "Be gone, we need you not!" God will have stooped to us, and we have risen to Him, and our High Priest has entered into the highest, consituting us kings and priests to God.

V.

We bear witness also to the fundamental doctrine of justification by faith.

Luther was perfectly justified when he said that this is the crucial, the final test. From the moment when Luther's eyes caught the words, "The just shall live by faith", he saw that Jesus was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world.

When a soul has been convicted of sin, and is in an agony of self-despair, it looks about for help. It is impressed with fear and anguish, until presently the transcendent thought breaks in upon it that in the eternal purpose, and by the grace of the infinite God, the death of Jesus Christ was the eternal redemption for sin.

We are saved, not by our works, but by accepting the extraordinary, pardoning, free mercy of God. We hold that directly a man, by repentance and faith, realizes the pardoning love of God, he enters into close relationship with the eternal world and with God Himself.

Such a faith as that leads to works, but the works are not co-essential with the faith. It knows that it is forgiven, accepted in the beloved, and it enters into union with God and thereafter the fruits follow. But the saved one works down from the cross and not up to it. He is crucified with Christ, and through his death to self a new light and power bursts on him like a river to make glad and beautiful his life.

VI.

We also bear witness that the Holy Spirit is the alone Vicar of Christ.

This is all-important. To misapprehend this is to misapprehend Christianity.

We believe that Jesus, sitting on His throne, is our Advocate or Paraclete. This is fundamental. But the Holy Spirit has become the Vicegerent as the administrator and representative of the eternal Saviour. And so we believe it to be one of the signs of the apostasy, one of these symptoms of the last days when we find a pope or any man sitting at the temple of God and giving out that he is the vicar of God.

We hold that there is no vicar of God. No administrator for God other than the Holy Spirit leading the Church to worship and service. The Holy Spirit is the true Vicar of Christ, and no one else dare to intrude.

VII.

Lastly, we come to realize that our great testimony to the world is, after all, not to the death of Christ, so much as to the Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again.

Is not this fundamental to your life? We all thank God that we stand on redemption ground. Christ has put away sin; something has been done for us that has not been done for angels. He inherited, not the nature of angels, but human nature, and in that human nature made expiation for the sin of the world.

We can never forget that, and when that is granted, we hear Him saying—it comes floating over the waters as they ripple round the Isle of Patmos: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore."

When we go into cathedrals and churches of the papal church, we find the image of Christ on the cross everywhere. We are bidden to take the steps of the cross, concentrate our thoughts on the expiatory sacrifice.

If you are going to use this in the sense that Paul used it, in the sense that "I am crucified with Christ", I agree. But surely we must not be always looking back, but up to the living Saviour, who day by day is ministering to His Church as the Bridegroom to His Bride.

And when we come to the table of the Lord, are we not in the same position as the disciples were that night? He said: "This is my body." But He was sitting there. He said, "This is my blood". But He was there, and able to drink with them.

When we are sitting at the holy table it is not simply to go back long past, but to realize that He is in our midst, breaking the bread, pouring out the wine, having fellowship with us over His death, and the results accruing from it. We are not ever looking back through the centuries. but looking up into the face of Him who is ever present.

Let us believe that the Spirit of God is brooding over our lives, working with the Word. But in addition to all that, there is the thought of the living Christ. We realize the truth of His words, "I am the beginning, the end, the first, and the last".

That is our witness.

I am not here to say an unkind word of men who, though greatly misled, are, many of them, seeking after holiness and purity. This would not add to our argument.

We stand here for those truths for which our fathers died; we cannot forget that. And there are men and women amongst us who would die again. For our own sake, for our children's sake, for our country's sake, we must be Protestants.

When we compare Protestants and Protestant lands with Spain or Spanish America or Ireland, how much we have to thank God for! The advances of the Romish Church are very insidious and persuasive, and it becomes us to maintain our clear and undiluted witness to the truths we have here enunciated.

And as we do so, may we hope that those who hear us may say as they said to that Samaritan woman: "We have heard him ourselves, and know that this is the Christ."—Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

THE NEW ADVANCE IN THE COLLEGES

By the Reverend C. Leslie Glenn

Secretary for College Work, the National Council.

THE indictment against the colleges of today is not atheism, nor drunkenness nor immorality, but tameness. They have achieved paralysis by analysis. From them is coming the most subtle and dangerous opponent of religion in our day; noble secularity, the quality of life that is high and fine, but despises the Church, or at best, is indifferent to it. . . . .

"Students are never searchingly exposed to what is noble, gnerous, and faith-provoking," Professor Hocking of Harvard.

It is hard to make people understand this. We have been too long in the hands of the "Optimistic School", the group that likes to hear that everything is going well. You can't talk tough to the pious any more than you can talk pious to the tough.

The Church must be aroused to this situation. It must not be led astray by a type of "official approval", given by some College Administrations to religion for it often is very far from the kind of belief and conduct that our Church expects of its members. Many academic people mean by religion something that the word has never meant before in the history of the world. Compared to some of it, Unitarianism is Fanaticism.

Two results of this indifference to vital faith are seen at once. First, the missionary enterprise is dead on our campuses. The Protestant Churches need one thousand missionaries a year to keep going the existing institutions in foreign countries. For the past five years we have been getting six hundred a year, and four hundred of them have been from the small denominational colleges. the so-called Bible Colleges. Our own Church Seminaries have too few men in the entering class who intend to go into the foreign field. The Department of Missions never has an over-supply of volunteers. Second, the quality of candidates for the ministry is not as high as the Church deserves. Our Seminaries, except the Virginia Seminary, are not filled. We do not recruit a native clergy in the Domestic Missionary Districts.

The sudden increase in candidates following the war has led in some quarters to a false feeling of security. This increase did not keep up during the past triennium.

It is often said that more important than seeking likely recruits, is the task of discouraging the obviously unfit. By this, many excuse themselves from challenging young men with the ministry. They then blame the Bishops or the Seminaries for not keeping certain men out. The bishops and Seminaries cannot do any eliminating until they have more applicants to choose from. Too often a bishop must take whatever men offer themselves or have none at all. A Seminary must have some one to teach. Standards are after all relative, and if it is sometimes a case of having whoever comes along or no one, one cannot be too discriminating.

There is not so much danger of the bishops laying hands suddenly on many as of their laying hands reluctantly on a few, because the Church has failed to go out and compel them to come in. The first Twelve were chosen out of a great company that were available. Today there is another such company waiting for a Call. When the Church has flung the net, it can choose whom it will.

Ignatius Loyola brought about the Counter-Reformation, not by criticizing the clergy, or trying to reform them; but by flooding the church with new leadership. In finding this new leadership he turned down eight times as many men as he accepted for his Order. "A man who is not worth much in the world is not going to be worth much to the Order."

But this is a digression. A third result of the Church's neglect of the colleges inevitably follows the other two. The young, recently graduated, professional or business man and his wife don't go to church. This applies especially to those who might reasonably be expected to go, the children of loyal Church people.

The major objective in the College Work is to get placed in effective positions clergymen and women workers who can give pastoral care to the students coming from all over the Church to strategic college centers.

1. The Church must secure the right person.

Age, Churchmanship, married or single, personality, none of these things matter primarily. It is all a question of whether he has a faith that he can make possible for others. The test of inspiration is the power to inspire.

The influence of such a person is at once felt all over a Diocese or Province. It may be difficult to point to definite results, but some results may be expected, and can be observed.

2. It must secure an effective position for him.

A worker should have a pulpit and an altar. A good man need not be expected to become janitor of a community center or scout for the rector, to bring in students to the service. The Church has broken the hearts of many idealistic men in student chaplaincies that have not been a good base for a ministry to students.

Ordinarily, to attract the type of man needed, the position offered him must be that of rector of the local church or priest-in-charge of the local mission.

3. It has to get him placed in it (subject to removal).

This is the real snag. There is no such thing as the student problem, any more than there is the carpenter problem, or the banker problem. The Church's placement system is the problem. If it were made possible to place some really effective men in effective positions, student work would at once capture the imagination of the Church. Student work does not need to be promoted, it needs to be done. The Church wants to see the work before it will believe that it can be done.

The obstacle is too often the dog-in-the-manger parishes that either will not call a man who can reach students, or will not allow another mission to be started near the University.

Those most affected by the success or failure of the work have no voice in determining who will do it. Frequently students come from all over a diocese, yet only one parish determines what is done for them; frequently from all over a Province, yet only one parish or diocese has direct control. A strong public opinion, aroused to the common danger and opportunity, will help meet this situation.

In many instances, support for the student work has come from outside the neighboring parish; a beautiful chapel may have been erected by the joint effort of all concerned, and then the control of it is given over to a local vestry that does not care very much whether the purpose for which the building was given is ever carried out.

Money is no obstacle; it is more often an excuse. The money that has been spent on our educational institutions during the past thirty years by the Government and the States and private persons is enormous. The Church could have had a proportionate amount for its work if it had shown that it was really being done. The students and alumni give a million for a stadium or fifty thousand for a fraternity house, because they see that these things fulfill needs and carry out purposes.

One legitimate use of Diocesan or General Church funds is to provide an initial subsidy to get a good man started in a college community. Once there, he can raise money from sources that the Church may not have hitherto reached; i. e., some of the parents of students, Church alumni, the college administration, the townspeople, and the students themselves.

For this last, more active efforts are being made to educate students in stewardship. We do not need to buy things for them as much as give them the opportunity to use their talents, including their money, for the Church's Cause.

The National Department of Religious Education has a revolving fund to be used to start men; the students are raising a similar Fund every Lent; and the Woman's Auxiliary is devoting some of the United Thank Offering to starting women workers for women students.

To accomplish these three things, the entire Church must be aroused to its dependence upon student centers. When a student center has poor ministrations of religion, a wide area of the Church suffers. Students cross parochial, diocesan and provincial boundaries to go to college.

Since ours is a constitutional Church in which those who are ministered to have some say in who shall be their minister, those who stand to gain or lose by the work in a given college center must some day have a voice in determining the policy of the work there. Eventually, the canons may have to be changed; for the present the force of public opinion is probably the most effective agency.

The Church should consider very carefully the expenditure of money, on anything but churches and the essential meeting rooms. Social centers, dormitories and the like, are of very questionable value. We are not called to be caterers, but ministers. Christianity is not a program, it is a secret. It is communicated from person to person. There must be, to begin with, a person of Prior Allegiance. Our primary task is to make this explicit, to believe it and carry it out. If we have the motive, we can find the methods. . . .

Student work is not an academic pursuit. It is dealing with life whose test is deeds. Students cannot be held by philosophies, but must enter into the experience of knowing Jesus Christ as Lord of Life and their Saviour. His Divinity and Deity must be made known to them in action. He is not only the Truth, but also the Way and the Life, and these last two perhaps are the chief things needed in colleges today. Students have minds to guard them against error, they have nothing to help them from starvation. Only the Gospel can do that.

We don't need to entertain students. The question is not what can the Church do for students, but what can the Church get students to do for her Master. It is not a question of what students want, but of what they need. The purely social approach seldom interests them. The people we most want to reach in the under-graduate body are those who would never under any circumstances, come to a club meeting. We can't possibly aim too high in the kind of messages we present to them or the kind of leadership we make available for them. And we can't possibly consecrate ourselves enough.

Are these impossible high ideals? I wish we might face ourselves with this question. It is an important one, for upon it depends our entire emphasis in the colleges. I can't believe they are too high, for I don't believe anything else will work. In the colleges we are reduced to the essentials of the Gospel. No secondary appeals have any attraction. Students don't need our recreational life, intellectual stimulus, charity, or social position in the community. They never come from force of habit. In the colleges the Church is reduced to the embarrassing position of having to put out religion or else quit.

That is why the revival we are all looking for and praying for may start in the colleges. Because the colleges represent a death struggle for the Church. And what the colleges are today, the world will be tomorrow. It is a race with catastrophe. Students are demanding all or nothing. And the Church has never failed to respond to that challenge, and when she does, the new day will be upon us.

I am not optimistic, but I am hopeful. I believe we have to go through a lot more loss before we realize our failure with college youth. The product of the modern educational system is not quite in a position of power yet. When he is, the Church will know how many have left her. Then she will rouse herself to the task of winning them back.

That will be the new advance. It is already starting. Here and there all over the country, there are small groups working and praying to win students for their Master. Rectors of busy churches are sacrificing their time to help. Missionary-minded parishes near university centers, standing as strong witnesses, are actively welcoming students.

The need is for more prayer, more intelligent work, for those who care about this new advance.

THE WONDER OF THE BOOK

By the ReverenD Dyson Hague, M A.

THE WONDER OF THE BOOK, my friends, grows on us as our experience is enlarged. For the more deeply we search it the more we feel that the Bible is not merely a book, but The Book. Sir Walter Scott in his dying hour was right when he asked his son-in-law to read to him out of the Book, and in answer to the question, "What Book?" replied, "There is only one Book, the Bible. In the whole world it is called 'the Book'. All other books are mere leaves, fragments". Yes. It alone is the perfect Book. It is the eternal Book. It is the Voice; all others are merely echoes. Of course, you all know that The Bible literally means The Book. It is a translation of the Greek title of the Bible, He Biblos; in English, The Book. It is the Book that stands alone; unapproachable in grandeur; solitary in splendour; mysterious in ascendancy; as high above all other books as heaven above earth, as the Son of God above the sons of men.

The Wonder of its Formation.

Now, one of the first things about this Book that evokes our wonder is the very fact of its existence. Any one who has studied the history and origin of the Divine Word must be overwhelmed with wonderment at the mysterious method of its formation. That it ever was a book, and is today the Book of the modern world, is really a literary miracle. For there never was any order given to any man to plan the Bible, nor was there any concerted plan on the part of the men who wrote, to write the Bible. The way in which the Bible gradually through the centuries grew is one of the mysteries of time. Little by little, part by part, century after century, it came out in disconnected fragments and unrelated portions (Heb. 1:1), written by various men, without any intention, so far as we can tell, of anything like concerted arrangement. One man wrote one part in Syria, another man wrote another part in Arabia, a third man wrote in Italy or Greece; some writers wrote hundreds of years after or before the others, and the first part was written about fifteen hundred years before the man who wrote the last part was born. Now, take any other book you can think of on the spur of the moment, and think how it arose. You know fairly well how it arose. In nine cases out of ten a man determined to write a book, thought out the thoughts, collected the material, wrote it or dictated it, had it copied or printed, and it was completed within two or three or more months or years. The average book, we may suppose, takes from a year to ten years to produce, though a book like Gibbons' "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire", or Tennyson's poems, took longer to complete. But, generally speaking, the average book you think of has been produced by one man within his own generation. Now, here is a book that took at least one thousand five hundred years to write, and spanned the span of sixty generations of this famous old world's history. It enlarges our conceptions of God; it gives us new ideas of His infinite patience, as we think of the wonder of His calm, quiet waiting as He watched the strain and the haste and the restlessness of man across the feverish years, as slowly and silently the Great Book grew. Here a little and there a little of it came on; here a bit of history and there a bit of prophecy; here a poem and there a biography; here a letter, there a treatise; and at last in process of time, as silently as the house of the Lord of old (1 Kings 6:7), it came forth before a needy world in its finished completeness. When Moses died there were only five small portions; when David sat upon the throne there were a few parchments more; one by one princes and priests and prophets laid on the growing pile their greater and smaller contributions, until in process of time the whole of the Old Testament Bible was written in its entirety, word for word, letter for letter, sentence for sentence, book for book, precisely as we have it now, intact and complete; and, as Josephus testifies, no one through the ages has dared to add or take away, nor has the Old Testament text been altered in the slightest degree from that day to this.

But the New Testament is a far greater miracle from the literary standpoint than the Old Testament. The Jews, you all know, were not a writing people. I hardly know of a Jew who ever wrote a book, except Josephus, and I doubt very much if a man or woman here could mention two. Their training, as Bishop Westcott once said, was exclusively oral, and they had a disinclination for literary work. Not only so, but their Master was not a writer. Jesus never wrote a line for publication, so far as we know, and the idea of their writing an additional or supplementary Bible would never seem to have entered the mind of His disciples. They would doubtless have sprung back with horror at the very idea of such a thing, and for fifty years after Jesus was born there was probably not a line of the New Testament written. But then, by the mystic suggestion and overruling design of the Almighty Spirit, without any concerted collaboration or unity of plan, fragment by fragment, here a little letter, there a biography, the New Testament grew. But remember; there was no prearrangment, no plan. It was not as if Matthew and Mark and Luke and John came together in committee, and after solemn conference and seeking for the leading of the Spirit, Matthew undertook to write of Christ as the King, and Mark said, "I would like for my part to write of Him as the Worker", and Luke said, "And I think I will undertake to delineate Him as the Man", and then John said, "Well, I will crown it by writing of Him as the Son of God" It was not as if Paul met James one day, and after talking and praying about it, Paul agreed to write of the dogmatic, and James of the practical aspects of Christianity. Nothing of the sort. There is no trace of such a thing. They simply wrote as they were moved, to meet some passing need, to express some earnest longing, to teach some glorious truth, by a letter, or a treatise, or a memoir; and so this composite of fragmentary memoirs and disconnected letters came into this miraculous unit that we call the New Testament. Yes! The Book is marvelous; it is transcendental; it is altogether unexplainable. It is the miracle of literature in its formation.

(To be continued.)

BULWARKS AGAINST ANCIENT AND MODERN PAGANISM

By Bishop W. A. Candler

FREQUENT demands issue from the camps of the rationalists calling for the discarding of "The Creed of Christendom", because of the Pagan elements which are alleged to be in it, and crying for the return of the Christian world to "The Christianity of Christ" in its pristine purity.

Such demands bear at first sight the appearance of persuasive plausibility.

But more careful scrutiny of them, in the light of the history of Christian doctrine, shows them to be in reality the pleading of modern paganism for the pulling down of the bulwarks of faith which were erected to withstand the assaults of ancient paganism; and that they are made to overthrow "The Christianity of Christ" and to set up in its place the delusive dogmas of speculative systems hostile to "the truth as it is in Jesus".

The Creed was made to exclude paganism, and not to placate its exponents and advocates. It was, and is, a fortification of faith to secure Christianity against pollution through the intrusion of ancient pagan principles into it; and it is still needed to withstand in our times the same persistent forces of paganish liberalism; for many of the modern objections brought against Scriptural Christianity were prevalent among the sceptical opponents of our holy religion during the first four centuries of its history, during which period the historic creeds were formulated.

Those great symbols of doctrine were not the outcome of skillful concessions to pagan cults and philosophies. They are the landmarks of irrepressible conflicts with heathenism, and not the memorials of artful compromises with it.

Primitive Christianity was a militant faith. The Apostles and fathers of the early Church proclaimed a definite Gospel, which they held to be "the power of God unto salvation". Of the senseless syncretism, whereby many now propose to make a palatable compound of all religions, for the healing of the nations, they knew nothing. Such a mixture would have been utterly repulsive to them.

St. Paul, for example, would not allow an amalgamation of the Christian Gospel with Judaism even, the religion in which he had been excessively zealous. Hence, in opposition to the efforts of the Judaizers, who sought to impose their tenets and ceremonials upon the churches in Galatia, he said, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Galatians 1:8).

Again, when tidings reached him, during his first imprisonment at Rome, that certain subtle speculations were subverting the gospel among the churches of Ephesus, Colosse, Laodicea and Hierapolis—the churches in the valley of the Lycus—he wrote to certain of them, saying, "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" (Colossians 2:8).

St. John is not less emphatic in his assertion of the exclusiveness of Christianity: "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness" (1 John 5:19).

St. James, St. Peter and St. Jude are equally positive in their teachings, the last mentioned, exhorting them to whom he wrote that they "should earnestly contend for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3).

Is it possible that men in such a state of mind could have devised or have accepted schemes of accommodation whereby pagan elements were incorporated into the body of Christian truth ? It is incredible.

And they who succeeded them in the post-apostolic age were equally jealous of the purity of the Gospel of Christ. They were constantly engaged in warfare against the false teachings and foul practices of the paganism which opposed the Christian religion.

The Apostles had scarcely passed from the Church on earth to the "Church of the First-born" in heaven, when the metaphysical monstrosity of Gnosticism appeared. Indeed, its incipient forms were beginning to appear when St. Paul wrote the Epistle to the Colossians, in which he denounced its erroneous tenets whereby the divine stature of Christ was reduced to the level of a demiurge.

Gnosticism was a conglomerate of Pagan, Jewish and Christian elements, in which the dismembered fragments of the outworn creeds of a dying heathenism predominated. It was put forth and advocated by a pretentious aristocracy of minds who claimed for themselves superior knowledge and a loftier salvation than was possible to the common herd of unenlightened and unenlightenable humanity. With amazing impudence, the supercilious exponents of that miserable mixture of monotheism, pantheism, spiritualism, and materialism, claimed for themselves the Christian name, and asserted that their system, with all its incongruous and contradictory principles, was founded upon the Holy Scriptures of the prophets and apostles. In their efforts to justify their preposterous claims they gave to the Christian documents the most fanciful and absurd interpretations, somewhat after the manner of "the symbolical interpretations" of some present-day Modernists in their attempts to denature historic Christianity.

Although this grotesque scheme of eclecticism, which sprang up in the first century, spread far and wide in the second century, drawing after its delusive teachings many unstable souls, it was from the first opposed by men of the true faith, who would not endure for a moment its misleading plausibilities and pagan tendencies. So it passed away forever; and save for limited and transitory revivals of some of its principles which have come to pass from time to time until now, it has had no place among sensible men for many centuries. It was denied recognition and shelter by the Christian Church, and it perished outside.

In the second century came Celsus, an Epicurean philosopher, holding some of the materialistic tenets of Gnosticism, delivering a fierce attack upon Christianity and ridiculing the essential truths of the Christian system. He denied, coarsely, the doctrine of the Virgin Birth of Christ, and condemned unsparingly belief in miracles or anything miraculous. In truth, the teachings of Celsus are now the stock in trade of many liberalists, who have embraced cordially his paganism, while oddly enough they declare there are pagan elements in the creeds of historic Christianity, which they would have eliminated.

The vicious treatise of Celsus bore the ambitious title of "The True Word", the echoes of which vain words we seem to hear in the confident claims of the "Modernists" of today; but Origin demolished the work by his overwhelming refutation of it in his argument known as "Contra Celsus".

Other notable heresies with pagan foundations, appeared in succeeding centuries, such as Sabellianism in the third century, followed by Arianism, Nestorianism, Eutychianism, and other erratic forms of anti-Christian teachings, but not one of them was able to inject any of its pagan principles into the historic creeds. On the contrary, the creeds were erected as bulwarks to exclude such aberrations from the belief of the Church.

The creeds were fortifications of faith then, as they are now. Not the slightest color of paganism can be found in the "Apostles' Creed", which is accepted by all the bodies of the faithful throughout the whole world.

It is a striking and significant fact that the rationalists, who prate most about the pagan elements in the articles of faith accepted by orthodox Christians, are at the same time calling most loudly for a syncretic religion composed of elements of Confucianism, Buddhism, Hinduism, and so much of Christianity as they are wiling to accept. It seems, therefore, that they are not so much opposed to pagan things, as they would have us suppose.

But against these pretentious plans of paganish syncretism, the venerable and imperishable "Creed of Christendom" stands and will stand as an immovable and impregnable fortress.

"The world passeth away", but the word of the Lord will abide forever.

"For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and flower thereof falleth away. But the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you" (1 Peter 1:24 and 25).

SPIRITUALISM AND THE CHURCH: By the Rev. Donald Hole. Cloth. Papes 121. Published by the Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price, $1.50.

With sir Oliver Lodge and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle so frequently to the fore in these days, no one may turn languidly from any discussion of this absorbing theme. In the aftermath of the war, great wreckages of hope and hearts marked the extravagant running after spirits which impelled sorrowing souls to find some consolation in the possibility of knowing the estate of their lost loved ones. Nor is the problem less baffling in our time. We should prefer to call it Spiritism; for true spiritualism is the badge of the saints of God. We are aware that the scientists have tried to account for this phenomena on natural lines. But it refuses to be catalogued in Nature's library. There an uncanny something about it which defeats investigation. And all scientists who have soulfully entered into this field have come out with the conviction that it cannot be scientifically demonstrated, but must be regarded as essentially religious. That is why Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, once a Romanist, then a Deist, now proclaims this the new Christianity. And therein lies the subtle principle of the whole system. The author concedes that demoniacal interference can account for some instances; but he believes that there may be another way for a basis of comprehension of the spiritistic manifestations. He does well to warn us of the dangers of spiritism; for the Word of God has already done so. It was the cultus of the nations which had invaded the land of Israel. And to this day, it is the almost universal accompaniment of the heathen religions. The Church has a responsibility in meeting the demand for some solution of the increasing perplexity regarding this thought-to-be new Christianity. The author seeks in a succinct manner to show how it can be done.

GOD SPAKE ALL THESE WORDS: By James H. Brooks. Arranged by C. E. Putnam. Cloth. Pp. 96. Published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill. Price, 75c.

The generation that knew and loved Dr. Brooks has almost become extinct. A giant among Bible scholars, a preacher of wonderful power, a man of evident dedication, he is revered by those who were touched by his dynamic life. St. Louis was his sphere of local influence, the whole world his parish, which he loved and cherished as God trophy. Mr. Putnam has rendered us a great favor by selecting from Dr. Brooks' writing under the above caption, the excellent cream of the milk of the Word as Dr. Brooks taught it. To show the supernatural character of the Holy Scriptures and the testimony of men and history to its authority, is the aim of the writer. And our hearts are warmed by the inspiration and unction it conveys.

IMPORTANT TO ME. By Margaret Slattery. The Pilgrim Press, Boston and Chicago.

This is a book intended to strengthen and to direct the character of the young. Its chapters deal with the person under the aspects of body, mind, spirit, with his relationship to God, to others, and to the Church. The name of the author assures us of an interesting presentation of her theme. The book does not lack for real conviction along moral lines. The advice that she gives the young is for the most part excellent. One sees that she is in touch with their problems and is accustomed to deal with them.

From the Christian point of view the book fails miserably in that it pictures a Unitarian Christ. Only the Christian Christ, Lord and Saviour can produce Christian character. Some of the information she gives about the Bible is peculiar even for Liberals. St. Mark, according to her view, was written sixty-five years after the crucifixion, or about 95 A. D.

She presents Christ as Teacher and Example, not as Saviour. There is little or nothing as to His miracles, no mention of His Resurrection, without which we can have no power for the Christian life at all, never a hint as to sin or its forgiveness. It is all along the well-known line of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, with no hint of the real problem of life for young or old—the surrender of the life to a Divine Saviour.

THE PRESENT FINANCIAL PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:

There is cause for distress and alarm in the necessity recently laid on the National Council to reduce all appropriations in the Mission Field, and so to stop progress and growth in that Department of the Church's work, which is essential to its Life. A cut in the Virginia appropriation —a diocese which has ever been at the forefront of all missionary endeavor—should cause, and no doubt does cause, serious concern to those who have such matters in charge, as well as to all well wishers of the Church at large. As I understand it, this cut in appropriations in the Virginia diocese, has amounted, in the last two or three years, to at least seventeen per cent of that of former years when the Church was at its best in this regard. And, looking abroad, the pitiful letter we read in the Southern Chruchman from Cuba, gives proof of the saddening effect of a like cut in the general appropriations of the Church.

What is the reason for this evident retrogression of the laity in their lapse from their old-time liberality and generosity, showing apparently a want of interest in this essential part of the Church's work—if it must grow and live? There must be a cause apart from the new demands made on them in the new order of things now upon us, in the new and pressing influences which tend to use up all the extras in matters other than Church interests and influences. As one who has been busy frequently in raising money for missions and never having met with anything but a pleasant and helping response from "all sorts and conditions of men"—and women—I am venturing an explanation of the cause of this pitiful breakdown and suggest a remedy, more in the hope of stirring up thought and discussion, than with any hope that what I have to say will accomplish anything more than that. I hope for a patient hearing.

In the Diocese of Virginia, to begin at home, there are local causes and reasons which affect and no doubt have influence in the moulding and shaping present conditions; but these have existed in other years when the Budget was made, and it cannot be that these local and diocesan causes have been wholly responsible for the lamentable situation. This is evidenced by the fact that a nearby diocese, which has been boasting its record—pardonably—of "going over the top", every year heretofore, was at last accounts in the throes of a budgetal deficit. The fault may then be assumed without further proof, as not in the local or diocesan management of its financial affairs, or for local reasons which may be assigned; but the reason must be sought farther afield.

The cause, I am constrained to think, is in the system that now has its death grip on the Church at large, as it operates in the several dioceses. Systematic giving is wise, and the systematic management and control of the Church's finances may be well, but too much system has been injected into this management. In my opinion it has practically eliminated, by this excessive insistence on business conduct and control of the financial affairs of the Church, the element of voluntary gifts which is the life of the Church and all Church work.

Centralization is helpful and, if not carried to excess, is workable and useful but, pressed too far, it is hurtful as may be easily shown as one recounts the money that is being raised outside of the budget and systematic system. The Woman's Auxiliary continues to teach the General Church how to raise its budget, as it has been doing all these years in its increased and increasing triennial offerings at the General Convention. The Blue Box, in which every woman with the least missionary thought or idea delights, turns the trick. Again, since the last General Convention, when they promised special pledges amounting to some hundred thousand dollars, they have already raised $25,000 of the sum for the Church in Santo Domingo. Furthermore, the General Church in its undertaking to raise a large sum—perhaps two and a half millions—for Dr. Teusler's Hospital, is showing evidence of a splendid success awaiting their effort. These and other citations which might be made, are proof positive, it seems to this writer, that the trouble is not in the people: they give when the apepal is to the heart and not through the head as the system is worked.

It is not for me to say how this must be done, but the "powers that be" must find some way of using this always present disposition on the part of the people to make voluntary gifts to personal appeals, or the cut in the budget program and the necessary reduction in missionary appropriations will continue and increase as the days go by. This is has been doing. The living voice to tell where the money goes and to give account of what has been done with it, seems an essential element of success. It is written "tell it out"—not write it out!

RENAN'S STANDPOINT.

Mr. Editor:

Your article on the Rev. Russell Bowie was very good indeed. You might have made it even stronger. The book is profane and profoundly disloyal to the Lord Jesus, the miraculous Christ. It is written from Renan's standpoint and is the story of a non-miraculous Jesus.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Deaconess Margaretta James, of Holy Cross Mission, Batesville, Virginia:

". . . I will bless thee. . . . and thou shalt be a blessing" (Genesis 12:2).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

Annual Meeting Rural Fellowship.

The annual meeting of the Rural Fellowship will be held July 9, 1929, at Madison, Wis., in connection with the School for Rural Clergy conducted by the University of Wisconsin.

"Fellowship Day," as it is called, is always a big day at Madison, with Corporate Communion of the Fellowship, Annual Meeting and Dinner in the evening.

This year, in accordance with plans made a year ago and confirmed at the Fellowship Meeting in Washington, election of officers for 1929-30 will include votes by mail as well as in person. The May number of "The Rural Messenger", the official organ of the Fellowship, will contain nominating ballots, and the June number the actual election ballot. The Rev. Paul Engle, Bay City, Texas, President of the Rural Fellowship, will be in charge of the election.

The Church Congress.

Our correspondent has sent us a full account of the Church Congress, which met at Ann Arbor, Mich., April 30-May 3. We are printing it unabridged, not because we endorse the opinions of the various speakers, but because we consider it due our readers to know the trend of events and thought expressed by a supposedly representative group of leaders of our Church. We are glad to note that representatives from our Southern dioceses within "the Bible Belt", were most conspicuous by their absence.

A bishop is quoted as declaring that the Church fails youth in two things: training for vocation and for marriage. We suggest rather that the Church as represented in the Ann Arbor Church Congress would seem to sadly fail youth in neglecting to offer firm conviction. We believe that if the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and His perfect teachings were stressed, taught, believed and followed, the problems of the Church would be solved.

The Church Congress was convened at Ann Arbor, Michigan, April 30, and adjourned May 3, after a session full of interest, and quite remarkable for the perfection of the arrangements made by the local committee under the direction of the Rev. Henry Lewis, rector of St. Andrew's Church.

"What Can We Believe About God?"

—The stated subject of discussion the first evening was, "What Can We Believe About God?" Dr. Craig Stewart, of St. Luke's, Evanston, and the Rev. Angus Dun, of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, were the readers of the papers. That of Professor Dun was scholarly, academic, philosophic, while that of Dr. Stewart sparkled with his keen wit and effective invective as he entered the lists against some of the agnostic, atheistic or pantheistic philosophers of the day.

Evolution Accorded Victory: The Corporate Communion of the Congress was held in St. Andrew's Church at 11 A. M., May 1. Bishop Slattery, the General Chairman of the Conference, was the Celebrant, assisted by Bishop Page, the Revs. S. M. Dorrance and Henry Lewis. The sermon, on the subject, "Creative Evolution", was preached by the Rt. Rev. Warren L. Rogers, Coadjutor Bishop of Ohio, who took for his text the passage from Genesis about Jacob's wrestling, with special emphasis upon the conclusion, of which a modern version reads: Your name shall no longer be called Jacob, but Israel (wrestler with God), because you have wrestled with God and man, and have been the victor." Bishop Rogers said in part: "We are obliged to look upon life as composed of friendly enemies who yield their secrets and blessings only when we have struggled with them manfully and persistently, yes, even fiercely—Faith, Truth and Love: these three form the modern triad in creative evolution. Truth deals with facts, with accumulated and classified knowledge of verifiable experience. Faith is a spiritual venture, a quality of mind, a kind of courage, a creative imagination. It is an experiment which finds its consummation in an experience. Love is such an experience, which must result from vital faith. What a body of knowledge has been accumulated in the last fifty years! Most of what we know has been determined in a lifetime. Evolution has fought its battle and won its victory. Yet we cannot rest our case on scientific evolution. To explain the origin of a man does not end the chapter. Crawling and climbing manifest the same attitude, yet one expresses the behaviour of a beast, the other that of a man. Why this striving for beauty, for righteousness, and goodness? Is it not that Man is unalterably dissatisfied with his Orgins, and struggles for Goals? Faith is the first leap towards that goal (of spiritual environment in God), but truth will demand that we face all the facts of life, without fear or prejudice, while love will realize the glorious consummation of our faith and of our strivings. "Science is not a Smithsonian Institute for idle people to spend an hour in desultory sight-seeing. Science is a workshop producing something. It is a laboratory working with an end. Its research is purposeful. That is the difference between the older and the newer science. The scientist, alone, is like the mechanic trying to assemble an automobile when some of the parts are missing. The engine will not go on and the car is of little use. Religion will not despise nor reject the parts already assembled, but will do one thing more—t will insist that the other lost parts can be found, and it will give the engine power to function. Faith is that effort of the will which will seek until it has found, it will act with assurance that there is a purpose and a worthwhile purpose for this world process, and it will not rest until it finds the purpose fulfilled. The great age of faith lies in the future; it is just beginning. Man lives on bread plus, and this plus is love, loyalty, duty, devotion, beauty, ecstasy, prayer, and all that have made life worth while.

"Keeping the faith is keeping the conviction of the reality of spiritual values and quests. We make our wager with life on the ground of creative love.

"Do not the main articles of the historic creeds illustrate Faith in terms of values, of purpose, of love?

1. I believe in God who creates all. 2. In Jesus who re-creates, redeems all. 3. In God's Spirit, who inspires, encourages, sanctifies all. 4. In the Fellowship of men of creative love. 5. In immortality.

"There are secondary articles in the creeds which are explanatory, or descriptive. They have caused much controversy. Some are historical, others theological. But the main points of faith stand.

"Does any one, who like Jacob, has earnestly struggled, doubt the effectiveness of such a gospel? Let him commit himself to a life of creative love as so abundantly demonstrated in Jesus. He shall not fail. For such is the faith that masters."

Creed Called Glorious Example of Mediaevalism: On Wednesday afternoon the Congress settled down to business in the spacious and convenient "Michigan Union", the great recreational rendezvous of Ann Arbor's 9,000 students. The Rev. Harold Adye Prichard, rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., was the first to speak on the question: "To what extent are the Articles of the Apostles' Creed subject to revision?" "We must have Creeds," said Canon Prichard. "Let us have the Apostles' Creed as a museum piece of revered antiquity, a glorious example of mediaevalism, and let us have the Twentieth Century Creed as an effective means of bring about the Kingdom of God. There might be many creeds: a fundamentalist creed, a creed for the social service worker, for the spiritualist, and so on."

Dean Frederick C. Grant, of the Western Theological Seminary, stood for liberality of interpretation, but for conserving the historic symbol in its ancient form until oecumenical assent to some changes might be obtained by a re-united Christendom.

Dr. H. P. Nichols, of New York, declared that the creed has become a liturgical act, and declared that while he did not want it changed to suit every individual and generation, there must be the utmost liberty of interpretation.

Church and State: Wednesday evening was devoted to the question of the relation between the Church and the State in the United States. The papers were by the Very Rev. Percy C. Kemmerer of Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, and the Rev. Rowland Cotton Smith, rector emeritus of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C. Dr. Smith spoke in emergency for the Rev. Robert Johnson, who was unable to be present. In the open discussion, Bishop Page declared that the Church fails youth in two things: training for vocation and for marriage. He said that the public conscience which the Church has power to mould and create could be infinitely more powerful in the solution of the divorce problem and other questions than all of the restrictions of the law.

The Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, S. T. D., who was consecrated first Bishop of the newly formed Diocese of Eau Claire, Wis., on May 1, 1929, in Christ Church, Eau Claire.

Experimentation Advocated for Discovery of Eternal Standards: Thursday morning, May 2, was devoted to two learned papers by the Rev. Frederick J. Foakes Jackson, of the Union Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Leonard Hodson, of the General Seminary, respectively, on the subject: "What Do We Mean by the Spiritual World as Distinguished from the Natural World". Most of the clergy seemed to find the subject too deep for them, and there was little comment or discussion. During the afternoon, however, they were fortified by a tour of the University, ciceroned by hospitable and well-informed guides from the parish and from the University Staff, by a tea given by Mrs. Clarence Cook Little, wife of the President, and by a dinner by Bishop Page, so that when the question of "Standards of Moral Behaviour" was broached in the evening they were in fine form. There was a large attendance, at this session of University students and lay people from Ann Arbor and other parts of Michigan. Two papers were read, one by the Rev. Leslie Glenn, and the other by the Rev. Philip Osgood. Both were conservative in their tone, but showed a burning interest and intimate knowledge of the problems suggested by the theme. After this there was animated discussion, in which the most cogent things were said by Dr. S. S. Marquis and the Rev. Henry Lewis. Dr. Marquis said: "It was only by experimentation that we discovered what were some of the principles of physical health. It will be only by experimentation that we shall discover what are those underlying standards, which are no doubt, eternal. There are these unchanging standards. But do we know what they are?" The Rev. Henry Lewis warned the Congress against "High-hatting" some of the leading philosophers of the day. He said it was a rash thing for the would-be leaders of thought in the Episcopal Church to pour ridicule upon such men as Bergson, Einstein and Wells.

On Friday morning Bishop Ward, of Erie, made a strong plea for the support of the state, especially in regard to the Eighteenth Amendment in the course of a paper on "The Relation of the Pulpit to Social and Economic Problems". The Congress closed with a deeply spiritual and stimulating paper by Fr. Huntington, O. H. C., on "Why Should We Pray?"

The Rev. S. M. Dorrance, after a service of eight years was replaced by the Rev. Harold A. Prichard as Secretary. McE.

Financial Conditions Improving.

Financial conditions are taking on a brighter color. April 1 collections on account of the budget quota were $53,-574 less than in 1928. Due to the splendid work of the diocesan treasurers during the month of April, the receipts for the mouth have not only been large enough to make up this difference but to put the total received by the National Council $69,709 above the corresponding figure for last year. Keep up the good work and then December will not present such an appalling task. Another satisfactory feature is that twenty-eight dioceses and districts have remitted 100 per cent of the amount due on their budget quotas to May 1, as compared with only nineteen in this honor class last year.

It is not too early for diocesan and parochial treasurers to plan for the mer vacation period. No words of mine are necessary to remind the treasurers to begin overhauling their fishing tackle, golf clubs or motor car, but it is not with that part of vacation time that I am concerned.

The Missionary Work of the Church Takes No Vacation.—Expenses go on regularly throughout the summer in undiminished amounts, and none of our missionaries have to wait for their monthly stipends. On the other hand, there is a marked falling off in receipts during the summer months and now is the time to remind the members of the Church to plan for the regular payment of their pledges even when they are away. It is not unusual to see on the offering plate in September or October large packages of envelopes representing an accumulation of the summer period.

How many such packages do we see in June covering the months to come accompanied by check in advance?

Unpaid pledges are bad for the Church and bad for the pledgers. Let's make plans now to provide for regular payments during the summer season.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,

Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer.

The Methodist Christian Advocate of April 25 publishes figures of church membership in the United States in 1928, compiled by Dr. H. X. Carroll, which it thinks are more accurate and which certainly are two years later than those of the United States census, heretofore published in the Southern Churchman.

Dr. Carroll lists 332 denominations, which, he says, contain 46,571,248 of the 49,709,150 church members of the country. The total increase for all churches—Jewish apparently not included—is 1,114,987, about 3 2-10 per cent. The membership of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the year is stated at 1,215,383, showing gain of 24,307, which is a fraction above 2 per cent. The Roman Catholic membership is given at 17,095,844, gain of 2 1-10 per cent. The Advocate points out, with mortification, that the sixteen branches of the Methodist Episcopal Church show total gain of 45,145, with 46,000 preachers, averaging less than one to the preacher, a showing which the Advocate thinks due, not to lack of zeal in the clergy, but to the introduction of certain heresies and disturbing questions. The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, and the Southern branch show almost exactly the same rate of increase—the Northern branch 22,093, to total membership of 4,614,000; the Southern to total of 2,580,000, with gain of 12,923.

The African Methodist lost some membership, its number falling to 781,000, and the African Methodist Zion also lost, reporting 500,000 members. The fourteen bodies of Baptists are reported with total membership of 9,088,449, gain of slightly more than 4 per cent. The Southern Baptists increased their membership by 58,759 to total of 3,823,660, gain of less than 1 per cent.

The Presbyterian Church of the entire country is credited with 2,639,347 members in all its nine bodies, a gain of a little more than 1½ per cent.

Although the Quakers have their first president, they lost membership, their total number in the United States being reported at 112,551, that number divided into four different sects. The Mennonites and several branches of the Lutherans also show losses. The Mormons report 586,000 members, a gain of 19,000.

Dr. Carroll makes no report on Unitarians. He gives the Congregationalists 928,000 members, gain of 13,860.

The census return for 1926 gives the total number of Protestant Episcopal churches in the country at 7,299. Accepting this as approximately true, we have gain of about three and a half members to the church, or parish. Like several other denominations, the Episcopalians lost slightly in number of church edifices—the loss being forty-six—a change supposed to be explained by the automobile, improved roads and better transportation facilities everywhere, making consolidation of congregations feasible and advisable.

A Page from the Journal of the Bishop of Mexico.

Monday, March 18. Received news from Department of Missions that all items on our schedule must be reduced 3 per cent, due to the failure of Diocese to pledge their quotas.

Tuesday, March 19. Tired and depressed, I did not sleep all night worrying about the cuts which must be made. Lapsed balances are already deducted and there is practically nothing to reduce save salaries. Without lapsed balances and appropriations for work not under way, these cuts will amount to nearly 5 per cent. I have no heart for such work. The salaries in the district are small now and many of our clergy have a struggle to make ends meet, with large families and the expenses to travel which they bear. However, the wretched task has to be done. This is the result:

The reaction of the clergy to their reductions was, in the main, in fine Christian spirit. One of the elder clergy wrote:

"Should occasion arise, I am quite willing to work in our field without any remuneration whatsoever. At one time, before the arrival of either the Rev Forrester or Bishop Aves, I lent my humble services to my Church, without having, in those days, even the barest necessities, and I rejoice in saying that God never failed me then, as he will not fail me now."

One of the younger clergy, the father of five children, whose reduction is his margin between living and actual want, wrote:

"As to the cut in my salary, I am content with it, knowing it is for the good of the Church, as it will help her, even if it is in a small way."

It is pathetic and heartbreaking to get these letters from men out on the firing line who are being treated in so despicable a manner by the Church at home, whose representatives they are.

Virginia Rural Church Survey Nears Completion.

At the request of a number of leaders of the several denominations, the Division of Rural Sociology of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station undertook two years ago to make a comprehensive study of the rural church in relation to rural life in Virginia. This undertaking is now nearing completion. The first draft of the manuscript of the report is in the hands of a committee of leaders from the several denominations for criticism; and also for the drafting of a special findings report to be presented to a meeting of church leaders and officials—a meeting to be held in Richmond June 13. This findings report will be repeated the following week at the meeting of the Virginia Council of Religious Education at Wytheville June 19-21.

A preliminary report, which gives some of the more outstanding findings of the survey, will be ready for distribution at these meetings. The more extensive report, which will be published as a research bulletin of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, and as such free to every one, will not be available for distribution until late in the summer.

This survey has brought out many facts related to Virginia rural church work never before available and which should be of great value to all interested in the question. It shows that the rural church in Virginia is by no means the decadent institution that it is sometimes painted to be in other States. It also shows many weaknesses and maladjustments which need the very best thought of the laity, of the rank and file of the ministers and of the boards and executive officers who determine the policies of church bodies.

Among other things it brings out that only 42 per cent of the Virginia white rural population are enrolled as church members as compared to 57 per cent of the white city population; and that only 34 per cent of the white rural population are enrolled in Sunday school as compared to 37 per cent in the cities. The wide variation of different sections, in both church and Sunday-school enrollment, is strikingly shown by a series of maps.

One of the most significant exhibits in the report is the one showing the percentage of ministers reported as actively supporting, or exercising marked leadership in, various community improvement activities. The figures run all the way from a fraction of 1 per cent in some counties to quite a high percentage in others. Apparently there is no agreement of opinion as to just what the church and more especially the minister, can and should do in the way of supporting, and exercising leadership in community building activities. This is a point to which those attending the leaders' conference on June 15 may well devote some serious thought. The facts brought out in the survey report indicate that the many inter-relationships of the Church's work and program to every aspect of rural life are not generally appreciated.

Richmond Convocation.

The spring meeting of the Richmond Convocation was held in the Church of the Ascension, Highland Park, Rev. P. A. Arthur, rector. The dean of the convocation was Rev. P. W. Reed; secsecrtary, Rev. H. B. Peters; treasurer, Rev. G. McL. Brydon, D. D.

There was a Quiet Hour and service of the Holy Communion in the morning. Then followed lunch, business session and finally Evening Prayer at 8 P. M.

Through pledges offered by various parishes, $125 was raised to procure an automobile for Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Peters, lay workers. Mr. and Mrs. Peters in the last month have taken charge of the Christ Church Chapel on Mechanicsville Pike. They conduct two services in the chapel on Sundays and are active in mission work for the surrounding community. Christ Church Chapel was built in a suburb of Richmond almost two years ago under the sponsorship of Christ Church, Church Hill, and to the present time has been cared for by the Rev. P. W. Reed, rector of Christ Church.

The other important business of the convocation was to approve a committee's recommendation to the Diocesan Council that the convocation bounds be changed—the Richmond Convocation to consist only of the county of Henrico, which means practically the city of Richmond, and the outlying country districts to join other convocations which will have nearer the same interests and problems. This will mean that the personnel of the Richmond Convocation will be the same as that of the Richmond clericus, but it was recommended that in addition to the weekly meetings of the clericus the bi-annual meetings of the convocation be continued.

The Centennial and Council.

Delegates and visitors are already arriving in Richmond for the joint celebrations of the Centennial of the Diosecan Missionary Society and the Annual Diocesan Council, meeting May 14-15 and 15-16 respectively. In the program printed in this paper two weeks ago Bishop Stires was named as preacher at the Wednesday evening service in St. Paul's Church. On account of ill health he will be unable to attend, and Bishop Jett has been secured in his place.

The dinner in Dr. Teusler's honor, planned for the evening of May 13, has been called off. Dr. Teusler will address the Council Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 P. M.

Canon Troop in Virginia.

Canon G. Osborne Troop, of Montreal, Canada, a missioner of the Church of England, conducted a week's mission at Christ Church School, Middlesex. At the 11 o'clock service on Sunday, May 12, he preached in St. James' Church, Richmond.

Piedmont Church, Madison.

The afternoon service in this church on the Fifth Sunday after Easter was both interesting and helpful in its worship. The church was filled, friends coming from Orange, Rapidan and Culpeper. The junior choir of boys and girls from St. Stephen's, Culpeper, vested, led the singing, a few of the adult choir and organist, Miss Somerville, assisting. The minister in charge, the Rev. Dr. Hammond, preached on the divine Good Shepherd's oversight of His flock in protection, feeding and seeking the wanderer. Ere the service was concluded, he dedicated a handsome chancel window lately put in place, using a prayer also for the loving care of the Good Shepherd over all His flock, and especially those present. The window represents Christ as the Good Shepherd. The window, provided by the contributions of the congregation and their friends, is from the Jacoby Art Glass Company, of St. Louis, Mo.

A neat dossal and retable with cross and two vases complete the ornaments of the chancel below the window. A thorough "clean up" of the church and church-yard have given to the whole property a new attractiveness. The congregation is to be congratulated on their success in making these improvements.

Diocesan Assembly.

The twenty-second Diocesan Assembly in the Diocese of Southern Virginia was held in Ascension Church, Norfolk, Va., at 2 P. M. April 25.

Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop A. C. Thomson and the Quiet Hour following was conducted by the Rev. Frank A. Ridout, who also extended a hearty welcome to the Assembly.

The business session was called to order by the president, Mrs. A. Le B. Ribble, in the chair.

Fifty-six delegates representing the seven chapters of the Diocese responded to roll call, and in addition to these a number of visitors were present.

The reports of chapters showed that they were active in carrying out the work of the order in service, Bible study and in prayer.

The Diocesan Extension Secretary reported that no new chapter had been formed in the Diocese during the past year, although the rectors of several churches had been approached about this matter. The subject of extension work was discussed and Bishop Thomson urged the members to be more persistent and not to be discouraged by the first unsuccessful attempt, also to have others assist the Extension Secretary in this work.

It was a great pleasure to the Daughters to have Mrs. W. J. Loaring Clark present at the Assembly and to hear her inspiring and informing address. She told of the recent Council meeting in New York, at which the following matters were decided upon:

To hold days of prayer for missions, for unity and a day of prayer similar to the one held by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Daughters of the King were to be asked for money to create an Endowment Fund.

Chapters were urged to get the new hand books which are published every three years, the new ones being just out.

Mrs. Clark suggested that young ministers be more informed on women's work in the Church.

The attention of chapters was called to the Summer Conferences and to the book, "Christ in the Common Ways of Life", by Canon C. S. Woodward, with Miss Boyer's "Helps". Mrs. Clark said that it is better to study the Bible instead of books about the Bible.

Conditions in our home life and the growth of the Church not being what they should be, Mrs. Clark said that personal evangelism seemed to be the remedy for such conditions, and she urged the Daughters to have a large vision.

Supper was served by the members of Ascension Church Chapter, after which evening service was held at 8 P. M., with Bishop Thomson presiding and Dean Dobson Peacock, of Christ Church, Norfolk, preaching the sermon. Dean Peacock said in part "that the American nation is powerful and rich, but that we are too much interested in the science of things. Materialism and indifference are our besetting sins. We do not take time to meditate, to pray, to read and study the Bible. We look down and not up at the stars."

Greatest in History.

Grace Episcopal Church, Everett, Mass., Rev. William H. Pettus, rector, reports Easter Day as the greatest day in the history of the parish's forty years —603 received the Holy Communion at the three celebrations, 6:30, 8 and 10:45 A. M. At 10:45, with many additional seats, standing room was taken by the more than 700 worshippers; 450 attended the Church School Easter service, at 3:30 P. M.; 490 were present at the 7 P. M. service. The music was of a very high and impressive order, rendered by a choir of fifty-four members who led in the praise of our risen Saviour, at 6:30 and 10:45 A. M. and 7 P. M. The altar and chancel were beautifully decorated with many cut and potted flowers, arranged by the Altar Guild. The offerings, including the Church School offering of $222.60, were about $1,500.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

U. T. O.

The Diocesan presentation of the United Thank Offering of the women of the Church in Washington was held in St. John's Church, Georgetown, on Sunday evening, April 28, at 8 P. M. The service was conducted by Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector of St. John's Church, assisted by Rev. E. Pinckney Worth, rector of Christ Church, Georgetown. The sermon was preached by Rt. Rev. Beverly Dandridge Tucker, Bishop of Southern Virginia and father of the rector of St. John's Church. This was the first presentation of the Thank Offering of the Diocese of Washington during the present triennium, which ends with the General Convention in Denver, Col., in 1931. This offering was made by the women of fifty-four churches and chapels and included day and night branches of the Woman's Auxiliary and nine branches.

Northern Archdeaconry at St. Mark's, Fairland.

The spring meeting of the Northern Archdeaconry of the Washington Diocese was held in St. Mark's Church, Fairland, Md., Tuesday, April 30. It was conducted by the president, Rev. Dr. Millard F. Minnick, of Christ Church, Rockville, and the twenty or more churches included in the Archdeaconry were represented by their rectors and lay delegates.

Dr. Minnick and Dr. Thomas B. Symons were re-elected members of the Executive Council.

Embraced within the Archdeaconry are all the Episcopal churches of Montgomery county and a part of those of Prince George county.

The meeting opened with the celebration of the Holy Communion by Dr. Minnick, following which the sermon was delivered by Rev. F. A. Parsons, of Holy Trinity Church, Collington. After the morning business session, which included reports from the various parishes and women's auxiliaries, luncheon was served by the ladies of St. Mark's.

Dr. Minnick presided at the meetings, with Rev. Dr. Thomas D. Windiate, of Kensington, secretary.

The parishes represented and delegates were:

Prince George's, Rockville, Dr. Minnick, Miss O. R. Myers.

St. John's, Olney, Rev. Philip Dales, Richard H. Lansdale; St. Luke's, Brighton, Mrs. Isabel Jones.

Christ Church, Kensington, Rev. T. D. Windiate, Mrs. James E. Malcolm, M. B. Stickley.

Grace Church, Woodside, Rev. W. R. Moody, Mrs. Archibald Small.

All Saints', Chevy Chase, Rev. H. T. Cocke, Thomas E Robertson.

St. Mark's, Fairland, Mrs. William T. Brown, Mrs. Edgar T. Conley.

St. Andrew's Chapel, College Park, Rev. Dr. Taylor, Judge Sheppard, Dr. S. B. Shaw.

St. Matthew's, Hyattsville, Rev. Clyde Brown, Hodges Carr.

St. John's, Beltsville, Rev. Reginald Hall, Rev. C. I. LaRoche.

Holy Trinity, Collington, Rev. F. Alan Parsons.

THY KINGDOM COME.

(Psalm 96:10)
Mary Danforth Dodge

Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King!
O'er the lands sin-darkened, weary, let the Church banners fling.
Preach the tidings of salvation far and wide to every nation;
Ah! they languish for the story of the Savious's love and glory.
Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King!

Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King!
Sing His Grace, His Cross, His Passion, of His Triumph sing.
Haste, O Church, thy message bearing, thy rich treasure gladly sharing,
Show the beauty of our Lord till by all He is adored.
Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King!

MYSTERY.

"We are stewards of the mysteries of God!"—"The fellowship of the mystery":—"Great is the mystery of Godliness"—"The wisdom of God in a mystery". Holy Communion ("these holy mysteries"):—The word "mystery" is a characteristic word of the Christian vocabulary. "That is why I am not a Churchman," says some one—"there is too much mystery about religion; too much to take on trust. I like to have things proved to me. I am of a skeptical turn of mind. I cannot take other people's word. Give us less mystery in religion and more practical light of day."

But religion has no monopoly on mystery. Here is Milliken, the physicist:

"The mystery of radio activity is as great as it was the day of its discovery. Whence does the energy come which enables a negative electron to disregard the enormous attraction of the positive nucleus and eject itself with an energy of several million volts from that nucleus. It is as if a huge stone suddenly rose and decided to shoot out into space with enormous velocity against the tremendous pull of gravity."

Again:

"The mode of birth of an ether wave by an atom and its mode of transmission from star to star are almost complete mysteries."

Bertrand Russell says:

"We can never be sure that our scientific laws are right. We know nothing of the intrinsic quality of physical phenomena."

Henry Norriss Russell, of Princeton, says:

"A snowflake falls on the ground and melts in the twinkling of an eye. What has happened? Molecules of water have broken loose from their crystalline arrangement one by one and slid away to form a liquid. It is a demonstrable fact that the number of separable molecular events involved in the melting of one snowflake exceed the number of bodily movements, heartbeats and all, made by all the soldiers during four years of war, and it takes a hundred such snowflakes to make one drop of water. Before such complexity and mystery the mind reels."

Why does a tulip have a heat four and a half degrees above the atmosphere?

Why is the song of a lark always pitched precisely in the same key?

Why do bees always make their combs hexagonal?

So much for the external universe and its mysteries. As for psychology and the world within, modern psychology has opened up to us such abysmal mysteries of the unconscious mind of hidden complexes and mysterious conditioned reflexes, invasions of the personality by other personalities that the Behaviourists have finally cut the gordion knot by saying there is no mind, or consciousness, or self thought at all.

Mystery! Mystery! The sphinx! And I do not wonder Santayana, the philosopher, sees the universe smiling at the frantic efforts of this funny little creature man, to solve her riddles—and inwardly chuckling as he gets red in the face and indignant at it all.

Well, now, I dare, as an ambassador of God, take up the word of apology, that is of defense, for the mysteries of God which surrounds us.

Mystery makes human life. I shall not say interesting, but tolerable. Limitations of stature, of vision, of hearing, of emotions, of understanding seem to be necessary if we are to live normal human lives. We put blinkers on horses to keep them in the road. They pull the load better. If I were sensitive to all the sorrow of the world at this moment, a sharer of it, reaching to it, I would perish; if I knew, tasted or shared all the joy in the world in a moment I would die of the ecstacy. If I knew the future, if I could see what events are to fall, and how I am going to die, and when, I could not eat my dinner. It would paralyze my energies. The very limitations set upon me by the mysteries of life intensify the joys of living in the light of the common duties of life. There are secrets to be kept from children that they may be joyous, healthy children. There are secrets to be kept from man just that he may go on growing up as a man.

And then there is the challenge of the mysteries. Life has in it all the fun of a treasure-hunt following a clew here which leads to another clew there. I suppose there is nothing which develops a life more, sharpens it, intensifies it, thrills it, enables it, keeps it from growing old than the breathless game of hunt the thimble, of following the wandering thread that leads to the palace set deep in the big black forest of the unknown.

And there is something else, and perhaps it is the Supreme Blessing of all. It brings us to a sense of dependence and demands an attitude of faith, and faith is the greatest dynamic in life next to love, which, after all, is faith's dear sister. It is our very ignorance, our very sense of encompassing mystery, that makes us reverent and humble and trustful. It is that very fear of the dark that makes us feel around till we touch the Father's hand in the darkness.

So what does religion have to offer with all its mysteries of the being of God, and the life of Jesus, and the sacraments, and prayers, and worship? Why, it has this to offer; mysteries of light instead of mysteries of darkness. Religion has its mysteries, but they are mysteries of light and that makes all the difference. I am a child setting out across the vast and terrifying stretches of eternity. And religion comes and whispers to me of a trail—it is called the way, and puts my feet in it at baptism. And I take that way and the trail broadens into a path, and the path into a road, and the road into a highway beaten down by thousands and ten thousands of pilgrims, happy pilgrims, who have gone before. It is called the Christian religion. And ever and again side paths lead off alluringly and I take them and find myself in a bog or up a cul de sac, and have to beat my way back through terifying detours—but there's always a yay back, and while that way itself is full of ever new discoveries, ever new mysteries revealed ,the one great luminous mystery of it all is—a sense of divine companionship, of guidance, of leading, of protection, a feeling of strong hands that have been wounded and have come back for our hands, of feet that came this way and have returned to guide our feet.

"There is a plain account writ fair and
On the hill called Calvary,
And a way worked out to the City of God
For a gentleman like me.

"So I go on not knowing—
I would not if I might,
I'd rather walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light;
I'd rather walk by faith with Him
Than go alone by sight."
—Rev. George Craig Stewart.

This Was the Man.

My return to my station at Changsha in Hunan was on the twelfth of May. The first night there was a vivid reminder that I was back in the real China again. Much of the night there was machine gun practice at the arsenal two block away. The Sixth Army was in control of the city, and at its head the general who perpetrated the outrages in Nanking just a year previous. It had more of an ordinary interest to me, as I happened to be the only foreigner in the city who has passed through that incident in Nanking.

About a week later, as I went over to Mr. Lingle's home to breakfast, the compound gate swung open, and in came an officer in full uniform. He walked right in as if he owned it. I asked him his name and he told me, his army and he said the Sixth. Then he questioned me, and informed me that he was in Nanking the previous year when his army was there, a fact which I was not soon forgetting. Casually mentioning the fact that he had a sister in Ginling College made me take another good look at him and it all came back to me.

I was back on the stair landing in Dr. Bowen's house in Nanking and the looters were already at work. We were looking down toward Ginling College and saw the looters run that way. Our hearts were sick. Suddenly an officer appeared in the road and ordered the soldiers, already returning with their arms full of loot, to take it back and went to see that it was done.

Later, when death or worse seemed imminent for our group of missionaries, and we rushed downstairs to get an officer, we found one in the parlor who protected us and escorted us to Bailie Hall, where we hid. This was the man!

As far as I have been able to ascertain, he was the only soldier of the Sixth Army who lifted a finger to help the foreigners during those fateful hours. What was the secret? Years ago he was a student in our little primary school here at Changsha. Later he went to a government high school. He was trained in a Bible class which met in the very house in which I now live. He became a Christian and joined our local church, which I see out of the window as I write. And, later, joining the army in the most critical part for foreign missionaries in China since the Boxer days, he came to their rescue. I have come to know him better and to meet his mother and sister, both Christians, and to visit them in their home. From it all I have gathered fresh inspiration for the work.

Since that morning a month ago he has left the army and gone to Nanking to try and find a position under the government. He knows no English and it is worth all the study I have put on the Chinese to be able to sit down and talk things over with him.—Rev. W. H. Clark in Presbyterian Banner.

RELEASE.

By Eunice Wingate Quimby.

The Angel of life, with eyes compassionate,
Poised on enfolding wings above our heads;
Life-giving light enveloped all above.
Within the darkened chamber each soft breath
Seemed to our watching hearts to be the last,
When suddenly her eyelids opened wide
With wondering joy, surprise beyond belief!
Then a deep sigh and she left all to soar
Upward to love light, life forevermore.

Saving Sahac.

W. Edward Raffety.

Adventures and narrow escapes come to most boys, but I never knew another boy who had so many adventures as had Sahac. Some of these escapes have been thrilling because Sahac found kindness where he hardly expected to find it, and some have given him no thrill because they were forced upon him by war and all the cruelties that go with war.

When Sahac, a bright-eyed Armenian boy, was six years old he lived in a home as comfortable as most of our homes are, but the war drove him away. His father well, a martyr to the Christian faith, and the beautiful mother was separated from her little son. He never saw her again. In the excitement he himself slipped away to a cave in the hills. There in silence and fear he waited until all was quiet. Then he ventured forth to find himself alone and bewildered on a strange mountain road. He walked and walked. Where he was going—he knew not. Finally, too hungry and tired to walk farther, he fell at the roadside and slept.

When Sahac awoke some one was bending over him. The boy was benumbed and dazed, but the man spoke kindly and soon the boy recognized an old Turk who had been their neighbor when he lived at home with his father and mother. his Turk took off his coat, wrapped Sahac in it, tied him on a donkey and started on a long journey. When they reached a small village the child was given food and water. When they had traveled a long distance and the boy was very tired, they stopped before a Near East Relief Orphanage. So the boy was saved.

In the great home that had been prepared for homeless boys and girls, an American orphanage mother took care of Sahac. He was given fresh, clean clothing; he had good meals three times a day, and when he had recovered sufficiently to go to school, was given an opportunity to learn in the school. His small body began to grow strong, and after a few years he began to learn a trade, as did every boy in the orphanage.

Then the great city of Smyrna was burned. It was no longer safe for Armenian boys to stay in that land in which their ancestors had lived for two thousand years. Out in the harbor of Smyrna, American ships were at anchor, flying the American flag. They sent out their little boats to the crowded piers at Smyrna and hundreds and hundreds of small boys and girls were loaded into the boats, taken to the large ship, and from there sailed to Greece. Again Sahac was saved.

There weren't many countries in the world that would take in these homeless children, but the people of Greece said they would do so, though they had suffered so much from the war that they didn't have food to give the children, and they asked the American people if they would help in furnishing them food. America was glad to do this, and once more Sahac was saved.

This happened about seven years ago. A short time ago I was in the city of Athens and I walked past a little home where a group of boys were living together. A fine looking, healthy, happy lad was making music on his mandolin. It was Sahac. He has now grown large enough to leave the Near East Relief Orphanage, and he supports himself earning about sixty cents a day by working in a drug store. He pays for his food and his clothing, and he gives one day's wages for a month's rent in the little house in which he lives with the other boys. So he comes out even. Of course he couldn't have such a comfortable home and pay only sixty cents a month if it were not for the fact that an American gave about $200 to build this little home for a group of boys who had graduated from the orphanage.

So Sahac has been saved again. Every night he goes to night school right there in the home. He studies arithmetic, Armenian, English and Greek. Up in his little bedroom are double-deck iron beds, for eight boys share the little room. Everything was clean. The walls were snow white, with pictures, not the cheap, gaudy kind, but copies of art masterpieces, hanging on the wall. On the windows were pretty curtains, and there was plenty of sunshine and fresh air. And with that safe, comfortable home and his American friends who have been to him as father and mother, Sahac is making good.

Things for the Children to Do.

Instructive ways of keeping children busy are given in the May issue of "Children, The Parents' Magazine".

Make nature study a part of every family outing is one suggestion. The article reads in part: "One nature calendar lists ninety different flowers to be seen during this month. How many can your children find and identify? Also, there are many different kinds of butterflies on the wing. Try to find out which butterflies are attracted to certain flowers. This is interesting detective work.

"The birds are nesting and it is fascinating to watch their domestic habits. A bird-house in the yard will attract feathered tenants, and the children will like to build it. Making a camera record of the young birds from the day the eggs crack until the fledgelings try their wings will teach the children much of bird life."

Games for Children.

Some group games for children are explained as follows in the May issue of "Children, The Parents' Magazine":

A Flock of Geese.

This is a good game for small chilchildren. At the beginning of the game children representing the geese sit in a row, while the "market woman" walks up and down in front of them repeating any counting-out rhyme. When she reaches the last syllable of the rhyme, the geese jump up and run, and the market woman gives chase. The one caught becomes the next market woman.

Fox and Squirrel.

The players are seated in two equal lines facing one another a few feet apart. The game consists in passing or tossing swiftly some object representing the squirrel (a bean bag is good) from one player to another and back again in a zigzag course. This is followed at once by a second object, representing the fox, the idea being to have the fox overtake the squirrel before the end of the line is reached.

Our Cook Doesn't Like Peas.

Grown-ups as well as children like this game. All the players sit in a row except one, who sits in front of them and says to each in turn, "Our cook doesn't like peas; what would you give her instead"! The person must answer with some word that does not contain the letter "P". In this lies the catch! If he fails to answer at the count of five, he must pay a forfeit. This trick is difficult, even after every one has discovered it, for words with a "P" in them are bound to slip out.

Gardening Is Good for Children.

"One of the pleasantest things for a child to do in the spring is to make a garden," reads an article in "Children, The Parents' Magazine". "Besides keeping him active in the outdoors, gardening promotes industry and pride in achievement and teaches the child at first hand the miracle of growth," the article continues.

"Isn't there a sunny space in the back yard that could be devoted to this enterprise? Or perhaps the owner of a vacant lot in the neighborhood would consent to have some of this land tilled. If two or more children make their gardens together, the competition stimulates better effort.

"For a flower garden two or three kinds of flowers are enough. Zinnias, dwarf marigolds, alyssum, cornflowers and California poppies are varieties successfully raised by children. If vegetables are grown, concentrate also on two or three kinds. Tomatoes grown from plants started indoors, bush beans and carrots are recommended. The vegetable gardener should have a border of flowers to make his plot more attractive."

VIOLETS.

Eugene du Maurier Meredith.

Faries of night...
Perfumed lavendar shadows...
That dance when nature wakes and sings
Through the twilight
Of dreamy springs:

Glad hope and peace,
Whispering into longing ears,
While, through perfumed-scented tears,
Flows glad release
From age-old sorrow:

You come to me,
And memories dear you bear,
And neither joy nor despair
Can crowd the way
Of immortality:

Your message clear
To the world that wakes in spring—
That life's new-born, and lives to sing
The resurrection song....
And spring is here.

Brown Betty and Hungry Hawk.

Josephine Sanger Lau.

"It's a lovely day!" crowed Poppy Cock. Then he strutted, lifting his yellow legs high and curling his toes at every step. "In fact," he chuckled to his hen folks, "I don't know as I ever started a nicer day than this."

He cocked his head to one side and looked up at the clear blue sky. Far away to the south, above the trees that fringe the river, he saw a tiny gray shadow. It circled and posed and circled again.

"You'd better all stay close to me," advised Poppy Cock, "Hungry Hawk hasn't had his breakfast yet."

But Brown Betty wasn't listening. Indeed, she wasn't even close enough to hear. For the little brown leghorn hen dearly loved fat green grasshoppers, and just at that moment she had discovered a fine big one, perched high up on a sunflower stalk. But when she hopped to reach him, he flew away across the road and into the field beyond.

Now Brown Betty knew perfectly well that it isn't wise to cross a road without remembering to "stop, look and listen". And she knew, if she had only stopped to think, that it was a very foolish thing to do when old Ring, the dog policeman, wasn't even out of bed yet.

But away went Brown Betty after the grasshopper. She was just ready to pounce a second time when, "Run"! shouted Poppy Cock. "Run! Run! Run!"

She looked up, and sure enough, right over her head soared Hungry Hawk, looking for his breakfast.

Quick as a flash she turned and darted back through the high grass. But she knew he had seen her and it was no use to hide. She reached the open road, but the little gray shadow was a big gray shadow now, and it hung just above her. No time to run farther (no use to hide). Time to do just one thing. Quick as a wink, she had flopped over into the dusty road, and, lying flat on her back, began to kick. Just as hard and fast as her little yellow legs could go!

Hungry Hawk swooped, reaching out his long curved claws to pick up his breakfast. Oh my, how Brown Betty did kick then! Her little legs fairly flew, while Hungry Hawk fanned her with his great wings, and tried to find something to take hold of. He was very hungry, but really, how could any hawk pick up a breakfast that kicked like that? Each time he reached, those little flying legs struck his claws and knocked them away.

Now Hungry Hawk hadn't intended to stay. He knew the farm yard was just across the road, and he knew all about dog policeman, too. He had just intended to sail down without a sound, pick up his breakfast, and carry it away to the trees beside the river. There he could eat in peace.

He rose a few feet into the air and swooped again, and this time he was very sure, for Brown Betty was getting tired and the little yellow legs were kicking more solwly. But just as his sharp claws closed about her he turned his head—and missed again! Such a curious noise behind him!

Sure enough, here came Poppy Cock! Dragging his wings on the ground and raising a terrible dust as he ran. And his feathers were all fluffed out until he looked as big as Hungry Hawk himself.

Hungry Hawk hesitated. He hissed angrily, and his wings dipped as if he intended to stay and fight. But Poppy Cock never slowed down a single bit. On he came! And his eyes did look so red and angry, his spurs so long and business like, that Hungry Hawk decided he'd better go. He'd rather have a gopher anyway than a hen that kicked like that. So he flapped his great wings, rose rapidly into the blue sky and sailed away.

Then Brown Betty leaped to her feet. Without waiting to shake the dust from her feathers, she flew—oh yes she did, she really flew! Perhaps she hadn't known before that she could use her wings except to help her to run. Across the road she went, over the sunflower hedge, never once touching the ground until she had reached the safety of the barn yard. Through the group of excited hens she darted, and reached at last the quiet shadow of the chicken-house.

"I'll never," she panted, as she stood with open mouth and drooping wings; "I'll never—cross that road—again—without remembering to—"stop, look and—listen"!

"Little Nuisance."

How would you like to be called "Nuisance"? That is what one little Chinese girl was called, "Little Nuisance". You know in China people don't love little girls nearly as much as they do boys, but of course we know little girls are just as nice as boys, so we love them both.

This little Chinese girl had a hard life and one day her father said he was going to take her to market and sell her for a slave, as he needed some money. Little Nuisance was very frightened and unhappy as a man bought her and led her away. Do you think God knew about her fear and grief? Do you think He knows little foreign children by name the same as He does us? Do you suppose He loves a little brown or black child just as much as He does a beautiful white one? He certainly does—and I sometimes think He loves them even more because they don't have any chance to hear about Him as we do; they have no schools or homes or churches like we have, so He must feel very sorry for them, don't you think?

Anyway, the heavenly Father must have been looking after Little Nuisance even if her earthly father was not, for she was bought by a missionary and given a lovely—though simple—home. She was taught about God's love for all the children of the world.

Do remember to pray for the missionaries. Even if you have no money to give, you can ask God to keep the missionaries from getting sick, and to put it in the hearts of people who have a little money to give it to them. By being faithful in praying for the missionaries in the foreign lands, we can have a part in telling the story of Jesus to the little heathen children.—The King's Business.

Mark's Afternoon Off.

Mark went down the lane, whistling like a blackbird. He could do anything he pleased the whole afternoon, or nothing at all if he'd rather. And if you are a little boy of a handy age and live on a farm, you know that afternoons when you don't have to weed the garden or plant Irish potatoes or dig sweet ones, or help oil the pigs or dip the sheep or salt the cattle, don't come often, and you have to make the most of them when they do! So Mark guessed he'd go by and see Granny a few minutes and then make his way through the alders and elderberry bushes to the creek and swim .

Granny's house was small and old and sweet like herself. Mark loved to go there. She was busy in the front yard when Mark came up. "Hello, Gran," he said.

"Dear boy, I'm so glad to see you," said Granny. "Sit down. I've just baked a fresh batch of caraway seed cakes!" She hurried in, and when she came back she had a plate of the cakes in one hand and a mug of cold milk in the other.

"My, Gran!" said Mark admiringly. "You always do have something good on hand, don't you?" Granny beamed at him over her specs. When he finished Mark got up to go to the creek. "What you doing out there, Gran?" he asked.

"Well, just job work," said Granny. "I'm trying to fix that trellis for that running rose. It's ready to fall down. And I've been trying to stop that hole in the fence. Just see here, Mark, how that pesky pig has rooted my cannas!"

"I can fix it," said Mark. "Where's the hammer and nails?"

"Right here," said Granny, fetching them for him.

Mark hunted up a stout board and sawed it the right length, and then with good, manly licks he nailed it firmly in place. When he finished it was a shipshape job, a neat, sturdy bit of fencing that half a dozen pesky pigs couldn't undo!

"I do declare," said Granny. "It's a downright comfort to have a man about the place for such jobs as that!" She brought him some water in a yellowed gourd from the well close by. Mark drank thirstily. He was hot, as one is apt to be after working with hammer and saw an hour on a July afternoon.

But when he had rested a bit he said: "Better show me how you want that trellis, now while I'm started."

"Well, you see," said Granny, "it's rotted out here, and if I don't get a new piece put in it's all going to topple over. But it is a bad job on account of this rose being so thorny."

It was rather a bad job, sure enough, but she cut away some of the worst runners and Mark crawled under and braced it very securely. Then he nailed back some loosened cross pieces, so it had a new, trim look about it.

"I do know, Mark," said Granny excitedly, "you're the handiest boy I ever saw!"

"That's all right, Gran," said Mark, grinning and wiping his damp face on his sleeve. It was getting kind of late by then, but Mark thought he'd go on down to the creek and have a little swim. But as he went out the back gate he saw that it was hanging by one hinge. The lower one had pulled out.

He went back and got the hammer and nails and went at it. Just as he finished Granny called: "Now Mark, you've done enough. You come here and eat supper. It's six o'clock."

Supper at Granny's was different and nicer than anywhere else. There was a blue-checked tablecloth and a bowl of little yellow roses on the table. There was a loaf of bread Granny had baked that day, and pale white clover honey in a blue pot, and a pat of butter printed with a pineapple, and a yellow stone pitcher of fresh cold milk. Mark ate practically everything on the table, and then he said: "Gran, I'd better go, I reckon. I'll be back tomorrow."

He let her kiss him on the cheek and presently went back along the lane toward home, whistling like a blackbird.

"Well, son," said mother, smiling, when he came in, "how about it? Did you have a big time spending your afternoon off?"

"Yes'm," said Mark, in a contented way, "I had a first-class time!"—Christian Observer.

"ONLY SLEEPING."

Maude Forest Mumma.

Each in rarest beauty seen,
Every miracle of Spring;
All in many colors sheen,
Hyacinth, tulip, everything!
"I thought you were dead," the pine tree said,
"But no, you were only sleeping."

The rose bush has a leaf or two,
Which only yesterday looked as though
No spark of life would ever show
In that dark branch beneath the snow
"I thought you were dead," my mother said,
"But no—you were only sleeping."

The robin, from his branch on high,
Sang his matin to the sky,
"I knew the flowers were not dead,
But only sleeping,"—this he said.

Don's Lost Penny.

Don was making a snowman in the side yard. The snow was not damp enough to pack well. Besides, Don's little brown dog Penny kept getting in the way.

Penny seemed to think that snowman was something for him to knock over or pull down. He jumped at it, bit off mouthfuls of snow, pushed his body against the part where Don was working.

"I'll shut you in the house if you don't behave! You'll have to stay there till supper!" Don threatened.

Penny seemed to understand. He was too gay and active a pet to like being shut indoors while his master was out in this lovely snow. For almost five minutes he sat on the sidewalk and just watched. Don was just thinking how cute he looked with one snowy ear cocked up, when over came Penny in a wild, wild rush.

He almost knocked Don into the snowman, and that would have spoiled it surely. Don was very cross. He ran at Penny with a big snowball. "Get away, you bad dog!" he screamed.

Penny ran as if he was terribly frightened. He got behind the fence of the now next-door boy's yard. The new boy was just Don's size and had been here only one night. Don wondered if he saw the snowman.

"I guess he sees it now, anyway!" said Don proudly. The boy had come out to mail a letter at the corner. Don pretended to be too busy to look up. He thought the new boy must think this a good snowman for a day when the snow didn't pack better.

Don was through with it now and wanted a romp with his little dog. Where was the scamp? Don was out on the walk looking for him when the new boy came by.

"Have you seen my Penny?" he asked, just as he'd have asked Rob or Elmer.

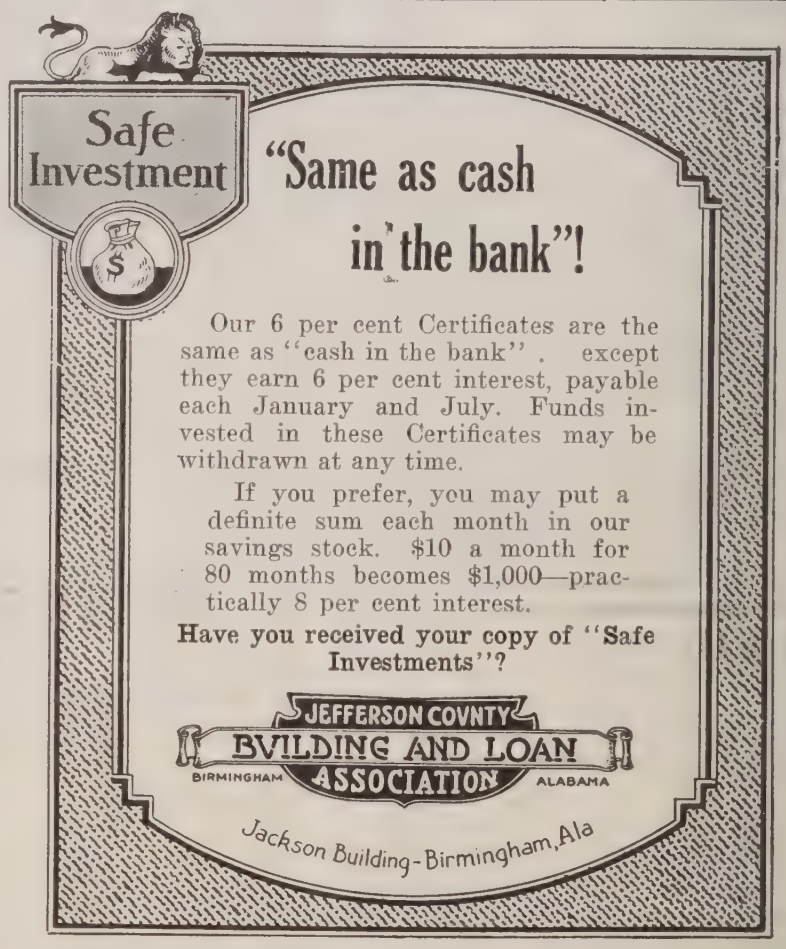
The new boy shook his head. He acted rather stiff and was walking on. Then he turned around and began looking in the snow by the path.

"It wouldn't be easy to find a penny here. Maybe you built it right into the snowman! Then you'll find it when he melts."

Don laughed hard. "I don't mean a money penny," he explained. "My dog Penny was playing here. He went into your yard. Now he's gone."

"The little dog you threw at?" The new boy's face looked queer. Don't own face went red.

"I didn't hit Penny. I just pretended to throw at him, when he bothered me so."



"I knew you didn't hit him, but it didn't look as if he'd be your own dog to run so. I hoped he was a tramp puppy I could keep. He's in our house now. I'll let him out."

"Can't you call for somebody to open the door while you see if he acts like a tramp dog? Then you stay and play in the snow."

The new boy had to go ask his mamma about that. It seemed a long while before he opened the door again. Don couldn't tell why he felt so queer while he waited. The sun seemed to hurt his eyes, so he had half turned around, when out came Penny in a glad rush.

"He's your dog, all right," said the new boy. Penny showed that very clearly, and oh, how good Don felt now.

He looked up from stroking Penny under the chin. "He's my very own dog, but Penny is friends with all the boys. He'll be a special friend of yours, because you live next door."—Our Little Ones.

The Spiritual Background of the Order of the Thousandfold

The Thousandfold idea is in itself perfectly simple and easy to understand; namely, that our usefulness may and can be very greatly increased by praying to be made a thousandfold more useful, but the folloying may help to show the background from which it has come:

I believe myself that the Church can do her best work by running parallel to Natural Science in developing the resources of the spiritual world just as science is developing the resources of Nature. I would regard Natural Science as a kind of John the Baptist of a new dispensation in preparing the way for it by showing how wonderfully the resources of Nature can be turned to man's account by faith and diligence. The work of the scientists constitutes a challenge to the Church to do a similar work in the spiritual sphere; and it seems as if God is trying to open our eyes to the fact that there are far greater and more wonderful treasures in the spiritual world which He is even more anxious that we should possess than those in Nature. This, it seems to me, is a much more promising method of procedure than to try and reconcile religion and science by seeking to bring religion within the confines of the natural order.

The question of course arises as to how we can decelop the resources of the spiritual world for the benefit of mankind. The answer is that Christ bridged the chasm which separated the natural from the spiritual world. He is the Way to the Father, through whom we can come into direct contact and communion with God. He is also the Way by which the Spirit of God goes forth to the hearts of men and brings God into living touch and contact with mankind. In making us the members of His Body, Christ is enabled to carry on His work through us just as He usey the Body which He assumed when He was born in Bethlehem.

He made this clear to His disciples when He said, "He that believeth on me (as the Scripture hath said), out of him shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given because that Jesus was not yet glorified." It seems clear from this that the New Creation was to be carried out in the same way as the first; that is, through the Holy Spirit, we being the channels through which His power and influence is brought to bear upon the world around us. There is, therefore, something more than our influence at work in our dealings with men. God Himself is seeking through us to reach and bless the lives of others. It is evident that our recognition of this fact and our willingness to be used in this way must make it possible for God to do a much greater work than otherwise, because it clears the way for the outpouring of the Divine Spirit according to the promise of Christ—"out of him shall flow rivers of living water".

This not only makes the divine resources accessible, but it makes us the medum through which these resources and the needs of humanity may be brought together, and thus the world may be blessed far more wonderfuly than is possible through Natural Science.

To ask to be made a thousandfold more useful, or ten thousandfold, is a practical recognition of the fact that there is a divine work going on through us which we may be entirely unconscious of, but which we believe is actually taking place, because it is God Himself who is at work and not merely ourselves.

We fail to recognize the very important fact that it is God's work and not ours, and that our share in it is similar to the lad's five loaves and two fishes through which Christ fed the five thousand.

To believe that God can do great things through us is not glorifying ourselves, but glorifying Him. I expect great things to happen, and though I may not see them, I am not in the least discouraged, and the following verses will explain my point of view:

His promise must be true
That He will great things do
Through me if I believe.
And thus His power receive.

I may not ever see
All that He does through me,
But yet a tiny part
Will warm and cheer my heart.

And so I go my way
And each day humbly pray
That what He said He'd do
Will in my life come true.

I may say, however, that there is abundant evidence coming in from all quarters to show that the prayer is being wonderfully answered.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

St. Luke's, Bladensburg, Rev. W. M. Derr.

Members of Executive Council were elected as follows: Dr. Minnick and Professor T. B. Simons, with Rev. Mr. Dale and James E. Malcolm as alternates.

At the afternoon session the Rev. L. B. Franck, of Emanuel Church, Anacostia, spoke on Evangelism.

The other officers of the Archdeaconry are Rev. Clyde Brown, vice-president, and Dr. Thomas B. Symons, treasurer.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Harold I. Fair.

According to the papers, he committed suicide. Whatever be the fact, the Diocese of Bethlehem holds him in very high regard. He was one of the first of the Leonard Hall boys—the Bishops' School for Postulants. From the time he appeared among us he was always highly respected for the clean life he lived and his true devotions. His companions used to say, "Harold is too good". While that is impossible, it might be said that he was too unworldly. The Christ and the Church was his only quest.

Then came the cruel war in which he was thrice wounded and once gassed. Then came a happy marriage to Professor Nash's daughter, formerly of Cambridge. Then came the death of his wife like a flash of lightning. She was in the hospital and he had just been talking with her and she was telling him how much better she was and would be home in a few days. In less than an hour he got the message that she was dead. All these things, coupled with hard work and no vacation, in remodeling his church in Fall River and making over his parish house at an expenditure of more than thirty thousand dollars, finally wrecked his nerves and ended in death. The Convocation of Reading passed suitable resolutions in which they expressed their high regard for his integrity and character.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial Services for Bishop Brent.

The memory of Bishop Charles H. Brent, acclaimed as one of the ten great figures of the contemporary world, who died March 28 in Lausanne, Switzerland, Sunday, April 7, was honored throughout the Diocese of Western New York. Special services were held in every church in accordance with the suggestion of the Rt. Rev. David Lincoln Ferris, of Rochester, now head of the Diocese. The order of service included Holy Communion and memorial addresses.

Two major services were held in Buffalo Sunday morning, one in Brent House, in St. John's Place, and the second in St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral, Shelton Square.

At the Brent House the Rev. Alfred S. Priddis, chaplain and chairman of the Episcopal Church Extension Society of Buffalo, conducted the service. Brent House is the Church Mission of Help, home for girls in temporary need, and was one of the last institutional efforts of the late Bishop.

"It is impossible to talk adequately about so great a life," said Mr. Priddis. "His death was like the fall of a great oak of the forest. But although he has left us, you must not feel that he is gone. You can continue to feel him in your midst in the great inspiration which he brought here and materialized in this home."

He spoke of Bishop Brent's sympathy and desire to aid "those who sidestepped from the pathway in life."

"You should keep his fine ideals ever before you and hold them dear," he said.

The chapel was consecrated last February and contains a large cross, given to it by Bishop Brent as a thank offering following recovery from illness which was treated in Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore.

"Bishop Brent, the Leader," was the subject of Dr. Wyatt Brown's address in St. Paul's Cathedral, where not so long ago the late Bishop spoke. Dr. Brown said that Bishop Brent's life had been one based on that of Christ. He illustrated his comparison with four events in the life of Christ—His miraculous birth, His baptism, His ministry which culminated in death on the cross, and His resurrection.

The late Bishop, Dr. Brown said, was born great, possessing attributes of personality that cannot be acquired, but are gifts of God. Bishop Brent was a man of vision, possessing infinite courage and humility. To be born great is not sufficient to make a leader, however, Dr. Brown said. He related how Bishop Brent first distinguished himself as early as 1901 in the Philippines.

In the Church of the Ascension, Lincoln Avenue and North Street, Dr. Charles D. Broughton, in his memorial address, recalled a sermon delivered by Bishop Brent in 1907 at Harvard. Bishop Brent spoke on "Factors That Make Up True Leadership". Dr. Broughton said that the deceased prelate exemplified all that he said in the Harvard sermon.

At Niagara Falls, in St. Peter's Church, the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Overs, former Bishop of Liberia, eulogized Bishop Brent in a memorial address. He termed the Bishop a spiritual adventurer.

The funeral of the late prelate was held in the English Church of Lausanne on Friday, April 12. It was attended by clergymen of five nationalities, former Ambassador Houghton, General Pershing, the American Minister to Switzerland, three American con-General Pershing, the American Minister tof Switzerland, three American consuls, and the city officials and Council of Lausanne.

The Creed and Lord's Prayer was repeated simultaneously in English, French and German, hymns common to all three languages were sung, then the Orthodox Trisagion for the departed was chanted by the Russian choir of Geneva.

The mortal remains of the great Bishop were laid to rest in the Bois de Vaux Cemetery, Lausanne, Switzerland.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, Bishop.

Corporate Gift of Woman's Auxiliary.

One of the most interesting accomplishments in the Diocese of Springfield within the past year has been the efforts which have resulted in the raising of the Corporate Gift asked of the Woman's Auxiliary of this Diocese by Easter. Largely through the devoted leadership of Mrs. Charles S. Woods, of Lincoln, the report is made that all that has been asked of the Diocese has been raised. A most inspiring and splendidly attended luncheon meeting was held in Lincoln April 25, at which representatives were present from all the parishes of that part of the Diocese. This was one of three such meetings planned for in the Diocese, the other two being at Alton and Centralia and to be held during the month of May.

Previous to the luncheon the Bishop of the Diocese instituted the Rev. John A. Betcher, Ph. D., as the rector of Trinity Church. The Ven. Edward Haughton, Archdeacon of Springfield and rector of St. Paul's Church, assisted in the service.

Personal Notes

Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott, formerly addressed at 1424 North Dearborn Parkway, Chicago, Ill., should now be addressed Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., Bishop of Lexington, The Bishop's House, 436 West Sixth Street, Lexington, Ky.

The Rev. Charles G. Clark, lately Archdeacon of Brooklyn, became rector April 1 of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn. The rectory is being extensively repaired, and the new rector will not take up residence there until this work is completed. The work formerly assigned to the Archdeacon of Brooklyn has been largely made over to the Suffragan Bishop.

The Rev. Robert S. Flockhart, D. D., rector of St. Thomas' Church, Sioux City, Iowa, has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Worthington Valley, Md., and will enter upon his new duties July 1.

The Rev. Claude C. Thomson, rector of St. Peter's Church, Ripon, Wis., has received and accepted a call to become rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, West Arlington, Baltimore, Md. Mr. Thomson will take charge of his new parish July 1.

The Rev. C. D. Beale has resigned his charge of Christ Church, Berwick, in the Diocese of Harrisburg, Pa., and has accepted a call to Condersport, Pa. At the present time the Christ charge is unfilled.

The Rev. George T. Gruman was instituted rector of Trinity Church (East New York), Brooklyn, on the evening of Ascension Day.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

His Nine Good Reasons for Going to Church

1. In this actual world, a churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at it, ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid down grade.
2. Church work and church attendance mean the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others.
3. There are enough holidays for most of us. Sundays differ from other holidays in the fact that there are fifty-two of them every year. Therefore on Sundays go to church.
4. Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's own house just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship.
5. He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.
6. He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible. And if he is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss.
7. He will take part in singing some good hymns.
8. He will meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors. He will come away feeling a little more charitable towards all the world, even towards those excessively foolish young men who regard church-going as a soft performance.
9. I advocate a man's joining in church work for the sake of showing his faith by his works.

"Be strong and of good courage, and do it; fear not, nor be discouraged, for the Lord God, even my God, is with thee; He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee."

"O God, who art the light of the thoughts that seek Thee,
The strength of the minds that know Thee,
The life of the souls that have Thee,
Grant us so to seek Thee;
That we may truly know Thee;
So to know Thee
That we may truly love Thee;
So to love Thee
That we may truly serve Thee."

SUCCESS IN MINISTRY

By Bishop Baldwin, of Canada

I desire to state as forcibly as I can the elements of ministerial success.

First: We need a ministry that believes in Jesus Christ. I mean by this a ministry that believes in Jesus Christ against the whole world; that He is not only King, but King of kings, and Lord of lords. This is the ministry we need. One not afraid, as has been well said, to step out on the deep blue of God's promise, and trust where the whole world derides.

Secondly: We need a ministry baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire. There is no subject before the Church of Christ to-day of such tremendous import as this. What the Church needs most—more than gold and silver; more than social influence; more than all with which the world can dower her—is the personal power of the Holy Ghost. A preacher without the Holy Ghost is like a professor giving his students a lecture on botany at midnight. Gentlemen, he says, if you will only stoop down and feel these flowers, you will perceive how exquisite is their structure, and how various their growth. But botany cannot be studied at midnight. And Christ cannot be preached at midnight either, without the Holy Ghost.

Thirdly: We need a ministry courageous and outspoken for the truth. Let us hold tenaciously to the truth. Under no pressure whatever let us offer any compromise; any adaptations of the Word to suit the haughty demands of an imperious criticism or sneering unbelief. Especially to the younger clergy would I say: Fear not, and though a thousand brilliant men affirm they have disproved some point of Revelation, believe them not. They are blind leaders of the blind. The Egyptians whom ye see to-day, ye shall see them again no more forever. And let us stand as Protestants for the Scriptural and Evangelical teaching as set forth in the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, and sealed with the blood of martyred bishops.

Fourthly: We need a ministry understanding the relative position of the Church to the world. The fierce demand of the world is that we should conform to its ideas, its pleasures, and its aims; the precept of Christ that we should come out and be separated from it. The world's cry is "compromise"; Christ's "separation." Dice and gambling, lotteries and grab-bags, even theatrical exhibitions, farces and comedies are brought into requisition now by some to advance the cause of Jesus Christ. Against them all, root and branch, I enter my most solemn and determined protest.

Fifthly: We need a ministry thoroughly alive to the great necessity of missionary activity. Everywhere, as with the impulse of a new life, we see the Church awakening to do her long-forgotten work in the great harvest fields of the world. For centuries the Church was utterly and culpably indifferent to the transcendent importance of obedience in this respect. Now she is everywhere awakening. And what does it all mean? It means that the way of the Lord is being prepared, and the highway in the desert made straight for our God. It means that ere long the trumpet shall sound; that the dead shall be raised, and we caught up to meet the Lord in the air.

Take the charm "forever" from them and
They crumble into dust.
—Tennyson.

Our failure to make greater headway in winning converts to Christianity is not so much the failure of our missionary undertakings as the failure of the individual Christian to live the Christian life in all its fulness.

"Love thyself. Look near, behold thy duty
To those who walk beside thee down life's road;
Make glad their days by little acts of beauty,
And help them bear the burden of earth's load."

The older of two men was urging upon the younger the responsibility of a call to foreign missions. He gave an answer that has a very familiar ring, "I have never felt any direct call to that kind of work".

"Are you sure you are within calling distance?" was the disquieting reply.

I never know Thee, Lord, until
My garden brought us face to face,
Revealed Thy gracious miracle
Of sun and seed in little space.
—Haley.

Once let this conviction flood the soul of the believer that the risen Lord is Himself coming back, and may at any time turn His promise into His presence, and the outpouring of consecrated gifts and devoted lives for the sake of the lost becomes a breaking of the alabaster box flask upon the feet of Jesus, and there is a 'purpose" in this "waste". John may solve what to Judas is a mystery.—A. T. Pierson.

God bless still the generous thought,
And still the fitting word He speeds,
And truth, at His requiring taught,
He quickens into deeds.
—Whittier.

Wherever you meet a man differing from you remember that you differ from him, and that your difference is to him is as great and offensive as his is to you. —T. W. M. Land.

If people truly realized that Christ was incarnate in them, and that their lives were hid with Him in God, the wrongs of the world would have no choice but to right themselves at once. —L. Humphrey.

TRAITORS TO OUR PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN AMERICA

As a unit of the "Anglo-Catholic" party, "The Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic", is rendering yeoman service in the work of "Catholicizing" the Protestant Episcopal Church. The Chaplain-General of this Society is the Rev. W. Jusserand de Forest (a clergyman ordained in our Church), of Brooklyn, N. Y., and its Secretary-General is Miss Virginia Yerger, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Under the classification of "Organizations for Devotional Purposes", in "The Living Church Annual", implied, at least, with the sanction of the Church, we find the rules of "The Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic" thus stated:

"To say daily the decade of the Rosary as appointed by the quarterly intention card. To receive Holy Communion on the Feast of the Most Holy Rosary, October 7. To hear Mass on St. Dominic's Day, August 4. It is the duty of Rosarians to conform to the practices of the Universal Church, especially with regard to Fasting Communion and Sacramental Confession, and to attendance at Mass on all Sundays of the year and Holy Days of Obligation."

This Society is broadcasting throughout the Protestant Episcopal Church a leaflet, which is here reproduced:

"The Rosaries of S. Sabina.

"The beads which form the Rosaries of S. Sabina are taken from the fruit of the plant commonly called the Thorn of Christ 'Spina Christi'.

"Enclosed in the Cross is a little piece of the wood of the orange tree which pious tradition says was planted by S. Dominic in the Convent garden of S. Sabina.

"These Rosaries when sold or ordered are blessed and enriched with the Indulgences of the Rosary Confraternity and with those called des Peres Croisiers, with the Papal Indulgences and S. Brigida. To the Crucifix are attached the Indulgences for a happy death and those of the Via Crucis for sick who cannot practice this devotion otherwise. When blessed, the Rosaries may be distributed; but, if resold, they lose all the Indulgences.

"The true Rosaries known as the 'Thorn of Christ' are sold only at the Church of St. Sabina.

"(With ecclesiastical approbation.)"

The leaflet bears some typographical errors, and at the bottom of it appear the words:

"This slip are printed in Rome, which accounts for errors in printing.—V. Y."

To those familiar with the teachings of Bishops, Clergy and laity engaged in the "Anglo-Catholic", or "Back to Rome" movement in the Protestant Episcopal Church, the statements contained in this leaflet concerning Papal Indulgences for a happy death and Indulgences Via Crucis for the sick constitute no surprise, particularly when considered in connection with the operations of another Romanizing Society in the Church, "The Confraternity of Unity", which plainly says that its purpose is to "Catholicize" and unite our Church with that of Rome.

But, at the bottom of this leaflet appear the words, "With ecclesiastical approbation". It will be observed that the distributors of this leaflet have carefully refrained from stating with WHOSE "ecclesiastical approbation" it is being put out, but the inference plainly intended to be drawn from this expression is that the leaflet is being published and sent out "With ecclesiastical approbation" of some one in authority in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

We are frank to say that we do not know what to think of the Bishops and Clergy of the Church. Turn to "The Living Church Annual". Look at the notice of "The Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defence of Catholic Principles" (p. 208). "Central Conference of Associated Catholic Priests" (p. 210). "The Federation of Catholic Priests" (p. 210). "Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ" (p. 213). "The Guild of All Souls" (p. 213). "Guild of the Love of God" (p. 213). "Living Rosary of Our Lady and St. Dominic" (p. 218). Monastic Orders on page 219. Sisterhoods on pages 220 to 223. Think of the secret Order, known as "The Order of the Nail", headquarters at Stamford, Conn. Yet the Bishops and Clergy stand by without saying a word. Our confidence in them is rapidly dwindling. Our own judgment is that this sort of thing cannot go very much farther without wholesale defections from the Church.

If the "ecclesiastical approbation" referred to is only that of officials of the Church of Rome, when did they acquire the right to promulgate literature in the Protestant Episcopal Church under their imprimatur?

If, on the other hand, the "ecclesiastical approbation" is that of ecclesiastical officials of the Protestant Episcopal Church, WHO ARE THEY? And what right have they to lend "ecclesiastical approbation" to any such publication as this in the Protestant Episcopal Church?

Is the "doctrine, discipline and worship" of the Church a mere fiasco?

Are there left no Protestant Episcopalian Bishops, Clergy or laity with the loyalty and the courage to get together NOW and say once for all that this process of Romanizing the Church shall cease and that its Protestant heritage SHALL be preserved?

We strongly urge all good Roman Catholics to leave our Protestant Episcopal Church and enter the Roman Catholic Church for which we have the profoundest respect. "Verbum Sap."

Langbourne Meade Willims.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Mildred D'Apire, of New York City:

> . . . Man looked on the outward appearance, but the Lord looked on the heart.
> . . . There is no difference: for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God.
> But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name. 1 Sam. 16:7; Rom. 3:22, 23; John 1:12.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well as very near us?

WE BELIEVE THAT THOU SHALT COME

By Kenneth Mackenzie

XIII.

As inscrutably surpassing all thought is that our sins are not to be called into question as we stand before the Lord Jesus as He sits upon His bema (2 Cor. 5: 10), equally impressive is the truth that our accountability before Him will be in the presence only of believers. That must essentially be a family affair. No hostile force, no intermeddling agent may there obtrude. We deeply appreciate the delicacy which characterizes the well-managed household where praise or reproof of a child is withheld until the guest has departed. So, here the shortcomings, as well as the victorious achievements of His own will be strictly guarded.

Salvation and Tried Discipleship are two classifications of the servants of the King. "Many are the saved ones, but few become eminent" (Matt. 20: 16). Of those who sing the "new song" myriads will be recorded; but the distinguished saints, as always here on earth, are few. To be saved, but one condition is required: Faith in the Lord Jesus as the Redeemer (John 3:16; 5: 24; Acts 16:30, 31; Rom. 8:1; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Peter 2:24; Rev. 1:5). Quite another class are they who enter the lists for spiritual conquest and culture. In the former category are the recipients of mercy (Eph. 2:8; Titus 3:5, 6); in the latter are the winners of the prize (Phil. 3:14). In the former are the redeemed by the blood of the Lamb (Rev. 5:9, 10). In the latter are they who have shed their blood for the glory of the Lamb (2 Cor. 4:7-12; 6:9; 11: 24-27). In the former, life is conferred (John 3:36; 1 John 5:12); in the latter are they who lay hold of "life indeed" (Phil. 3:10; 1 Tim. 6:12, 19). This is the burden of the teaching of the Talents and Pounds.

In each case, the servants are reckoned with regarding their use of the responsibility reposed in them by their Lord (Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 19:12-27). While the commendable servants are praised and rewarded, the negligent are held to strict accountability, according to the quality each possesses. There is no argument by which we may dismiss this contingency. We may deem that everybody should be treated alike in the heavenly assize; and it would be very comforting if such were the case for the sake of those who would be "carried to heaven on flowery beds of ease". But we are dealing with revealed facts. If our Lord won His victory by death, they who would "follow in His train", can ask for nothing less. We are here not to obtain "Peace, prosperity and power" for selfish ends, but to be cultured in the processes of affliction that the purification may make us meet to be "partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light" (Col. 1:12). Therefore, we endure hardness (2 Tim. 2:3), we count it joy to fall into manifold trials (James 1:2-4), we walk through the fire gladly (1 Peter 1:7; 4:12, 13), we count not our lives dear unto the death (Rev. 12:11). He may have His ways of ordering this estate for us. We leave that with Him. Many are the means by which He can purify and ennoble us. Some must go deeper than others; they have the metal to endure the refining (Mal. 3:3); there are those who cannot; and to them He is considerate. Only, all should be willing to do and to bear as the way of the Lord may open. They who would excuse themselves are free to do so; and they will not lose their salvation. If there are those who have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (2 Peter 1:10,--), there are also those who have faith sufficient to be saved as though just escaping the fire (1 Cor. 3:11-15). That our service of Him may be winsome to us, He has established a system of rewards. Not only in the methods indicated in the parable of the talents and pounds, but the various crowns set forth by His apostles. There is first

The Crown of Life.

Its essential quality is the recognition of the value of suffering as a purifying and inter-related factor in the establishment of the union of the believer with his Lord. Once again we have to protest against the prevailing cults which issue the slogan of acquisition and worldly enjoyment. Epicureianism has no place in the Christian system of life. Joy there is, to be sure, but in the Lord only (Rom. 5:11; 15:13; Phil. 4:4). And be appraised of this—that by no means is that life one of gloominess or despair. Ever above the enduring Christian hangs the promise of compensation (2 Cor. 4:16-18). For in the eternal fitness of things, nothing is lost with God. Hence, it is to the man that endureth testing (James 1:12), to the saint that is faithful unto death (Rev. 2:10) that this crown is to be bestowed. And it is called the crown of life, because, the processes which precede its conferment are marked by a willingness to die to self, sense and sin. Not all are able to receive this. And that is why a crown awaits those who can.

The Incorruptible Crown

is prepared for those who have successfully won the race of spiritual attainment. There is a vein of sarcasm in St. Paul's reminder to the Galatian Christians, "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" (Gal. 5:7). There be many who are thus classified. Contending earnestly; continuing to the end; holding fast to the faith; these are testing elements for those who would merit this crown. The apostolic attitude is plainly indicated in the paragraph which describes this crown, "I bring my body into subjection, lest by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be disapproved" (1 Cor. 9:25-27). There is a challenge in this appeal. To hold ideals which are not experimentally vital; . . . this is the danger of a profession of loyalty which lacks the soulful confession of undying devotion to the person of our dear Lord Jesus. And these crowns imply the willingness on our part to have our wills crossed, our ways obstructed, our hopes blasted, our strength depleted, ourselves crucified that we may learn of Him how to translate the inscrutable into the realm of the divinely appointed. Only as we are willing to be broken down can we expect to be built up. This is a great mystery; but when we have learned it, we are able to impart to others the wealth of an experience that will enrich their lives. Such was the apostolic standard (2 Cor. 1:3-11).

The Crown of Glory

seems designed exclusively for the ministers of Christ (1 Peter 5:1-4). Here lie the three universal temptations which assail the man of God: The dull, dreary routine of service, lacking the fire of joyous enthusiasm; the ever-present problem of lucre; the disposition to lord it over the people of God. The Apostle gives us good advice and predicates the crown to those who will stand with him in the utmost humility and living trust in the provision and direction of the Lord. Happy the man who in the care and cure of souls meets the standard here set forth. The singularity of lies in simply the love of His appearing (2 Tim. 4:6-8). It would seem as though this might be an easy prize to win; but it is as difficult of obtainment as the others, for it involves such a close walk with the Lord as excludes all other heart satisfactions. How much do we love Him? How much do we long to be with Him? How much are we enamored of His promise to come again? How much are we disengaged from the world and its even legitimate appeals, as to declare that today, if it were His will, we should count the most desirable thing in all our horizon of hopes to be His coming to receive us unto Himself. In our physical death, ordinarily we are prepared for the event by the exhaustion of our physical powers; life loses its charm, the links that bind us are slowly dissolved as earth grows less appealing; even our love for our dearest melts away in the utter loss of power to hold them. The lure of eternity breaks with a new magnetism; and we go because God has graciously fitted us to go by the pathway of utter helplessness. But to love the appearing of the Lord in the high noon of activity, of absorption in the multitudinous appeals which draw us to service and gladsome accomplishment, is quite another experience. To many, it has seemed abnormal, unhealthy. But all such are devoid of the secret which lies beneath the love of His appearing. There can be no love of that until the soul is intoxicated with love to Himself. And this is compatible with the busiest life. Indeed, it is the only key to the success of the most fully occupied Christian. Our daily question should be, "How much is He to me now as I enter upon the demands of the coming hours?" Are all my works, "begun, continued and ended in Him?" "Is He to me this day, the One altogether lovely?"

The Crown of Righteousness

It is this He hungers for, waits for and grows weary in missing. The while we have it of His grace that we should cry in exultation, "Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee." And if we do, His appearing will of consequence be loved, for it will bring Him. And then when He comes to bestow the crowns, the joy of merely receiving a something as a reward for service and affection will evaporate in the greater truth that we obtain because it gives Him pleasure to bestow (Acts 20:35).

TRINITY SUNDAY

Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Almighty and everlasting God, who hast given unto us, Thy servants, grace by the confession of a true faith, to acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity, and in the power of the Divine Majesty to worship the Unity; We beseech Thee that Thou wouldst keep us steadfast in this faith, and evermore defend us from all adversities, who livest and reignest, one God, world without end. Amen.

IN the ascriptions of this collect we find the attitude of the Church toward the doctrine of the Trinity; we "acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity", and "in the power of the divine majesty we worship the Unity", who lives and reigns "one God, world without end".

It is doubtful to the mind of this writer whether any better knowledge is gained of this greatest mystery of the Bible by the iterations of the Athanasian Creed (the "Quincunque Vult" of the English Book of Common Prayer), which was left out of our Prayer Book, wisely, as it seems to me. It is an effort to make, in some measure, at least, comprehensible that which is incomprehensible, as the Creed itself declares; for (says this Creed), "The Catholic faith is this, that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in unity . . . the Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible, and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible . . . ."

Let us approach in the spirit of James Montgomery's hymn:

"Meekly may my soul receive
All the Spirit hath revealed;
Thou hast spoken, I believe,
Though the oracle be sealed.
Humble as a little child,
Weaned from his mother's breast.
By no subtleties beguiled,
On Thy faithful word I rest . . ."

THE portion appointed for the Epistle is Rev. 4:1-11. John Ruskin says, "Of that which is more than creature no creature ever conceived".

Poetry is the most expressive of the fine arts; but even poetry of the highest order, like this description of the throne that St. John saw, set up in heaven, and of Him, the one God that sat thereon, must fail (according to this canon of Ruskin) to give us any due conception of the Deity enthroned in heaven; and Ruskin goes on to say: "I believe that all who are acquainted with the range of sacred art will admit not only that no representation of Christ has ever been evenly partially successful, but that the greatest painters fall therein below their accustomed level: Perugino and Fra Angelico especially; Leonardo (da Vinci) has, I think, done best; but perhaps the beauty of the fragment left at Milan (for in spite of all that is said of repainting and destruction, that Cernacolo (Last Supper) is still the finest in existence) is as much dependent on the very untraceableness resulting from injury, as on its original perfection. Of more daring attempts at representation of Divinity we need not speak; only this is to be noted respecting them, that though by the ignorant Romanists many such efforts were made under the idea of actual representation by the nobler among them, I suppose they were intended and by us at any rate, may always be received, as mere symbols, the noblest that could be employed, but as much symbols still, as a triangle, or the Alpha and Omega; nor do I think that the most scrupulous among Christians ought to desire to exchange the power obtained by the use of this symbol in Michael Angelo's creation of Adam and Eve, for the effect which would be produced by the substitution of a triangle or any other sign in place of it."

The readings of Scripture appointed by the Church for Trinity Sunday in Epistle, Gospel and morning and evening lessons, give us very full proof of the doctrine of the Trinity. This portion appointed for the Epistle, sets before us by glorious symbols the Unity of the Godhead accepting the tribute of glory, honor, and thanks of the four living creatures and the worship of the four and twenty elders, who "cast their crowns before the throne, saying: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor, and power; for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure they are, and were created." And the Gospel which we shall consider presently, brings before us clearly God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. The Old Testament lessons for morning and evening are the first and second chapters of Genesis.

Of these lessons Bishop Coxe says: "The Church now begins to read the Old Testament anew, and recurs to the first chapter of Genesis; but, lo, a hint of the Trinity meets us in the very first chapter of the Bible; 'In the beginning God created'; even here we have in the Hebrew a noun (Elohim), plural, and verb singular—plurality and unity in the name of God in the very first verse of the Bible. So the Spirit moves on the face of the waters. Again, God said: 'Let us make man in Our image, after Our likeness'; and so God created man in His own image—plurality in unity, once more."

Bishop Coxe also notes an important point that the Church "in the word Trinity (note, the word Trinity does not occur in the Bible) simply sums up what is revealed concerning Him; that in substance He is One, but in Person, Three. In this there is nothing contradictory; for it is not asserted that He is three in the same sense in which He is one. But yet, it is something mysterious; for we know not how this Unity of substance consists with this Trinity of Persons. Nor do we know anything of God which He has not told us; nor is there anything told us of God which is not mysterious. The Father could not make us acquainted with the Son and the Spirit without giving us knowledge of mysterious facts in the divine nature. Now, the Gospel consists in revelations of the Son and of the Spirit in their divinity and offices; and thus the Trinity is the fundamental verity of the Gospel. It is taught us not as an enigma, nor as an arbitrary communication of faith, but practically, as the basis of all that we must know and do as Christians."

Can there be greater folly than to reject the Bible because of its mysteries? We accept and walk by the mysteries of electricity and gravitation, and other material and finite forces, and woe be to the man who is careless about them. But far greater woe must be to him who is careless as to the Bible, the "mystery of mysteries".

THE Gospel for Trinity Sunday is St. John 3:1-16. This Scripture is no doubt selected for our instruction on this Sunday because it brings before us, all together the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Jesus the Son, tells Nicodemus of the Kingdom of God (the Triune God), into which there is no entrance save through the new birth of the Spirit. If verses 16 and 17 had been taken into this Gospel, it had been better (as it seems to this writer); for then God would have been more clearly set before our eyes in relation to His Son, in that most beautiful text: "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son: that whosoever believeth in Him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."

Dr. William Smith in his dictionary (title, "Jesus Christ") says of this teaching of "Jesus Christ": "It has been well said that this discourse contains the whole Gospel in epitome." If so, and it is so, it should be read and considered very carefully, as containing all that is necessary to salvation. Nicodemus' attitude toward his teacher is noteworthy. He is evidently an anxious inquirer and seeker after truth; for he evidently runs some risk of loss of reputation, if he should be caught talking with this Nazarene, perhaps even of persecution. He places himself in the attitude of a disciple before a Teacher of the highest authority, "come from God", though he does not as yet recognize Him as God. Yet God is with Him; for no man could do such miracles, except God be with Him. He asks no question; just waits for the message he hopes for from this prophet who speaks for God. Jesus, seeing into his heart and knowing his ignorance and where he most needed instruction, tells him of the work of the Triune God in the Gospel; the love of God the Father, the redemption wrought by the Son, and the new birth of the Holy Spirit. Of the love of God, Nicodemus, as a devout Jew, could not have been ignorant; for, though he had not the teaching of the New Testament which we have, showing in all its fulness the love of God, that God so loved the world as to sacrifice His Son, His only Son, for it; yet the Old Testament abundantly testifies to the love of God for His chosen people, of whom Nicodemus was one, and a devout one, well instructed in the Old Testament Scriptures. Had Jesus said, "God so loved His chosen people that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life", leaving the Gentiles to His uncovenanted mercies, Nicodemus and His people would have listened more patiently to Jesus' teaching. That would have accorded well with what they thought God taught in the Old Testament, and with such Psalms as No. 136 (sung at the Passover), of which the refrain is, "For His mercy endureth forever"; but it is mercy to His chosen people, not to Gentiles, who in that Psalm have little mercy shown them by the God "who (as the Psalmist sings) smote Egypt, with her first-born; for His mercy endureth forever." Jesus knew that it was the work of the Holy Ghost to enlighten the mind of this honest seeker after truth; and so dwells on the part taken by the third Person of the Trinity in the salvation of mankind.

And so the Church Catechisms teaches: "God the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth me and all the people of God."

Of this passage of St. John (selected by the Church for our instruction on this great festival) Ryle (Bishop of Liverpool) in his "Expository Thoughts on the Gospels" says most truly: "One other thing ought to be remarked in leaving this subject of our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus. That thing is the singular fulness of matter by which the whole of our Lord's address is characterized. Within the space of twenty verses (our Gospel gives only fifteen, but, as said above, should have included the whole conversation), we read of the work of all Three Persons of the Trinity, the Father's love, the Son's death on the cross, and the Spirit's operation in the new birth of man, the corruption of man's nature, the nature of regeneration, and the efficacy of faith in Christ, the way to escape perishing in hell, the true cause of man's condemnation, if he is lost, and the true marks of sincerity in an inquirer. A fuller sermon was never delivered than that which was here preached to Nicodemus in one evening. There is hardly a single important point in divinity which is left untouched."

THE WONDER OF THE BOOK

By the Reverend Dyson Hague, M A.

The Wonder of Its Unification.

ANOTHER thing: We talk of this Bible as a Book. We seldom or never think of it as a Library. Very few of us, save those who have studied the matter, ever think of this book as a Library consisting of sixty-six separate volumes, written by between thirty and forty different authors, in three different languages, upon totally different topics and under extraordinarily different circumstances. One author wrote history, another biography, another about sanitary science and hygiene; one wrote on theology, another wrote poetry, another prophecy; some wrote on philosophy and jurisprudence, others on genealogy and ethnology, and some on stories of adventure and travel of romantic interest. Why, if these sixty-six books were printed separately, in large-sized print and heavy paper, and bound in morocco, I doubt if they could all stand on that table. And yet here we have them all, the whole sixty-six volumes, in a little book that a child can carry in its little hand. And the strangest thing of all is, that though their subjects are so diverse and so difficult, the most difficult and abstruse of all conceivable subjects, though there was no possibility of anything like concerted action or transfer of literary responsibility, for it was impossible for the man who wrote the first pages to have had the slightest knowledge what the men would write about who wrote one thousand five hundred years after he was born; yet this miscellaneous cento or collection of heterogeneous writings is not only unified by the binder in one book, but so unified by God the Author, that no one ever thinks of it today as anything else than One Book And One Book it is, the miracle of all literary unity.

The Wonder of Its Age.

Again, it is a wonder that that Book is here today. I say it is a wonder that we have a Bible at all when we think of its age. When we compare the Bible as a book with any other book in this respect it is a perfect wonder. I will tell you why. You all know that the greatest test of literature is time. Do you know of any book that is read by any one today to speak of, that was written one thousand years ago? Books that were the rage a few years ago are forgotten today. Whoever thinks nowadays of reading "Robert Ellesmere", or asks a bookstore for Rider Haggard's "She?" Why, poor "David Harum" is almost unsalable, and we will soon hear nothing of "The Rosary". These books were born, were boomed, and died. The cold hand of oblivion is laid upon them. Heb. 8:13. Their force is spent. Their power is gone. They were literary sky rockets; they are like "Ta ra ra boom de aye". Where is the book, after all, that is five hundred years old and read by the masses nowadays, for, as we said, a book that is one thousand, or two thousand, or three thousand years old is read by nobody. Horace and Homer may be studied by students of the classics, and school-boys may have Virgil and Xenophon thrashed into them, but whoever thinks of reading them? They are dead books in dead languages. For you can put it down for a certainty that the older a book is the smaller is its chance of surviving, or being read by people of diverse nationalities. Another thing. No book ever has had much chance of being circulated widely amongst a people from which it did not originate. No book, for instance, written by a Spaniard has much chance of being read by Germans. German works are read by Germans; English works by Englishmen. I know that I never could enjoy "Old Mortality", for I am not a Scot. What book do you know of, with a few great exceptions, such as Dante, Cervantes, Goethe, Dumas, Shakespeare, that has been able to overleap the bounds of nationality; and as to Turkey, India, or Mexico, or Brazil, what man out of a hundred could tell you whether they had any authors, or if they had, the name of one of their works. But the marvelous thing about the Bible is, that it is the only book in the world that has not only overleaped the barrier of time, but it is the only book in the whole world that has been able to overleap the barrier of nationality. It was written largely in a dead language, for the Hebrew language is not a language that is either spoken or written today; and yet that Book, written in a dead language, written by men who died two thousand or three thousand years ago, is not only living today but it is the most widely-circulated book in the world.

The Wonder of Its Sale.

Surely this is another marvelous thing. The Old Book is easily the best seller of the day. A leading bookseller was asked what book has the largest circulation. He did not mention the most recent novel or the latest scientific work. He said that the book which out-sells all the other books in the world was the book called the Bible. Other books compute their circulation by thousands; the Bible by millions. And yet the man on the street never thinks of this book as a book that was written in a dead language over two or three thousand years ago.

The Wonder of Its Interest.

Another marvelous thing about this book is that it is the only book in the world read by all classes and all sorts of people. You know very well that literary people rarely read a child's book, and children would not read books of philosophy and science even if they could. If a book is philosophical and scientific it commands the attention of literary people, and if it is a child's book it is read in the nursery. A wonderful thing it is to think that there is one book that differs from all others; a book that is read to the little child and read by the old man as he trembles on the brink of the other world. Years ago I heard the nurse reading a story to my child, and I said to her, "What is it that you are reading to the little one?" "I am reading the story of Joseph in the Bible," she answered. And the little child, in excitement, cried, "Please don't stop her, please," as she listened with delighted interest to the reading of a book that was written in Hebrew probably three thousand five hundred years ago. And not far away from the room where the little child was listening, there sat one of the noblest of modern minds, one of the greatest of modern scientists, our foremost Canadian scholar, the great Sir William Dawson, President of McGill College, Montreal, reading with profound devotion and a higher delight the pages of that same marvelous Book. Here is a phenomenon. One of the ablest of modern scientists delights in the reading of a book which is the joy of a little child in the nursery. Verily, it is without a parallel in literature. Our boys and girls read and study it in myriads of homes and Sunday Schools, and great scholars like Newton, and Herschel, and Faraday and Brewster, and great statesmen like Gladstone and Lee, and great soldiers like Gustavus Adolphus, and Gordon, and Stonewall Jackson, have taken this book as the joy and the guide of their life.

Book Reviews

IN TOUCH WITH CHRIST: Sermons by James Reid, M. A., of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Eastbourne. Published by Doubleday, Doran Company, Garden City, New York. Price $2.00.

This book of sermons has the quality of freshness. They are simple in their treatment of the deep things of the gospel and easily understood. Lay readers will find them useful when they are searching for a sermon to use in the absence of the rector.

It is good to find a living faith in a book of sermons in this day when the printing press is turning out numbers that have no real claim even to be called Christian.

SHADOW AND SUBSTANCE: By George C. Needham; with an Introduction by Dr. James G. Gray. Cloth. Pp. 199. Published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill. Price, $1.25 net.

Those of us who recall George Needham and his splendid work in connection with the Moody campaign of 1876 and subsequently will welcome back this book as the resurrection of a truth for which he held high esteem. The typology of the Old Testament is all too lightly discarded today. In our zest for social service and our infection of modernism, the sweet, deep involving of our Lord in the Old Testament types and prophecies, are almost scornfully repudiated. George Needham calls us back to our spiritual senses.

Here are interwoven the threads of both Testaments in a completed fabric of design and beauty. There is a winsome power in the study of these tabernacle furnishings and the ritual connected with the same to bring us into harmony with the divine purpose. The child of God who can see our Lord Jesus in the old order, all the way from the promise to Eve, that her child should bruise the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15) to the close of the prophetic period is blessed indeed with spiritual insight. And George Needham helps to this end.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS."

Mr. Editor:

I was impressed a few days ago by the statement that, from the Scriptural point of view, there are just three different men in the world—the Jew, the Gentile, and the Christian; and that the supreme ambition of every genuine Christian is to bring Jew and Gentile together in eternal friendship in the mind and Spirit of Christ. In other words, Jesus of Nazareth is the world's Reconciler. He Himself, though in His human nature of Hebrew origin, nevertheless stretches out His hands to both Jew and Gentiles as the Divine Founder of Christianity.

I desire to draw the attention of readers of The Southern Churchman to a very remarkable passage in the third chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, running from verse nineteen. The Revised Version has rendered splendid service in this passage by its accurate translation of the Greek. The occasion is shortly after the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, and St. Peter is appealing to his fellow-Hebrews. He has, himself, become a Christian, but he has obviously not ceased to be a Jew. Like St. Paul long afterward, Peter's deepest heart is set on the repentance and conversion of the Jewish people. Until the Hebrew becomes a Christian he is as incomplete at the Old Testament without the New. The Bible, as a whole, is from first to last a Jewish book, in which is enshrined the world's Redeemer.

Now, with these thoughts in mind, let us quote from the Revised Version the passage above mentioned:

"Repent ye therefore," cries St. Peter to the Jews, "and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and that He may send the Christ who hath been appointed for you, even Jesus; whom the Heaven must receive until the times of restoration of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of His holy prophets, which have been since the world began."

I humbly submit that this passage makes the return of Christ, and the restoration of all things, dependent or contingent upon the repentance of the Hebrew people and that the Bible is full of prophecies to the same effect. The capture of the Holy Land and city by Old England, and their deliverance from the long oppression of the Turk, are surely a Divine movement toward the longed-for conversion and restoration of all Israel as "life from the dead" to the world.

How any enlightened Christian can fail to be a genuine friend of the Jew is, to me, almost incomprehensible. Who can ever forget Christ's heart-moving farewell to the City and House which His Father had chosen to put His name there?

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not! Behold, your House is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see Me henceforth until ye shall say, 'Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord'."

Here is Peter's Master confirming Peter's words before they are spoken. The Jews shall see Christ again, but not until they are ready to welcome Him, like Thomas, as their Lord and their God.

ENCOURAGING.

Mr. Editor:

Yes, I had noted with interest the publication in The Southern Churchman of the article expressing Captain Robert Dollar's views on prohibition, and let me say right here that I have found The Southern Churchman one of the most intensely interesting religious papers that come into my home. I get a great many of many denominations, but in none of them do I find a more deeply consecrated, spiritual atmosphere than in The Southern Churchman. I greatly rejoice in your control of that paper, the spirit in which it is being edited and the magnificent work that is being done by it. While, as you know, I am a Baptist, I read very largely of many papers of different denominations. Some of them I skim hastily, merely to get denominational news, but a few of them, like The Southern Churchman, appeal mightily to me from the deep spiritual life they represent.

"SATAN IS BUSY."

Mr. Editor:

The Southern Churchman for May 11 is something for you to be proud of. Go on exposing to the extent of your ability, all the filth, the false teaching, the anti-Christian doctrine, which Satan is so busy at work upon in this day and time. He thinks that it is for the establishment of his kingdom. He has not long to wait before he is undeceived, for our King is on the way, and soon will appear for those of us who are looking for Him, with such intense longing.

. . . . Again I say, may God richly bless you in your work of trying to keep clean the outposts of His Kingdom in this world. I am simply heart-sick over it all.

Yours in the work of our Lord,

SUMMER SCHOOLS AND CONFERENCES

DALLAS, TEXAS.

The Summer School of the Diocese of Dallas will be held June 11-19 (inclusive), at St. Mary's College, Ross and Garrett Avenues, Dallas, Texas.

All church workers and interested persons, young and old, are invited. Seniors in high school and young people over seventeen will find the courses for young people specially suitable.

Tuition is $3.50 and room and board $12 for the session.

Bishop Moore is President of the school.

Applications should be sent to the Registrar: Mr. I. T. Holloway, 1227 Kirby Building, Dallas.

KANUGA LAKE, NEAR HENDERSONVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA.

The Kanuga Conferences will be held again this summer at Kanuga Lake, near Hendersonville, N. C. The Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, President of the Conferences, and his co-workers have secured an excellent group of leaders and have made other provision for the various phases of the work.

The Dioceses of Western North Carolina, East Carolina, South Carolina, and Upper South Carolina are taking part in every activity of this new center of the Church's life. The Diocese of North Carolina is taking part in some of the conferences, and the Diocese of Georgia is for the first time planning to send a group of young people to the first conference.

The Diocese of Western North Carolina, in whose territory the grounds are located, is to open the season at Kanuga with her annual joint Diocesan and Woman's Auxiliary Convention on June 12.

The first gathering of a general nature is a Young People's Conference for boys and girls from fourteen years up, June 17-29. Bishop Finlay is Director of this conference, assisted by the Rev. I. deL. Brayshaw, of Wilmington, N. C. The Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., of Charleston, is Dean of Faculty. This will probably be the largest group of the summer, some three hundred expected. The courses are on the Bible, Church School Work, Y. P. S. L. Work and Methods, Church History, and various other subjects for training in the Church's life and work.

Following this are two groups for boys and girls under fourteen years, meeting June 29 to July 12. The Junior Girls' Conference is under the direction of Bishop Finlay. They will live in the hotel property and will be under the direct supervision of a group of cottage mothers. The Junior Boys' Camp will be under the direction of the Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, of Columbia, S. C. The boys will live in tents about a quarter of a mile from the central buildings. With them in the camp will be a group of clergy and other young men as counselors. These groups have a lighter course of study on the Bible, Prayer Book, and Missionary Heroes, and much time for recreation and scoutcraft.

The Adult Conferences open July 16 and close July 28. They are for Clergy, Church School Workers, and Woman's Auxiliary. The Director is the Rev. J. W. Cantey Johnson, of Gastonia, N. C., assisted by Dr. Starr, and by the Rev. W. R. Noe, of Wilmington, N. C., who is Director of the Clergy Conference. This group has an elaborate course of study, following the National Accredited Teachers' Association recommendations.

After these Conferences the property will be used as a hotel under the direction of the Church. The main building with four annexes and thirty-nine cottages and recreation hall and lake renders it easily adaptable to this purpose. This in turn enables the Church to finance this splendid work among the young people and to gather many people from the Carolina Dioceses and elsewhere for valuable informal contacts.

The season at Kanuga will close with Field Department Conferences. For the clergy the dates are September 5-6, for the laymen, September 7-8.

OCEAN CITY, MARYLAND.

The eleventh annual session of the Peninsula Summer Conference under the direction of the Dioceses of Delaware and Easton, will be held at Ocean City, Maryland, June 23-28.

The Conference is for all Church people, who are interested in the work of the Church. Courses have been assigned that will appeal not only to Church School teachers, members of the Woman's Auxiliary, Young People and Clergy, but also to all interested Church people.

The Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of Easton, is President and the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., is Vice-President and Chaplain.

The appealing feature of the Conference is the happy combination of 'business and pleasure" it accomplishes. Both the Conference building and the Church building are within a stone's throw of the ocean, and the hotels for Conference people are on the Boardwalk itself.

For information address: The Rev. P. L. Donaghey, Middletown, Delaware. For registration and reservation of rooms address: The Rev. Charles L. Atwater, Chestertown, Maryland.

BETHLEHEM, PENNSYLVANIA.

"A larger and better school" is the slogan of the Department of Religious Education for the Bethlehem Summer Conference to be held again at Bishopthorpe Manor, Bethlehem, Pa., June 24-29, 1929. An excellent faculty has been secured. The School will specialize in young people's work, but something is also provided for the older generation, as there was quite a demand for it. The indications are that this school will be the largest in the history of the diocese.

A registration fee of $2 should be sent as soon as possible to Mrs. Frank Van Geison, Registrar, Allentown, R. D., Pennsylvania.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

The ninth National Conference on Social Service of the Episcopal Church will be held June 26-30, at Hotel Whitcomb, Civic Center and Market Street, San Francisco, California.

The Program of the great Conference has twelve divisions, including Children, the Family, Neighborhood and Community Life, Mental Hygiene, etc., from which to choose.

Membership in the National Conference of Social Work costs $3 and check may be forwarded to the General Secretary, 277 East Long Street, Columbus, Ohio.

The officers of the Conference are: President, Rev. C. N. Lathrop, First Vice-President, the Rev. R. Cary Montague; Second Vice-President, the Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed; Chaplain, the Rt. Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D.; Secretary, the Rev. LeRoy S. Burroughs.

It is requested that reservations be made before June 1 through the Department of Christian Social Service, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

DELAWARE, NEW JERSEY.

The Girls' Friendly Society is planning a national conference for younger members to be held June 28-July 5 at the beautiful new holiday house at Delaware, New Jersey. This conference is a new venture for the society and is arousing interest all over the country. It is unusual in that its program has been largely planned by the girls themselves. Last November a committee of girls of high school age, from fourteen dioceses met at Monroe, New York, to decide what they would like to have included in a week's conference. The program which follows is based upon their suggestions.

There will be classes on: Religion for Seven Days in the Week—this will be a discussion course which will attempt to answer such questions as: What is God? How can prayer help me? The Art of Living—this course will be led by a woman physician who will answer such questions as: How can we be our best and most charming selves? How are mental, spiritual and physical health interrelated? The Girls' Friendly Society—this class will include history, organization, and definite program suggestions. Special features will be: story telling; vocational guidance; dramatics; sports; good-night groups.

Although intended primarily for younger members of the Girls' Friendly Society, this conference is open to all girls between the ages of fourteen and seventeen, inclusive. Rectors are urged to send in to the national office of the society, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York City, the names of girls who would enjoy participating in a week of study, recreation, and worship with seventy other girls from all parts of the country. The registration fee is $2.50; board and room for the week will be $10.00.

MADISON, WISCONSIN.

The National Conferences on Rural Church Work will be held concurrently with the Rural Leadership Summer Schools of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin, July 1-12, inclusive.

The Madison School: Among the very first of its kind in point of organization, the Madison School ranks among the first in value of courses offered. Arranged in cycles, the curriculum includes courses on "Sociology of Community Life", "The Church in the Country", "Family Social Work", "Personality and Social Adjustment", etc. The lecturers include Professor R. J. Colbert, loyal Churchman and friend of rural people, Professor J. H. Kolb, Dean of the School, and H. L. Ewbank.

Clergy Conference: Two series of Conferences will be conducted by the Division for Rural Work, one for clergy of the Church and another for women interested in rural work. The conference leaders include the Rt. Rev. H. H. Fox, D. D., Coadjutor Bishop of Montana; the Rev. C. R. Allison, Chairman of the Committee on Rural Work of the Second Province; the Rev. W. C. Treat, of Western Massachusetts; Captain Conder, of the Church Army, and the Rev. John Irwin, of the National Council.

The clergy will live and board at Zeta Psi Fraternity House, as in years past. Daily Celebrations of the Holy Communion will be held and an exhibit of maps, charts and materials useful in developing rural church work will be set up.

The Secretary for Rural Work, the Rev. H. W. Foreman, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, is in charge of the clergy conferences and will be glad to answer any and all correspondence concerning the School or Conferences. Scholarship aid will be granted to those needing such assistance.

The Women's Conference on Rural Work will be in charge of Miss Edna B. Beardsley, Assistant Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary. In anticipation of a larger number of women from other denominations than our own, the secretaries for rural work of various denominational boards have asked Miss Anna Clark, Secretary for Rural Work of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., to act as group leader for all non-Episcopalian women.

All women interested in the Church's rural work are invited to attend, especially women doing diocesan work in village or country, women holding important positions in national and diocesan women's organizations, those charged with, or anxious to do, rural work of any kind, and wives of clergy.

Inasmuch as accommodations are limited, registrations should be made with Miss Beardsley, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, at the earliest possible moment. Room and board amount to about $30, over and above transportation to and from Madison.

HOOD COLLEGE, FREDERICK, MARYLAND.

The Blue Mountain Conference meets for the fourth time at Hood College, Frederick, Maryland, July 8-19.

The President is the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Overs, S. T. D., Ph. D., Retired Bishop of the Missionary District of Liberia, and the Chaplain is the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

The Blue Mountain Conference is a General Church Conference. Its Governing Board is from the Church at large; its courses cover all fields of Church activity; its faculty represents all types of thought, its appeal is to all those to whom the life and work of the Church are a real concern.

With its motto "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life", and with its keynote "Personal Religion", this Conference enters its fourth year. It is hoped that those who attend may see the Way more clearly, understand the Truth more surely, and follow the Life more faithfully.

A new departure this summer is the Children's Conference, which is under the direction of Deaconess Frances Edwards, of the National Department of Religious Education. The children, who will be from four to twelve years of age, inclusive, will be housed in the Infirmary and divided into Kindergarten, Primary and Junior sections, each one in charge of a competent leader. For information apply to Miss Helen C. Washburn, 2030 DeLancey Place, Philadelphia, Pa.

For general information write to the Executive Officer, the Rev. N. B. Groton, Whitemarsh, Pa.

BLUE RIDGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

An important innovation which should meet a long-felt need and consequently deserves every encouragement is the School of Recreational Leadership to be conducted this year for the first time at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, the famous Southern Assembly Ground, beginning July 18 and running through August 8.

Every thoughtful person, of course, is conscious of the serious lack of trained leadership for the recreational life of our young people, but so far very little has been done to develop such leadership. The Blue Ridge Association, which for nearly twenty years has been conducting a Southwide center for religious leadership and training, is undertaking this year to supply the need by putting on a thorough-going three weeks' recreation school. A dozen courses will be given by specialists, dealing with almost every phase of boys' work, Sunday-school and scout activities, girls' clubs, indoor and outdoor play, nature study, etc. Among those already engaged to teach are Prof. W. L. Stone, Dr. R. E. Baber, Dr. J. L. Kesler, Miss Ruth Coble and A. B. Miles.

It is hoped that a great many young people will take advantage of this opportunity to fit themselves for more effective service, and that churches, Sunday schools, young people's societies and social service agencies will make the course available to many more. Dr. W. D. Weatherford, the Blue Ridge Executive, will be glad to correspond with any one interested and can be reached for the present at Y. M. C. A. Graduate School, Nashville, Tennessee.

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE.

Young people, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, are again assured of a happy and helpful Conference at Sewanee, Tennessee, during the month of August. The Young People's Division of the Sewanee Summer Training School for Workers will extend August 15-29.

The Division is again under the direction of the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of Florida, but this year Bishop Juhan will have as his Associate Director the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, Georgia. The Rev. Mr. Carpenter will have direct charge of the young people on the mountain.

In addition to Bishop Juhan and the Rev. Mr. Carpenter, many old friends of the young people of the Province will be with them. Mrs. Frank N. Challen, will have a course for advanced Y. P. S. L. work and for Counselors; the Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., will lead a course on the Devotional Study of the Prayer Book and another on Religion in Action; Miss Annie Morton Stout, will teach the Church School Curriculum; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, Church School Administration and Personal Evangelism; the Rev. E. L. Haines, Missions; the Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, the Life of Christ and the Rev. Capers Satterlee, a course on Church and College.

Three new members of the faculty will be Miss Margaret G. Weed, of Florida, who will give a course on Creed and Conduct; Miss Sarah Louise Starr, who will teach the Y. P. S. L. Beginners' Course, and the Rev. Julius A. Schaad, rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Georgia, and one time General Missioner of the Church, who will present a course which will be attended by all young people of the Conference, entitled The Christian Church and Youth. Each one of these courses, with the exception of those led by the Rev. Messrs. Schaad and Satterlee, and the Counselor's course, led by Mrs. Challen, will offer credits in the National Accredited Teachers' Association. During the Conference, the Sixth Annual Convention of the Young People's Service League of the Fourth Province will be held on the Mountain.

The Adult Division of the Summer School will open on August 1 and will continue through breakfast on the fifteenth. The Director of this Division will be the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of North Carolina.

The newly-elected President of the Board of Managers, the Rt. Rev. William G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop of Alabama, will, during the Adult Division, also be the Director of the newly-created Department of Advanced Leadership. This Department will, to some extent, take the place of the School of the Prophets which has this year been discontinued.

The Executive Secretary of the Summer School is Mrs. William P. Cornell, 325 Market Street, Jacksonville. Mrs. Cornell is also Registrar and Treasurer of the School, and all communications regarding reservations and registrations should be addressed to her.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

NORTHERN INDIANA.

A survey of the progress of the Church in the Diocese of Northern Indiana during the year of 1928 was given by the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, D. D., S. T. D., Bishop of the Diocese, in his annual address to the thirty-first Annual Council of the Diocese Wednesday, May 1, in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Mishawaka.

Certain definite steps of progress cited by Bishop Gray were the revival of work at Emmanuel Mission, Garrett, the acquisition by St. James' Church, Goshen, during the year of a parish house adjoining the present church building, the gift to Trinity Church, Michigan City, of $200,000 for replacing the present Barker Hall with a new concrete and steel construction fireproof parish house and community building; a $200 payment on the mortgage of Trinity (Hungarian) Church, South Bend, made by the congregation itself, the acquisition by St. James', South Bend, of a new rectory and the gift of approximately $100,000 for the building of a new library at Howe Military School.

"We are members one of another," the Bishop said, "and as we bear one another's burdens, so also as a Diocese do we share one another's joys. The progress in each parish is progress for the entire Diocese."

The triennial meeting of the General Convention was named by Bishop Gray as the chief event in the life of the Church during the past year. In conclusion, Bishop Gray said, "Whatever we build, cathedrals, churches, parish houses, hospitals or schools, all should be as sacramental symbols, outward and visible signs or expressions of that building of God, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens".

At the afternoon session a brief address was made to the Council by the Rev. F. G. Deis, General Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council.

Election of diocesan officers resulted as follows:

Standing Committee—The Very Rev. Lewis C. Rogers, the Rev. Walter J. Lockton, the Rev. Charles H. Young, S. T. D., the Rev. William J. Cordick, the Rev. Edward L. Roland.

Secretary of Diocese—The Very Rev. Lewis C. Rogers.

Assistant Secretary—The Rev. George J. Childs.

Treasurer of Diocese—Mr. Fred N. Smith.

Treasurer of Missionary Funds—Mr. Harry J. McSheehy.

Chancellor of Diocese—Mr. Gilbert A. Elliott (for three years).

Board of Examining Chaplains—The Very Rev. Lewis C. Rogers, the Ven. Howard R. White, the Rev. James E. Foster.

Trustee of Diocese—Mr. Thomas H. Brandon (for three years).

Diocesan Members of Cathedral Chapter—The Rev. Charles H. Young, S. T. D.; the Rev. William J. Cordick, Mr. Edward Borneman, Dr. George F. Hitchcock.

Members of Bishop and Council (for three years)—The Rev. Walter J. Lockton, the Rev. Forest B. B. Johnston, the Rev. William J. Cordick, Dr. George F. Hitchcock, Mr. Archie Price, Mr. Clark M. Groninger.

Clerical Deputies to Provincial Synod—The Rev. Lawrence C. Ferguson, the Rev. Edward L. Roland, the Very Rev. Lewis C. Rogers, the Rev. Forest B. B. Johnston.

Clerical Alternates to Provincial Synods—The Rev. Albert L. Schrock, the Ven. Howard R. White, the Rev. William J. Cordick, the Rev. James E. Foster.

Lay Deputies to Provincial Synod—Dr. George F. Hitchcock, Mr. Dean L. Barnhart, Mr. Henry P. Conkey, Mr. Clark M. Groninger.

Lay Alternates to Provincial Synod—Mr. Duncan J. Campbell, Mr. George U. Bingham, Mr. George Felker, Mr. F. B. Lewis.

On the preceding day the thirtieth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in St. James', South Bend. Approval of a new Constitution and By-Laws for the Auxiliary was effected. Election of officers and delegates resulted as follows:

President, Mrs. George F. Hitchcock (Plymouth).

First Vice-President, Miss Alice Goldthwaite (Marion).

Secretary, Miss Nellie Mullinex (South Bend).

Treasurer, Miss Gertrude Green (Fort Wayne).

U. T. O. Chairman, Mrs. W. J. Cordick (Plymouth).

Educational Secretary, Mrs. Robert Happ (South Bend).

Box Supply Secretary, Mrs. S. J. Pace (South Bend).

Chairman of Corporate Gift, Mrs. L. B. Faust (East Chicago).

Delegates to the House of Church Women—Mrs. George Hitchcock, Mrs. W. J. Lockton, Mrs. Gaylord Leslie, Mrs. L. S. Fickenscher, Miss Nellie Mullinex and Mrs. J. R. Adams.

A Book of Remembrance, compiled under the leadership of Miss Alice Goldthwaite, of Marion, Ind., was presented in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the Woman's Auxiliary in this Diocese. Written in this book are the names of women who have been active in the missionary work of the Church in all the various parishes and missions throughout the Diocese. Each branch has made contributions in memory of the women from their respective congregations. The fund, together with the book containing the names, was presented at the altar at a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 9 A. M. and at a luncheon in the Olivet Hotel the fund was formally received by the Bishop from Miss Goldthwaite and the Book of Remembrance placed in his custody.

An address to the women was made by Miss Elizabeth Matthews in the afternoon on "Adult Education". New educational methods and new and interesting books on Religious Education were discussed.

At the Diocesan dinner Tuesday evening in the Oliver Hotel, South Bend, Bishop McCormick, of Western Michigan, addressed the assembly on the need for a broadened view of life by church members. "The World War did much toward convincing us that we can no longer live in our own little world, but that we must have a universal and even a cosmic mind," the Bishop asserted. "It is necessary for us to study maps so that we may know what boundaries limit us and what greater fields there are to conquer. In the same way, by broadening our scope of understanding, we can extend the Church of God to limitless fields."

Members of Trinity (Hungarian) Mission, South Bend, opened the evening program with a group of Hungarian folk dances.

Miss Matthews spoke on "The Great Adventure".

DELAWARE.

The new church boarding school for boys (unnamed as yet), to which Mr. A. Felix duPont has given a million and a half dollars, was a chief theme of Bishop Philip Cook's address at the one hundred and forty-fourth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Delaware, which met May 7-8 in old St. Anne's Parish in Middletown.

Other subjects were the claims of religious education and the menace of lawlessness, which, said the Bishop, can be cured only by a greater reverence for constitutional authority.

The Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, speaking for the Department of Social Service, described the clinic conducted in St. Matthew's Mission, which touches nearly every colored family in Wilmington; the Juvenile Court work conducted by Miss Isabel Wagner, which has won special commendation from the officers of that court; the pastoral care given by the Rev. Joseph H. Earp to the patients at the State Hospital for Mental Diseases; the helpful ministrations of the Rev. Ernest A. Rich at the New Castle County Workhouse; and the generous financial relief which has been given the Babies' Hospital and St. Michael's Day Nursery in Wilmington.

The Departments of Missions and Religious Education reported distinct advances all along the line.

The convention dinner was attended by over two hundred delegates and members of the Women's Auxiliary. The Bishop was toastmaster. The speakers were Dr. Mabel E. Elliott, of St. Luke's International Medical Center in Tokyo, and Mr. Robert S. Barrett, of the Field Department of the National Council. Both speakers thrilled their hearers with first-hand information of the Church's vast opportunities in home and foreign lands.

The pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches were introduced and expressed appreciation of the Church's fellowship and inspiration.

These annual dinners, instituted by Bishop Cook, have proved to be high lights in every convention.

The Woman's Auxiliary met in Middletown at the same time and was addressed by Mrs. Robert P. Frazier, of the Cheyenne Indian Agency in South Dakota, and by Dr. Elliott.

The celebrations of the Holy Communion on both mornings were largely attended, that on the second day being the Corporate Communion of the Woman's Auxiliary, when the United Thank Offering was presented. This amounted to $1,938.48, being an increase over the first half year of the last Triennium.

The luncheon the second day was served on the beautiful grounds where the boys' school is to be erected. This school, in addition to becoming a preparatory school of the first rank, will furnish an ideal location for summer schools, conferences on the ministry and similar gatherings.

The Standing Committee elected by the convention and immediately organized for the year consists of the Rev. Charles Wright Clash, president; the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, secretary; the Rev. Benjamin F. Thompson, Mr. A. Felix duPont and Mr. Victor C. Records.

The members of the Executive Council who were elected to succeed the Rev. Edward H. Ford, the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton and Mr. Macmillan Hoopes who were ineligible for re-election are the Rev. Charles A. Rantz, the Rev. R. B. Mathews, D. D., and Mr. George Elliott. Mr. J. Wiley Trought was elected to succeed himself.

Clerical deputies to the Provincial Synod are the Rev. P. L. Donaghay, the Rev. William H. Darbie, the Rev. M. Paul S. Huntington and the Rev. Robert Bell. Clerical alternates are the Rev. Frederick M. Kirkus, D. D., the Rev. Benjamin F. Thompson, the Rev. Charles A. Rantz and the Rev. Ernest A. Rich.

Lay deputies are Mr. Howard Seaman, Mr. Frederic W. Baker, Mr. A. H. Lord and Mr. Alonzo Newlin. Lay alternates are Mr. Samuel W. Elliott, Mr. Wales W. Brown, Mr. John Weldon and Mr. Laussatt R. Rogers.

The one hundred and forty-fifth Annual Convention will meet in St. Luke's Church, Seaford, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13-14, 1930.

VIRGINIA.

The election of a Bishop Coadjutor was recommended in his annual report to the Diocesan Council of Virginia by the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, at the one hundred and thirty-fourth annual meeting of the council, held at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, May 15-16. Permission was asked by Bishop Tucker to be allowed to take the necessary steps for this election at the next annual Council.

Telegrams extending best wishes to the Council were received from the Diocese of North Carolina, in session at Henderson, N. C., and from the Washington Diocese, holding its annual meeting in the National Capital.

The meeting of the Diocesan Council, in conjunction with the Diocesan Missionary Society, was responsible for a large gathering of the clergy and laity, as the diocese comprises most of Virginia north of the James River, with the exception of a few Eastern counties.

A very comprehensive display of articles, handwork, posters and other material was exhibited in St. Paul's parish house and showed in graphic fashion the varied activities of the Diocesan Missionary Society.

A definite step on the question of church unity was taken by the Council at its closing session May 16, when, by a vote of 59 to 40, it adopted a resolution offered by Dr. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., favoring the adoption of the "pact of reconciliation" recently drawn up and signed by representatives and leaders of fifteen different denominations.

Few subjects that have ever come before the Council have attracted as much attention as Dr. Tucker's resolution and its introduction was followed by a warm debate. Supporters of the pact, led by its sponsor, pleaded for its adoption, pointing out the weakness of the position in which Christianity is placed by reason of doctrinal and organic differences, which separate the various branches of the great Church. Opposition to the adoption of the resolution was led by the Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Richmond, who argued just as earnestly against taking any action at this time.

The resolution offered by Dr. Tucker follows:

"Whereas, a number of religious leaders belonging to some fifteen different branches of God's household have recognized the unfortunate and weak position in which Christianity is placed by reason of doctrinal and organic differences, and have drawn a "pact of reconciliation", which sixty-three of them have signed, and which reads as follows:

" 'We, Christians of various churches, believing that only in a cooperative and united Christendom can the world be Christianized, deplore a divided Christendom as being opposed to the spirit of Christ and the needs of the world; and we are convinced that the Christianizing of the world is being greatly hindered by divisive and rivaling churches,

" 'We, therefore, desire to express our sympathetic interest in and prayerful attitude toward all conferences, small and large, that are looking toward reconciliation of the divided Church of Christ; and we propose to practice, in all our spiritual fellowships, the equality of all Christians before God, so that no Christian shall be denied membership in our churches, nor a place in our celebration of the Lord's Supper, nor any ministry be denied the courtesies of our pulpits; and, further, irrespective of denominational barriers, we pledge to be brethren one to another, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour whose we are and whom we serve.'

"Now, therefore be it resolved, that this Council does hereby express its sympathy with the pact of reconciliation among Christians, and gives its cordial approval to the spirit of the pact."

The Council, by an unanimous vote, adopted a resolution indorsing Dr. Teusler's plan for a hospital at Tokyo, Japan, and asked that an offering be taken for it in all the churches in the diocese on the first Sunday in June. By unanimous vote it was decided that the proceedings of the Diocesan Missionary Society Centennial, held in conjunction with the Council session, and a copy of the Bishop's address to the Council, be published.

On motion of W. Frank Powers, of Richmond, a resolution of sympathy for the great loss of life sustained in the Cleveland hospital fire, was unanimously adopted and a copy forwarded by wire to the Mayor of Cleveland.

Luncheon was served in the parish house of St. Paul's to the visiting delegates and approximately 200 were present. The sessions were also attended by many Richmond Episcopalians.

The following committees were appointed:

Committee on the State of the Church: The Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., the Rev. F. N. Hinkel, George L. Browning and J. H. C. Beverly.

Committee on Invested Funds: R. T. Morrison, F. E Nolting, Thomas A. Lee, Richard Baylor and E. M. Newton.

Committee on New Parishes: The Rev. Edward Carpenter, the Rev. J. S. Meredith, W. W. Chamblin and James Ashby.

Committee on Increase of the Ministry: The Rev. Noble C. Powell, the Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, the Rev. H. W. Mann and B. T. Menton.

Committee on the Dispatch of Business: The Rev. L. C. Harrison and W. P. Johnson.

Committee on Canons: The Rev. F. D. Goodwin, the Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., the Rev. R. A. Magill, R. C. Beverly, E. H. Smith and E. Randolph Williams.

Standing Committees: The Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., the Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., the Rev. W. J. Morton, D. D., clerical; John B. Minor, Gardiner L. Boothe, A. R. Hoxton, laymen.

Committee on Finance: Lewis C. Williams, R. Carter Beverly, John M. Taylor.

Executive Committee of the Diocesan Missionary Society: the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, D. D., the Rev. George P Mayo, D. D., the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., and the Rev. H. S. Osburn, clerical, and John M. Taylor, Murray M. McGuire, Lewis C. Williams, John B. Minor and James M. Lewis, lay.

For Vacancies on Committee of Church Property: E. Randolph Williams, Frederick S. Valentine.

For Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D., the Rev. W. Roy Mason, the Rev. G. M Brydon, D. D., the Rev. Herbert S. Osborne, clerical; and W. W. Chamblin, Blake T. Newton, Murray M. McGuire and John B. Minor, lay.

BETHLEHEM.

The Fifty-eighth Annual Convention met in St. Peter's Church, Hazleton, the Rev. John H. Dickinson, LL. D., rector, on May 13 and 14.

Practically all the old officers were reelected. The new members of the Bishop and Executive Council are the Rev. Robert P. Kreitler and Mr. R. P. Hutchinson. To the Synod were elected the Rev. Messrs. W. Frank Allen, Geo. McKinley, J. P. Briggs, J. H. Dickinson. Lay, Messrs. C. A. Mills, Paul A. Gardner, H. W. Kingsbury, T. Archer Morgan.

The committee appointed last Convention to investigate the need for making some provision to take care for old folks reported that the Church had a real responsibility in the matter—that there were a number of men and women in dire need of care who were members of the Church for at least ten years and sixty-five or more years of age. A resolution was passed reappointing the Department of Christian Social Service to which the Bishop was to add a number of names and requesting this larger committee to begin the solicitation of funds for this purpose and to study the question as to the best way in which the diocese can discharge its responsibility. Building an institution, placing them in homes, keeping couples in a home of their own and paying expenses, were some of the ways discussed.

The Committee on Pension Assessments reported that the diocese was in the 100 per cent class; there are no arrearages. Our assessments amount now to over fifteen thousand dollars a year.

WASHINGTON.

Appointment of committees, reports and open forum discussions marked Wednesday morning's session of the annual convention of the Diocese of Washington, which was opened in Epiphany Church the night of May 14 by Bishop James E. Freeman. In his annual Council address Bishop Freeman administered a rebuke to Church lobbyists and predicted that the mixing of Church and State must inevitably result in damage to the Church.

The Bishop said the Church had "lost prestige and signally weakened its influence" whenever it had attempted, through organized effort, to direct and control political action.

"The pages of history disclose the sad and tragic story of confusion and discord where Church and State have been in conflict. If the Church lowers its standards to become an autocratic dictator in the concerns of legislative action or the choice of political candidates, it loses the respect and confidence of right-thinking men."

Bishop Freeman was outspoken regarding other topics of widespread interests. Touching on the Book of Common Prayer, adopted at the recent General Convention of the Episcopal Church, he declared that "law and loyalty alike" demand strict adherence to its forms.

The Rev. H. Allen Griffith, Soldiers' Home Chaplain, was reelected Secretary of the Diocese at the Wednesday morning meeting, which was held in St. Stephen's Church, Sixteenth and Newton Streets.

Bishop Freeman announced the following appointments: Permanent Assistant Secretaries, the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, the Rev. W. R. Moody, J. L. Johns and O. R. Singleton; Committee on Rights of Clergy to Seats, the Rev. M. F. Minnick, the Rev. J. J. Queally and the Rev. E. M. Thompson; Committee on Lay Representations, H. L. Bryan, G. M. Husted and Dr. H. M. Bowen, and the Committee on Canons and other Business, the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., and the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., D. C. L.

Among the reports submitted and approved were those of the Standing Committee, the Treasurer of the Diocese, the State of the Church, on Canons, Church Pensions, the Trustees of Church Charities and the Board of Examining Chaplains.

The principal legislative action of the convention was to provide that the seating of lay delegates in future diocesan conventions will be restricted to those who are actual church communicants. The date of the annual convention was changed from May to the first Wednesday in February, unless that Wednesday be Ash Wednesday, when the convention will convene on the Wednesday before the first day of Lent.

Rights for women came to the fore and proponents of the proposal to permit the women of St. Thomas Parish, Croome, Prince Georges County, Md., and of St. John's Parish, in Prince Georges and Charles Counties, to vote and hold office equally with the men of the parishes won their point.

A new parish in Bladensburg, to be known as St. Luke's Parish, was authorized upon petition from St. Matthew's Parish, Hyattsville, the mother of the new parish. It was also decided to continue with the plans to build a new mission church at Mount Rainier, Md. A committee will be appointed to determine the boundaries of Rock Creek Parish.

The convention went on record as favoring $2,200 as a minimum salary for clergy in the diocese.

A resolution of thanks to the Rev. Dr. George Fiske Dudley, rector of St. Stephen and Incarnation Parish, for hospitality to the delegates, was adopted.

The annual elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee of the Diocese: Clerical—The Rev. G. F. Dudley, the Rev. M. F. Minnick, the Rev. Herbert Scott Smith. and the Rev. Josepn Fletcher, librarian of Washington Cathedral; lay—Marcus Benjamin, Dr. William C. Rives and William E. Horton.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: Clerical—The Rev. G. W. Atkinson, the Rev. A. A. McCallum, the Rev. F. L. Metcalf and the Rev. Dr. G. Freeland Peter; lay—Commander C. T. Jewell, S. E. Kramer, Hugh T. Nelson and H. L. Choate.

Executive Council: Clerical—The Rev. C. E. Buck, the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, dean of Washington; the Rev. G. F. Dudley, the Rev. Robert Johnson, the Rev. ZeBarney Phillips and the Rev. F. J. Bohanan; lay—H. P. Blair, S. E. Kramer, Hugh T. Nelson, W. S. Bowen, Harry K. Boss and Byron S. Adams. Bishop Freeman, acting under his Episcopal authority, appointed the following additional members of the Executive Council: Clerical—The Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, the Rev. T. W. Cooke; lay—H. L. Choate and E. L. Stock.

Church Intelligence

The Lambeth Conference.

The seventh Lambeth Conference meets in July, 1930. For those of our people who have been confirmed or have grown up from childhood since 1920 when the last one took place, it may be said that Lambeth Palace is the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The conference held there every ten years brings together the bishops of the Anglican Communion throughout the world, all who can possibly attend. In 1920 there were about 250 bishops present. They come from Canada, the West Indies, South America, Asia, Africa, Australia, not to mention Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and the United States and the American missionary districts. They come from such dioceses as Limerick, Argyll, Kalgoorlie, Zululand, Persia, Korea, Madras, Cariboo, Truro, Oxford, London. Scholars, shepherds, pioneer friends of kings and friends of lepers. In 1920 they discussed missionary problems, international relations, the Christian Faith in relation to spiritualism, and theosophy, the position of women, industrial questions, problems of marriage and morality, and, above all else, Church unity.

The last named is likely to be the subject on which most emphasis will be placed in 1930, especially in view of the great undertaking in South India, to which Churchmen in India and England have been devoting untold hours of study and prayer.

Since the last Lambeth, three great missionary and religious gatherings have been held by groups in which many Communions took part and which will have a bearing on the Lambeth meeting: The three were the Conference on Christian Life and Work, at Stockholm in 1925, the World Conference on Faith and Order, at Lausanne in 1927, and the Jerusalem Meeting of the International Missionary Council, in 1928.

About fifty bishops have been consecrated by the American Church since July, 1920, a fourth of them for missionary districts.

The Boston Conference On the Mystical Element in the Christian Faith.

The "Boston Conference on the Mystical Element in the Christian Faith", held at the Cathedral of St. Paul, Boston, Mass., on May 13, was a gathering unique in the history of the First Province, clergymen and lay people from all the dioceses of New England being present in considerable numbers. It was similar to the conferences held at Atlantic City, Yonkers, N. Y., and Bethlehem, Pa., in that it was not for clergymen and specialists particularly, but for all interested in personal religion and the life of inner or mystical devotion which acutely experiences the Presence of God. The conference opened with the service of the Holy Communion and an address of welcome by Bishop Slattery. The Rev. Elbert B. Holmes read a paper on "Practical Mysticism in the Use and Interpretation of Holy Scripture", in which he brought out that journeys into the vast realm of spirit and the finding of Reality, are not merely for the contemplation of the enraptured soul, but are for practical use in the affairs and contacts of everyday life. Canon H. Adye Prichard read a paper on "Mysticism and Intellectualism", in which he brought out the idea that intellectualism can bring us only to a certain point and that thereafter it is the mystical faculty of intuition which must serve. The Rev. Thomas F. Marshall's topic was "Mysticism and Social Service". He emphasized the fact that it is actually the mystical perception in us, the recognition of the reality of the Fatherhood of God and our brotherhood as His children, that is the wellspring from which flows all our philanthropies and social service movements, and that without that mystical perception these expressions of social service would not exist. The Rev. Thom Williamson, Jr., presented the subject, "Mysticism and Healing", making the point that healing of soul, mind and body can be accomplished by mystical communion with God through Christ.

The Rev. Laird W. Snell read a paper on "Mysticism and the Parish Priest", bringing out the fact that the real religious life is that lived, not in accordance with rules and formularies, but in continuous and unbroken fellowship with Jesus Christ, and in inner or mystical oneness with infinite God through His indwelling Holy Spirit among the customary yet sanctified and glorified relationships of home, parish and world. Other papers were read by the Rev. H. Robert Smith on "Mysticism and the Prayer"; by the Rev. Lee W. Heaton on "Mysticism in the Cure of Souls"; and by the Rev. Grieg Taber on "Mysticism and the Blessed Sacrament". At the evening service in the Cathedral two sermons were preached, one by the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D., and the other by the Rev. Herbert Parrish, D. D., Chaplain of the Confraternity and special lecturer at Trinity College, Hartford. Other similar conferences are being planned for later in the year.

The Excelsior Band.

Christ Episcopal Church, Richmond, has recently formed a group to work with groups from other churches under the name of The Excelsior Band. These groups have a regular schedule for every Sunday afternoon and visit the City and County Jails, The City Home, Home for Confederate Women, and the Virginia Industrial Home for Girls, and St. Philip's Hospital for Colored People.

There are eight in the group composed of both men and women. They conduct services consisting of hymns, prayers, Scripture reading, and a Gospel message is given by one of the group or some one invited by them. Always an invitation to accept Christ is extended. The one supreme aim is to win souls for Christ. The women have done fine personal work among the women in jail. In some instances they have been taught to read in connection with the spiritual help given. Beautiful letters expressing their gratitude have been received by some of the workers from the girls who were converted under the ministry of these Christian workers and who are now leading Christian lives in other cities.

In a day when so much church work seems foreign to that practiced by the New Testament Church and when there is much talk about evangelism it is worthy of note that the Excelsior Band is applying evangelism and by God's grace getting results.

Centennial Celebration of D. M. S.

The Centennial of the Diocesan Missionary Society celebrated in Richmond May 14-15, began with a service Tuesday morning in historic old St. John's Church, the scene of Patrick Henry's famous "Give me liberty or give me death" speech. The clerical delegates and visitors from all four dioceses: Virginia, Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia, and West Virginia, clad in their black and white vestments, marched from the Sunday-school room across the churchyard with its many ancient tombstones, into the church, two by two, and then separated into columns on either side of the aisle for the passage of the preacher of the occasion, the venerable Bishop of Southern Virginia. This was impressive and it was also impressive to see many rows of the main body of the church filled with the robed clergy. There were forty in all. Bisop Tucker delivered an appealing and stirring address. A service of the Holy Communion followed.

The celebration was resumed that afternoon in Monumental Church, another one of Richmond's oldest churches, built in 1815. Two historical addresses were delivered at this time, the first by the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, on "The Colonial Church"; the other by the Rev. G. Maclaren Brydon, D. D., Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia, on "Diocesan Beginnings".

The evening service was held in St. Paul's Church, "the Westminster of the South", it has been affectionately termed because of its historical associations with noble men and great events of the revered past. The Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., LL. D., Headmaster of St. Christopher's School, Richmond, discussed "The Undivided Diocese, 1829-1878", and the Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., rector of Cople, Lunenburg and North Farnham Parishes, Warsaw, carried forward the history from that date, the title of his address being "The Diocese of Virginia Since 1879".

The following morning there was an early service of the Holy Communion at St. Paul's Church. At ten o'clock the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, conducted devotional exercises, which preceded four more historical addresses: "The Diocese of West Virginia," by the Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of West Virginia; "The Diocese of Southern Virginia," by the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D., rector of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg; "The Diocese of Southwestern Virginia," by the Hon. Don P. Halsey, Historiographer of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia,; "Missions, the Inspiration of the Church's Life," by the Ven. F. W. Neve, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge.

The opening session of the Virginia Diocesan Council took place at noon.

At five o'clock Wednesday afternoon in St. Paul's Parish House, the Rev. Roy Mason. Associate Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge gave a stereopticon lecture. The lecture and views dealt entirely with the constructive and picturesque work in the mountains.

A comprehensive exhibit of articles, posters, handwork, miniature layout of the missions, maps and other material was on display in St. Paul's Parish House during the Centennial observance and the Diocesan Council. It showed in graphic fashion, something of the varied activities of the Society, something of its widespread scope of service, something of its wonderful accomplishments.

Probably most noteworthy at this exhibit was a collection of two hundred pictures of Colonial churches, loaned by Mr. Francis Marion Wigmore. Mr. Wigmore traveled all over the State with his camera taking the pictures. This is a splendid historical work he has done for the State of Virginia, and also for the whole country. Too many of the beautiful old houses of worship of the forefathers have already disappeared. It is interesting to note that many pictured in Mr. Wigmore's collection have been restored by the Diocesan Missionary Society.

The exhibit of articles was gathered and arranged by a committee of which Miss Jennie Hughes, of All Saints, Richmond, was chairman.

Miss Elizabeth Winegar, secretary to the Rev. Roy Mason, collected most of the material that is in the Mountain Work section of the exhibit.

General arrangements for the Missionary Society observance were made by a committee from the diocese consisting of the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's, Richmond; the Rev. G. Maclaren Brydon, D. D., Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia; B. G. Foster, Fairfax County.

The Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, preached the sermon Wednesday evening at the service which marked the close of an inspiring as well as educational centennial celebration. All of the addresses were intensely interesting. They are to be published as a group in pamphlet form by order of the Virginia Diocesan Council.

The Diocesan Missionary Society of Virginia, 1829-1929.

The Diocesan Missionary Society was first established at the Diocesan Convention of 1829, an outgrowth of local missionary societies in various parishes, several of which had already begun to employ and help support ministers as missionaries to neighboring vacant parishes. Its existence was precarious at first, two years having elapsed before sufficient funds were in hand to support its first missionary.

The first work of the Society was to carry on the revival of the Church in the parishes which were still abandoned and unorganized. Of the ninety-seven parishes in existence in 1781, there had been the beginnings at least of revival in fifty-five by 1829, leaving but forty-two still untouched by the awakening life of the Church. And beyond these old parishes were the counties formed in the new sections of the Commonwealth—whither the Church must find its way in order to follow her children. Under the inspiring leadership of Bishops Moore and Meade, the work was carried on until by the time of the War Between the States the Church was once more strongly and widely established.

The Diocese was most deeply interested in carrying the Gospel to the colored people. This was emphasized as the great missionary responsibility of the Church at one Convention after another. Every minister was urged to have a regular service for colored people.

The war and the period of reconstruction brought many new problems to the Society. Ministering to the soldiers and the wounded in hospitals was the pressing need of the war time. The Society issued its Army and Navy Prayer Book in several editions for use among the soldiers and many ministers were sent to preach to the soldiers in camp and hospital.

The close of the war found many churches burned or wrecked and many parishes vacant. In the midst of the universal poverty the Society undertook the herculean task of helping to reopen and keep alive the parishes and to rebuild or repair the churches. This was its chief work for twenty-five years. It is an interesting fact that two years before the General Church had begun the Lenten mite box offering from the Sunday Schools the Diocesan Missionary Society had established this custom and was using the Lenten and Easter offerings of the Sunday Schools for the support of a diocesan evangelist. The mite box offering from the Sunday Schools continued to be used in part at least for diocesan missions until the Nation Wide Campaign of 1919.

The present day work of the Society is three-fold: The colored, the mountain and the rural. Interest in work among the colored people revived shortly after the war had ended, and has continued to the present day. The outstanding achievements are the Bishop Payne Divinity School at Petersburg, which has trained over 200 colored men for the ministry of the Church, and the St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville, which is one of the largest and most important schools for colored people in the South. Both of these institutions are now in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. There are today twenty-three colored ministers and nearly 2,500 colored communicants in the four Virginia dioceses.

Work among the mountain people is carried on in all three dioceses in which the mountains are situated, in each case under its own diocesan care. This form of work was first begun in the Blue Ridge Mountains in 1888 by the Rev. Frederick W. Neve. After forty-one years of service he is still the beloved Archdeacon of the Mountain Work. From its small beginning he has seen it grow until it now extends through the Blue Ridge Mountains from one end of the diocese to the other—ministering through parish schools and chapels, through women workers living in coves and hollows among the mountain people, through the Blue Ridge Industrial School, caring for the sick, and giving to a hitherto neglected people a new opportunity of life and faith and happiness.

Through its rural work the Society is aiding our country parishes to meet the new and changing conditions of rural life and to grasp the opportunities of community welfare and development lying before them; augmenting the inadequate salaries of the country clergy to a living wage; striving to make our Church a living, vital force for righteousness and minister of mercy to the needy, the outcast and the forgotten.

The Society is today supporting or helping to support forty-one ministers, forty-seven women workers, ten laymen—a total of ninety-eight—working in mountain missions, among the colored people, in rural parishes, a city missionary, workers among the deaf, and in the reform schools and among parishes.

Its budget of appropriations for 1929 is over $70,000. Under it and as vital departments of its work are the Board of Christian Social Service with its growing welfare work, and the Board of Religious Education with its Summer School for Church Workers, Sunday-School Institutes and Young People's Service Leagues.

St. Luke's Tokyo.

At the Council of the Diocese held in Richmond May 15-16, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, the General Convention, meeting in Washington in October, 1928, endorsed the plans for St. Luke's International Hospital, as outlined by Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler, and recommended that $1,000,000 be raised as a special undertaking by the various dioceses during 1929; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Council of the Diocese of Virginia, in session at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, on May 16, 1929, desires to commend this undertaking to the parishes of the Diocese of Virginia, and recommends that the Bishop of the Diocese request every rector and vestry in the Diocese to present this subject to their several congregations on Trinity Sunday, May 26, and that a special offering for this object be taken in every church on the first Sunday after Trinity, June 2, or some other Sunday in June. Further, be it

Resolved, That the Treasurer of the Diocese be requested to send out to the rectors at the earliest possible day folders giving the outline of the plan and Special Offering Envelopes for distribution on Trinity Sunday.

Bishop Tucker has sent out letters to the rectors and Vestries of the diocese, enclosing the resolution, commending the work and expressing the hope that every congregation in the diocese will make a contribution.

Woman's Auxiliary Holds Successful Meeting.

The thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary at The Plains, May 7-9, was in the opinion of all there the most successful yet held.

A particularly memorable feature of the meeting was the inspiring service conducted by the Rev. Dennis Whittle, during the Quiet Hour on Tuesday evening. The Communion Service will always carry even deeper meaning than heretofore for those who had the privilege of hearing Mr. Whipple's analysis of this Sacrament.

Bishop Hulse of Cuba and Dr. Harry Taylor of China told of opportunities for service in their fields.

The work of the Blue Ridge Mission was described most graphically by the Rev. W. R. Mason and Miss Elizabeth Winegar.

Dr. Cary Montague showed that his social service organization had handled at least one case for each working day of the past year and urged that all who might know of cases needing the attention of his department communicate with him.

Mrs. E. E. Osgood's outline of the Mission Study courses for the coming year was particularly interesting and her review in particular of the textbook to be used, "The World Mission of Christianity", was inspiring.

The reports of chairmen of each branch of the work showed the tremendous amount of work done during the past year and indicated that more was to be accomplished the coming year.

The offering for Auxiliary Specials amounted to $326.11 and was apportioned as follows: Orkney Shrine, $46.11; Mr. Powell's Chapel at Charlottesville, $50; Mr. Mason's Automobile fund, $75; Bishop Hulse, $100; Bishop Binsted, $50; Miss Winegar, COLLECT FOR TRINITY SUNDAY.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who hast given unto us Thy servants grace, by the confession of a true faith, to acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity, and in the power of the Divine Majesty to worship The Unity; We beseech Thee that Thou wouldst keep us steadfast in this faith, and evermore defend us from all adversities, who livest and reignest, one God, world without end. SELF-OBLATION.

Mary Danforth Dodge.

Jesus! Lord most Merciful, humbly I adore Thee,
Light of men, Divine Redeemer, Thou my All in All.
Purge my heart, oh! purify and cleanse me, I implore Thee;
Make and keep me one with Thee, whatever may befall.

Jesus! Lord most Beautiful, all my being thrilling,
By Thy pardon and Thy love from sin Thou settest free.
Thou with joy unknown, unsought, my wond'ring soul art filling;
Glorious One! my Life, my All, I give myself to Thee.

The Condition of Spiritual Gain.

No saying of our Lord is more frequently quoted than that wherein He lays down the principle that we must become as little children if we would enter into the kingdom of heaven. Considering the amount that has been said and written on this part of the teaching of Christ one might assume that there could be no possible doubt as to its meaning, but that is too much to say. It is quite possible for us to grasp part of the meaning and be blind to the rest. That in fact is what happens in many cases, and consequently the richer value of the saying escapes us. A few observations may help to elucidate and justify this statement.

In the first place we all know what the qualities are which we feel to be most attractive in the nature of a child. Our Lord did not draw His illustration from children in general, but from little children. There is something charming and winsome in a little child which is all too speedily lost by children of a larger growth. What is it? To a large degree it is the absence of self-consciousness. The little child takes himself and his elders for granted, and neither poses nor pretends in his attitude towards the world; he is utterly and entirely simple and sincere. Not so with the passing of the years. He soon learns to be sophisticated, perhaps to be deceitful, at least to be wary in his dealings with others, to discover and put up defences against the hardness and unfairness of the world. But while early childhood lasts it is refreshingly beautiful because these blemishes have not yet appeared. There is no cynicism in a little child, no arrogance, pretentiousness, artificiality, nothing furtive, calculating, worldly-wise. The spirit of a little child has no room for the suspicions, meannesses, and censorious judgments of later years. Faith is natural to him; is there anything more lovely than the sweet spontaneous trustfulness of a child? It does not occur to him to question your good will nor to look for the evil in life. There is something horrible in the desecration that takes place when that trustfulness is driven out by harsh treatment or base treachery. What is called a deeper knowledge of life will tend by and by to dissipate this baby confidence, but it is there to start with. It is as native to him as the air he breathes.

Then there is his expectation of loving and being loved. And there is his teachableness or receptiveness to impressions. It is hardly what is usually designated humility, but is closely akin thereto. The child instinctively looks up to that which is better, stronger, wiser than himself. Your little child will credit you with vastly more than you are worth; he imagines that you know everything and are the beau ideal of all that is admirable in character and conduct. It is said that he should have to find you out as he surely will when the time of disillusionment comes. He will become aware of your defects and weaknesses without, let us hope, loving you less. In manhood it is rare to find true humility, the humility that has nothing of abjectness in it and can look out on the world with fearless eyes. But that is just the kind of humility that a child has. Our Lord had it, but ordinary men and women have it not.

This, and nothing less than this, is what our Lord meant by this great saying. He did not say we were to become children, but to learn in spiritual things as children learn in natural. When He spoke of the kingdom of God He meant—as Rudolf Otto says and the most thorough and efficient New Testament research confirms—the supreme, all-inclusive spiritual good, the one completely satisfying possession to which man can aspire, the eternal reality which is the righteous love of God. He was not thinking of a kingdom of this world, nor of any mundane experience save and in so far as we become conscious that our present life is permeated and sanctified by that which is eternal. We can become as sure of the heavenly kingdom and the values pertaining thereto as any child can become sure of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms around him and that make up the wonderful world to which he stands related and of which he is daily learning more and more.

The well-known American writer, Booth Tarkington, says in a recent essay that nothing is more wonderful in man's experience of this mysterious universe than the fact of the correspondence between inner faculty and outward discovery. The moment we are ready for a revelation it comes. Within the lifetime of many of us, for instance, the possibility of flying was regarded as a joke. All at once we started to fly—why? Because, so to speak, we had come up to the knowledge of the way whereby Nature could do the work. For thousands of years that knowledge had been waiting for man to enter and possess, to use the power that lay ready to his hand; but it was only when the mind within him had risen to think along with the mind above him that he was able to make the kingdom of the air his own.

Tune a harp or violin to a grand organ. Lay it down, place your ear close to it and listen. Note for note you will faintly hear the same melodies reproduced in the smaller instrument that are pealing forth from the larger.

Holy souls have with one voice assured us throughout all the Christian centuries that their experience abundantly attests the truth of our Lord's words. The kingdom of God is ours in proportion as we become like to and in harmony with the ideal good we long for. The method is infallible. "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? . . . If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Become like a child in your belief in and your response to all that is summed up for us in the redeeming love of Christ, and the music of heaven will sound within your soul. It is as sure and certain as any other gain thaat has ever been won by the aspiring human spirit, and it is the greatest gain of all.—Selected.

To "Unspoil" Spoiled Children.

The "spoiled child" is commonly considered a purely American product and usually a pest. There is no excuse for his becoming such, says Dr. Alfred Alder, in the May issue of "Children, the Parents' Magazine".

Dr. Alder holds that much of so-called spoiling is due to the development of an inferior complex from overweening parents, so stilted in their superiority as to keep their children in the background, refusing to permit them to develop their true capacities. This, he believes is the chief reason why the children of the eminent so seldom amount to anything. That is, they are "spoiled" in their upbringing. School teachers, on the other hand, too often "play favorites", in heaping too many attentions upon one child.

"If the youngster is clever, well-mannered, good looking, unusual in any way," Dr. Alder charges in his article, "he becomes the recipient of the teacher's special notice and, as in the house, the other children are soon conscious of this inequality of attention. They realize that the favored child is far ahead of them in certain ways; they resent it, grow discouraged, and seek escape. This escape assumes various forms among the less favored children in a family. Because of their sense of inferiority they become peevish, restless, lazy, indifferent, and if the tendency is not checked are in danger of later becoming neurotics, criminals or otherwise unhappy, unadjusted persons. We wonder why so many handsome, talented people become worthless, turn into criminals or neurotics or go insane. In the poor training and over-attention received by the favored child at home and in school lies the reason."

Behind this lies the bad practice, Dr. Adler holds, of exhibiting bright children to duller ones as examples. "The children who are not so brilliant as the ones held up as examples," he says, "hate to have the success of their brothers or sisters emphasized, and react by refusing to come up to the standard they might otherwise have attained." To avoid all this, says the doctor, "prominence in any one, child or parent, must not be considered as due to an inherited talent. It must, on the other hand, be regarded as the result of general training. By this is meant that the child through his parents' training, his school training, or the training that comes through daily living develops qualities that lead to his success." Dr. Adler would have the parents realize that "the favored child's strength can be made an incentive to the slower child."

CERTAINTY.

Still skeptic and logcian try to prove,
Each in his day,
How vain a thing, how futile is our faith.
And still they say
That prayer is but a breath, a foolish cry
Lost on the wind—
I only know that asking, I receive,
And seeking, find

With words precisely cool and logical
They think to show
There was no Man of Galilee, no Christ,
Long years ago.
We but delude ourselves who think Him real
They both agree—
And yet I know that through one bitter night
He stood by me!

—Julia Johnson Davis.

His Shepherd.

Sunday by Sunday we repeat the same prayers. Sunday by Sunday we preach to an uncertain proportion of our flock, and administer the Holy Sacrament of our Redemption to a much smaller but more certain proportion. And every once in a while we get the feeling, "Is this a man's job, after all?" What real difference is it making in the lives of those who come to church, and of those who never come? Isn't Sunday and every day just as certainly a SIN day? Isn't there just as much gross selfishness, and as much small-mindedness? What does it all amount to anyway?

Let's get into step and drink in the sun-soaked air. (There was such a glorious sunrise this morning, all crimson and gold, and the air is as kindly as in spring.) We'll see if after all we haven't the finest job in life.

I was at a Musical Festival last year for the first time, and over and over again I heard this admonition, when the judges criticised the contestants, "Don't forget that your song begins when the first note of the piano is struck, and does not end till the last note of the accompaniment dies away." A song is not a vocal achievement with a piano strumming as a musical frill, it is one work of art, the expression of an inspiration. So with the service. It begins before any human voice is heard, or any note of music steals from the organ. The shining brasses, the flowers beside the cross, the very comfort of beauty and order, these begin the service for many a tired soul. Every thing in the building, and every sentence and every note of every bit of the service—prayers, psalms, hymns, lessons, sermon—everything is part of one great act of worship. The sermon is important, but it is only one bit of the service, and no more important than any other bit. Every bit must be as beautiful as we can make it. Perhaps that will help you to find new joy in your Sunday work.

It is nearly service time. The church is clean and warm, and there are bright flowers smiling their gratitude to God for the privilege of a day or two of opportunity to cheer tired hearts. (I'm funny that way. I'd sooner have two meals a day instead of three than go without flowers. A church seems naked without them.) The service has not begun, but poor Mrs. Larkin has just taken her seat. At home there are seven noisy brats and an unconsciously selfish father. She seldom gets to church, but today Aunt Mary is "minding the kids". The cleanness and quietness and beauty have done her soul good already, and the flowers take her back to her own happy childhood. She is rested and comforted. And when the first hymn begins, it is a very grateful heart that sings; though her voice is shyly silent:

"The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want,
He makes me down to lie,
In pastures green He leadeth me
The quiet waters by."

If only one tired soul is rested by the quietness and beauty and joy, and gives praise to God, that is a precious joy, and you have done a fine piece of work before you thought you had begun.

Some Sunday maybe, the sermon seems to fall flat, very flat. Children fidget and men look at you with benevolent endurance. But you read the Gospel splendidly that morning, and a roguish looking lad who had come to church because he had to, was thrilled with the manly heroism of Jesus. A seed was sown that will bear glorious fruit thirty years later perhaps in a fine Christian life.

What a world of comfort there is for parents and teachers and clergy in those words of St. Paul, "One soweth, another reapeth, God giveth the increase". Long ago as a child I listened to a sermon preached by a missionary from Africa. All I remember about it is the earnestness of the messenger. It was really the devotion of the man to Jesus that impressed me, though as a lad I'm sure I couldn't have defined it. Looking back, I believe that sermon was a very decided influence in the stream that brought me at last into the work of the ministry. Any day, in any place, in your contact with men and women in the home or at play or in business or at church, that first seed may be sown that leads at last to a decision to live for Christ.

I've never heard you preach, but I know you are in earnest, and there is far more appeal to the soul even in faltering earnestness, than in empty eloquence. If you have both earnestness and eloquence, that's fine, but you have earnestness anyway and that is eloquent. That African missionary came and went, and never knew a seed had been sown in my soul. Perhaps he is in Paradise now and knows more than he did, in closer fellowship with the Good Shepherd.

You and I feel utterly unworthy of the sacred task of helping the Good Shepherd to seek and to save that which was lost. Sometimes I feel that my own life is so far from the beauty of His that it is presumption on my part to pose as a shepherd of souls. And then I try to realize afresh His loving understandings, and I remember that all the good in me is the victory of His Spirit within me, and any good I do is Jesus at work through me.

This morning as the glory of the sunrise spread over the awakening town I felt afresh the yearning love of the Good Shepherd brooding over us all, His stumbling, wayward sheep, and I was glad to be His shepherd.

"Use me, O Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when, and where,
Until Thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share."

Yours fraternally.—Canadian Churchman.

The Life to Come.

There are two tracks toward a sense of reality touching the life to come. The one is by way of argument concluded, the other through a sense of immortality begun within us. I do not underrate the rational argument for the future life. Many do underrate it. There are cumulative scientific considerations looking toward a belief in immortality which have profoundly influenced some of our greatest scientific minds. But there are two difficulties in rational arguments for immortality. The lesser of these I shall mention first. It is in the obvious fact that the effect of any intellectual argument is always somewhat uncertain. It will depend upon the temperament and personality toward which it is directed. Considerations that convince me will leave you cold, and vice versa. Twelve good men and true in a jury box have the same arguments but arrive at diametrically opposed conclusions—or if they agree, the judge who heard the same arguments may set the verdict aside. Most of our formal arguments we develop in order to bolster up the beliefs on which we have already determined. It is a fact, I think, that science has furnished sufficient evidence looking toward a future life to convince many minds, and some of these, at least, minds of the first order. It is also probably a fact that no conceivable scientific argument could ever entirely convince all minds. To me the impact of life, impelling an instinctive belief in immortality, is a stronger proof of it than any of the reasons which men adduce in support of their own instincts.

The Great Argument.

All arguments supporting the belief in immortality are more or less unconvincing to one who has had no experience of the indwelling Christ, while he who has had such an experience of Christ's presence needs no argument. Having known God in experience the Christian is conscious that he has received that quality of life which is eternal, and his experience of fellowship with God and of God's gracious giving of Himself is his unshakable assurance of immortality.

Therefore, as we journey along the road of life, despondent perhaps and weary, as were the two disciples on their way to Emmaus, if we are joined by the triumphant and Eternal Christ, our hearts cry out, "Abide with us", for His companionship is immortality.—Canadian Churchman.

A Happy Average.

A clergyman making his first journey on a Pullman car was eager to do what was customary, and therefore asked the porter concerning the tip he should bestow when leaving. He said: "I cannot afford the most but I want to give you more than the least; tell me the average of your tips." "George" was equal to the occasion and replied: "I 'spose a dollar ought to be about the right average." The parson was as good as his word and passed over a dollar bill, whereupon George fairly exuded delight and said—"Thank you, sir—Thank you. You is the first man yet, that has given me the average."—Lutheran.

THE GOLDEN ROSE.

The Golden Rose is blowing still,
  Is growing still, is glowing still,
In lowly vale, on lordly hill.
The Golden Rose is blowing still—
  If only you can find it!

The Golden Rose still breaks and blows,
  Still breaks and blows, still gleams and glows,
'Mid icy blasts, and wintry snows,
The Golden Rose still breaks and blows;
  Search well and you may find it!

The Golden Rose can never die,
  'Tis grafted on Eternity;
In hearts that Love doth glorify,
The Golden Rose can never die,—
  May it be yours to find it!

Sand Dollars.

When Arthur Hale, a tawny-haired, blue-eyed, athletic boy, slid down the rocks and dropped on the silvery beach at La Jolla that August day, he little dreamed of the adventures in store for him.

He wore a bathing suit of brilliant green with a broad, yellow band about the middle, against which, except for blotches of sunburn across his shoulders and down his arms and legs, his skin shone white in the sunlight.

"Hey there, Art, run you to Cathedral Rock," challenged Robert Weast, a much tanned lad in a red bathing suit, who, as soon as Arthur appeared on the beach, leaped from a jutty of rocks.

Robert had brown hair and browner eyes, in which gleams of fire came and went. His cheeks glowed with the flush of healthy youth.

"Take you. Come toe a line," Arthur shouted back.

Scarcely had the race begun, however, when the boys were stopped by a tall, thin man in a black suit. The narrow, black ribbon that dangled from his eye-glasses labeled him.

"Pardon me," he drawled, "I wonder if you could assist me in my dilemma. My name is Strong, Professor Stroug. I'm seeking specimens of echinodermata for Oregon University."

The boys exchanged questioning glances.

Professor Strong evidently saw and interpreted the look.

"You, perhaps, recognize them by the names, starfish, sea-urchin, and the like."

"Oh, sure, I know," Arthur brightened, "there's loads of 'em here."

"I've been unable to secure perfect specimens of the sand dollar," Professor Strong continued. "For every one you get me, I'll trade you a silver dollar."

The boys' eyes danced with delight at the thought of the fortune in store for them.

"We'll get all you want;" promised Robert, and immediately began search.

"Fine! You may bring them to Room 10 at my hotel, the Ocean House. Remember, they must be perfect—no scarred or broken ones. Watch the tide, boys," he cautioned. "It'll be in soon." He disappeared round a rocky headland.

"Ho!" scoffed Arthur. "What does the guy take us for?" He shied a pebble at Robert.

"Sounds like dad," returned Robert. "We can swim and, if we had to, I guess could buck the tide. Why are grown people always suggesting dangers anyway?"

"Guess 'cause they're nervous," Arthur stooped to pick up a sand dollar. "Here's a lulu, Bob." He held up a perfect specimen.

It was a flat, sand cake with a faint pattern of a star on top.

"Did you ever notice, Art, all sand dollars have that same pattern?"

"Lots of times. You know what makes 'em?"

"No."

"Well," began Arthur, "long ago sand dollars and starfish were very closely related. Dad's got a book tells all about 'em. Just imagine a starfish's arms folded up over the top of him. Wouldn't it look like this?'

"You're right, Art, but it sounds fishy."

"'Tis fishy." Arthur burst into laughter.

"Did you ever see a live one?" asked Robert.

"A few."

"What did they look like?"

"Oh, they have tough, leathery bodies like other sea-urchins. They have spines. too, only shorter than those of a starfish."

The boys had picked up a shoe-box, discarded by some picnicker and, as they chatted, had gathered nearly three dozen good sand dollars. This was a first-class find, for, frail as they are, many dollars became broken by the waves.

"Hope when he sees the catch our professor won't go back on his bargain," commented Robert. "Say, I'd hate to be a professor and have to wear one of those ribbons."

"Don't have to. My uncle's a Harvard professor, and you couldn't get as close to him with one of those dangling things as to a wild deer."

"What'll we buy with our money?" Arthur broke off.

"Let's get a sailboat," suggested Robert.

"Sailboat? Huh!" chaffed Arthur, "not much of a sailboat for thirty-six dollars."

"Mebbe not, but we could put some to it," ventured Robert.

The boys had worked so busily they had not noticed the tide till, splash, a great wave rolled up and broke over a rock near them.

"Say, kid, it's our move and it's gotta be lively." Robert glanced about nervously. "The tide's coming. It's already shut us off from going backward or forward." He looked up at the rocks at his side. "We can never crawl up those." His voice quavered and his face blanched.

Although both boys were good swimmers, they knew the undertow at this particular spot was very strong. They also knew there were innumerable dangerous holes and rocks to be encountered. To swim was out of the question.

A wave nearly swept them off their feet.

"Oh, Art, we'll drown. There's no help for us." Robert bit his lip hard.

"No we won't, Bob," Arthur tried to conceal his own anxiety. "I'm going to toss this box up first and then we'll climb her." He gave the box a pitch and, with a crash, it landed safely.

"Now then," he turned to Robert, "I'm stronger than you, so I'll crawl up first and get something with which to help you."

"No, no, Art, please don't leave me. I'll drown for sure." Robert pleaded.

Another pounding wave broke over them and, when it receded, they stood in water ankle-dep.

"Well, then, let me boost you as high as I can and maybe you can manage it the rest of the way. " Arthur spoke hurriedly.

With great effort Robert succeeded in climbing to Arthur's shoulders, and, with the assistance of boosting hands, crawled slowly upward. He had scrambled almost to the top, his feet had left Arthur's outstretched hands, and Arthur himself was about to make an attempt to scale the rocks, when, with a shriek, Robert slipped, clung for a moment, and then slid down the rocks and rolled back on the sand."

"I can't do it," he gasped. "It's too steep." He held up scratched and bleeding hands.

"Too bad, kid." Arthur shook his head.

The water was at their knees. There was no time to lose. Arthur leaped for the rocks. Determinedly he clutched any projection he saw. Often the stone gave beneath his feet and he all but fell. Having gained another toehold, he wriggled and wormed his way and, finally, scrambled over the top. He ran to one of the small life-saving stations that dot the coast and was soon back with a rope.

The water now reached Robert's armpits and he shivered with cold.

"Grab this rope, Bob," Arthur tossed one end down. "I'll get you out in a jiffy."

Robert clung to the rope as only a person with death staring him in the face, and with a great deal of pulling and puffing on Arthur's part, was at last dragged safely over the cliff's edge.

Examination of the box revealed but eight whole sand dollars. These the boys carried to Professor Strong, who promptly paid for them.

"Guess we won't order a sailboat today, Art!" Robert smiled sheepishly.

"Nor ever try to buck the tide. Eh, Bob?" Arthur chuckled.—Junior World.

SUNRISE.

Frances Hines, age 12.

The sky is aglow with light at last
The day is coming very fast.
All the earth is covered with dew.
Trees and flowers are coverd too;
The pretty violets are peeping from their beds,
The buttercups are lifting their drowsy heads;
The birds are fluttering from tree to tree,
The sun shine down on the busy bumble bee.
The plough-boy is out in the field again,
The leaves are bursting from recent rain;
The tulips are awake from their long winters' sleep,
And every one listens to hear the birds peep,
As the big sun looks down on the sparkling earth
Every thing awakes to take new birth.

My first question about any doctrine is, How does it come down stairs out of its dreamer's intellect and behave itself in the kitchen? How does it put on its apron and tuck up its sleeves and go to life's daily work? How does it go into the chamber and hush itself into gentleness and quietness, and what does it say to the pained heart, and what to the ebbing life? By its fruits let it be known. What it can do in the plain, everyday circles of life shall be its proof to me of its heavenly origin.—Joseph Parker.

FLOWERS.

For The Southern Churchman.

Maude Mumma.

I think that flowers can feel, don't you?
And love the touch, when it is kind;
They drink afresh the morning dew,
That we their choicest blooms may find.

I think that flowers can see, don't you?
And know the hearts that they make glad;
It is delight to them most true,
To cheer the sick, the lone, the sad.

I think that flowers can smile don't you?
And love to please us with their grace;
When we these smiles from Heaven view,
God's glory fills each lifted face.

I think that flowers can hear, don't you?
And never like the unkind word;
These messengers from Heaven's bless,
Know only songs that love has heard.

Why Bees Went to Australia.

Every day is a picnic in the big clover field. Here the bees come for their loads of sweets. Here, also come the light-hearted little butterflies in their gay picnic dresses of white, brown and yellow.

Now here comes Mr. Bee to the very clover-blossom on which sits dainty Miss Butterfly, in her spotless white frock, a tilt in the morning breeze.

Shall she speak first? Oh, yes, he is always too busy to see his butterfly

A RAMBUSCH NAVE LANTERN
...the very latest in scientific church illumination

RAMBUSCH Lantern G-18 was designed for one of the leading Church Architects in America and has met with approbation alike by designers and engineers.

Notice particularly how the ornamental iron bars are so arranged as to interfere as little as possible with the light. Handwrought—a masterpiece in Gothic iron work, it incorporates all that is best in up to date lighting principles. The glass is of amber color with excellent diffusing qualities.

neighbor, much less stop for light chatter with her.

"Pardon me, Mr. Bee, but do you do nothing all the day but sip sweets for your honey?"

"Oh, no, little lady," he said, ignoring the impertinence of her inquiry. "Don't you know what an important mission is given us bees aside from honey-making?"

"Do tell me," eagerly asked the seeker for entertainment, as she shifted to a nearer petal of the clover-bloom on which they rested.

"Well, I will tell you a short story that will explain. Once upon a time the big island of Australia had no clover fields. The big country, England, sent clover seeds to the island. A fine, large crop of clover came up. Men gathered the seeds from this crop and planted them. No clover came up. England sent some of her wise men over to the island to see why no clover had come up from the seed of the first crop. And what do you think they found?"

Now little Miss Butterfly couldn't think. She edged a little nearer to Mr. Bee to miss none of the awful secret.

"Well, they found—that there were no bees in Australia."

The pretty white listener tried to look a wise understanding, but Mr. Bee, fastening his searching gaze upon her blank little face, generously explained:

"You know that it takes the bee to carry pollen from one clover blossom to another, to fertilize it so it will bear seed that will produce more blossoms and seeds. So England had to export bees to Australia before the island could raise a crop of clover from her first crop's seed."

Poor dainty Miss Butterfly did not know, nor could she follow either the big words or the wisdom of her informant. If some more wisdom had

ANNOUNCEMENT TO POLICYHOLDERS

Of interest to clergymen and to lay workers who are already policy-holders or who contemplate taking advantage of the low rates offered by this Corporation, is the announcement that at a recent meeting of the Directors, the Annual Refund for the year 1929 was increased from slightly more than $3 to more than $4 per $1,000 of insurance.

These Annual Refunds reduce the cost of insurance to a figure even lower than the basic published rates, which in themselves are net rates, without loading.

The Corporation was established for the benefit of clergymen and their families and for lay workers and their families. All inquiries will receive prompt and cordial attention.

The earth is ridged with graves of those who died;
Some valiantly, in battle, side by side,

TRUE

New Version of "Stand Up For Jesus"

Get up, get up, for Jesus,
Ye soldiers of the Cross;
A lazy Sunday morning
Means certain harm and loss;
The Churches call to worship
In duty be not slack—
You cannot fight the good fight
By lying on your back.

Get up, get up, for Jesus;
It was the Saviour's way
To rise up in the morning
Before the break of day
To seek the lonely mountain
Where man's foot rarely trod,
And in the dawn's clear brightness
To spend an hour with God.

Get up, get up, for Jesus—
It is not too much to ask;
He might with every reason
Demand a heavier task;
If Christians on a weekday
Begin their work at seven
They surely could on Sunday
Start worship at eleven.

Get up, get up, for Jesus;
The power of sloth is strong,
But if you want to do it
The strife will not be long;
You may be tired with toiling,
Yet love will stand the test:
To all who come, though weary,
He gives a better rest.

Business meetings were held separately by leaders of Section B, under the direction of Mrs. Woodward; of the Juniors under direction of Mrs. Barton, and of the Little Helpers of which Mrs. Howard is head. These groups joined the Woman's Auxiliary during special services and addresses.

The meeting was inspirational throughout and each delegate brought home to her branch new problems, confident that solutions will be forthcoming. Bishop Tucker helped inspire this confidence by pointing out quite simply that the best way to understand missionary work and its needs is to be a missionary one's self at home in one's daily life: that the steps are "to know, to love, and to give".

The courtesy and hospitality of our hosts and hostesses in The Plains, Delaplane, Marshall and Middleburg, made the visit a most happy one. Mrs. Gilpin issued an invitation from Grace Church, Berryville, asking that our next annual meeting be held there. The invitation was promptly accepted.

Ascension Church, Amherst.

The Easter Service at Ascension Church, Amherst, the Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., rector, still lingers pleasantly in the hearts and memories of the people, as one of many of the beautiful and attractive services which are not infrequently had in this church. Perhaps this last one exceeded that of its predecessors from the fact that the chancel was more lavishly bedecked with Easter lilies, with the unusual addition of Florida Palms, presented as a memorial to the late Dr. Walker by a member of the family. Then, too, the spirit of cooperation in the service shown by the other churches of the village added no little to the real enjoyment of the occasion. Of their own volition members of the choirs of these churches offered their services, which were gladly accepted, making the music of surpassing beauty and charm. The rector, catching the spirit of the day and the beautiful service, was at his best in the sermon from text. "The Power of the Resurrection".

A joint meeting of the Parish Guild and the Woman's Auxiliary of this church was held in the parish house on Wednesday, April 17. After an enthusiastic meeting of full attendance of both organizations they went across the street to the hospitable home of Dr. Edward Sandidge, where a delightful lunch was served. The Parish Guild, as the name denotes, busies itself with the affairs of the parish. It is now much interested in beautifying the churchyard for which the Sweet Brier Orchestra gave an entertainment at the high school auditorium on the fourth of May.

The Rev. Thomas B. Browne, of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, has been recently honored by the Lion's Club, which met recently in that city in state convention, by being unanimously elected its Governor for its District which includes the State.

The Rev. Josiah R. Ellis was the preacher in Ascension Church, Amherst, on the Third Sunday after Easter.

The Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, was the chief speaker at the monthly meeting of the Rotarians. While the Rev. Mr. Browne holds the Lions in leash, he looks after the Rotarians and the Rev. Dr. Pendleton is spiritual advisor of the Kiwanians, which should delight the heart of the editor of The Southern Churchman as he reviews in his late editorial, "Fraternals", the much good that they are accomplishing.

National Cathedral Association Meeting.

The annual meeting of the National Cathedral Association was held on Ascension Day at Washington Cathedral, with more than 800 members in attendance. The business meeting was preceded by a celebration of the Holy Communion and an unusual and beautiful service in the Chapel of Joseph of Aramathea, when the altar of that chapel was dedicated. The music for the whole service was sung without accompaniment, by the Cathedral choir.

After a delightful buffet luncheon, served on the grounds, another impressive service was held at three o'clock, when the cornerstone for the lower school of St. Alban's School for Boys was laid by Bishop Freeman. Evening prayer in Bethlehem Chapel at four o'clock was followed by a meeting of the National Executive Committee.

Speakers at the meeting of the Association were Mr. Edwin N. Lewis, Executive Secretary of the National Cathedral Association, who gave a report of that body; the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, who told of the construction work now being done on the Cathedral and Hon. George Wharton Pepper, former Senator from Pennsylvania, who told of some of the plans for the George Washington celebration in 1932. Hon.

Vincent R. Massie, Canadian Minister to the United States, and Dr. William Holland Wilmer, head of the Wilmer Institute at Johns Hopkins, were special speakers, who gave interesting addresses in connection with Cathedral building.

General Lejeune Receives Parting Gift.

On a recent Sunday morning at Epiphany Church, a representative group of the vestry and congregation of Epiphany Church assembled in the vestry room of the church and presented to General John A. Lejeune, as a parting token of affection and esteem a very handsome pair of five branched candelabra. In the absence of the rector, the presentation was made by Dr. Morris and responded to by General Lejeune.

The candelabra are of fine old Adam Sheffield, of beautiful, antique design.

General Lejeune leaves Washington to accept the position of Superintendent of the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, Va.

The Washington Cathedral Open-air Services began on Sunday, May 12, at 4 P. M., and will continue, weather permitting until September 29. The Rt. Rev. James E. Committee on St. Luke's, Tokyo.

An interesting meeting of the diocesan committee in aid of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, was held this week, at which reports were made showing $6,500 raised among the churches of the diocese. This amount does not include certain gifts of good size, from some individual members of the diocese. The amount is not as large as it might be, but the committee is to be congratulated nevertheless upon its hearty effort, and upon a success, which in view of all the circumstances is praiseworthy.

Dr. Mabel E. Elliott, of the staff of St. Luke's, was present and made a fine address upon the hospital's remarkable work.

Parish House for Flushing Assured.

At the conclusion of a campaign for funds to build a parish for St. George's, Flushing, it was announced that $159,783.26 had been pledged. This is somewhat short of the goal that was intended to be reached, but Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, chairman of the committee, announced that methods of continuing the effort had been agreed upon, and there was reason to believe they would be successful. There was much enthusiasm and very hearty support for the project throughout the parish.

Florence Nightingale Service.

Florence Nightingale's birthday, May 12, which this year falls on the Sunday after Ascension Day, will be celebrated as last year by two special services for nurses in this diocese. At St. Ann's, Brooklyn, the Guild of St. Barnabas and the Nurses Association will sponsor a service at which delegations of graduate and pulpil nurses from almost all the hospitals of Brooklyn and Queens will be present; and at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, there will be a similar service, in which many nursing organizations and allied bodies of Nassau and Suffolk Counties have been invited to participate.

PERSONAL NOTES.

The Rev. George Victor Bell, who has for a year been rector of St. Luke's Church, Pedlar Bills, and the group of churches around Lynchburg, Va., namely, Madison Heights, Schuyler, Boonesboro and Ivy Shapel, has resigned this charge to take effect the first of June to become rector of a church in the Diocese of Maine.

DIANA DAUNTLESS
By Paul Kester

Author of "His Own Country", etc.

A spirited novel of the Romany roads and the gay court of early eighteenth century England. Sir John Dauntless, of Irish royal rank, has lost his title and lands by supporting the Pretender. Blind and poverty-stricken he and his lovely granddaughter, Diana, come to England to regain their fortune which has fallen to an old cousin, Lady Bridget O'Malley. But, through intrigue and forgery, their relations believe them dead and no one will recognize them. Only after many and diverse adventures do they come into their own. Diana is a fascinating figure with her quick Irish wit and warm friendliness, and the men and women who cross her path are as vivid. Each plays a distinctive part in this colorful, quick-moving drama.

ABOUT THE NEW PRAYER BOOK

We are overwhelmed with inquiries as to when the new Prayer Book will be ready, and definite dates for delivery promised by other houses are quoted to us.

Our own edition of the Prayer Book will be ready as soon as any edition can be. Beyond that we cannot say; but our best judgment is that publication of any edition cannot be effected before October or November. Please do not be misled by promises of earlier delivery.

We recommend:

That orders for the book for the pews be placed at once, because there will be priority observed in filling orders for these.

That orders for individual books, especially in leather bindings, do not be placed until nearer the time of publication. We shall carry in stock not only the books of our own manufacture, but the best selections from other houses as well, and our customers will therefore have the advantage of our careful selections if they wait.

WE ANTICIPATE CHANGES in styles and prices of leather-bound books, and suggest that as nothing can be gained from placing early orders for these, it will be advantageous to WAIT for fuller information that is not available yet, but will be in time.

Our lists of individual books will be issued not later than September, in ample time before the new book can be ready. But if anything unforeseen happens to expedite publication, we shall be ready to make the earliest deliveries possible.

RELIGIOUS VIEWS OF GREAT SCIENTISTS

In considering the question whether the influence of culture is necessarily antagonistic to religion, a writer in the "Lutherische Kirchen-Zeitung" (Columbus, Ohio,) cites briefly the religious utterances of great scientists of the past. These may be nothing new in the citations given, but their grouping lends new emphasis to the point the writer is striving to make. He says:

"Copernicus, Kepler, and Newton were earnest Christians, who saw the handwriting of God in the works of nature. Copernicus is the founder of our present astronomical system, but his gravestone bears the following inscription in Latin: 'I do not expect the favor which Thou hast given to Paul, nor the grace with which Thou forgavest Peter; only the clemency which Thou hast shown to the thief on the cross I beseech Thee to grant me.' Kepler closes his most important book with this sentence: 'I thank Thee, my Lord and Creator, for the joy which the work of Thine hands hath given me. . . . If I have said anything unworthy of Thee, or have sought to gain honor for myself rather than Thee, graciously forgive me.' Of Newton, the great English naturalist, it is said that, like the German poet, Klopstock, he never pronounced the name of the Almighty without uncovering his head. The greatest of scientists, Karl Ritter, in his 'Contemplation of Palestine,' says: 'The world is full of the glory of the Creator; where our ability and knowledge cease, revelation opens for us time and eternity.' J. Liebig, the prince of German analytical chemists, says that belief in God makes one humble and modest: Faraday, the great English naturalist, was an earnest Christian. He went to service regularly on Sunday, and prized the Bible as his dearest and most precious book. He often explained the Scriptures in meetings and proved that he lived according to them. He sought Christ because he was humble, and found him because he was sincere. It is certainly the most touching part of the story of this 'magnate in the realm of science,' that he bent his knees before the King of Truth and Love. Professor Benzenberg, the founder of the Observatory at Dusseldorf, has laid down his creed in the following words: 'I am a Protestant. As a Protestant, I read the writings contained in the Old and the New Covenant. These writings are my religion.' The late Professor of Botany in the University of Marburg, Wiegand, desired on his deathbed that the world should be informed that a 'scientist had died who was a believer.' And as we are speaking of botanists, another great savant, Professor Linnaeus, whose name is a household word in the scientific world, said: 'If we contemplate the smallest insect or the most gigantic of animals, the blade of grass in the field or the great cedar of the Lebanon—they are works which tell of the glory of God.' Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Earth is indeed the beautiful frontispiece of Eternity."

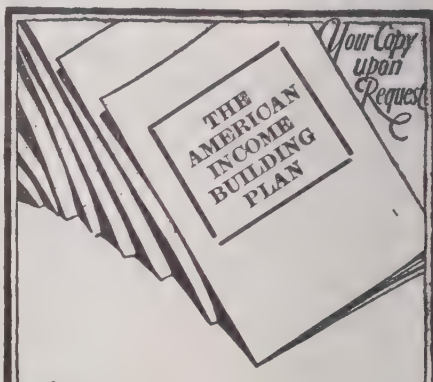
The way to find more light is to search for it with what you have.

If any one remains modest under blame, be assured he is so.—Jean Paul.

No office in the Church will ever be filled full by depending wholly on ability.—Rev. Wm. Porkess, D. D.

The absence of kindness means a frost, a killing frost; it means blight and gloom; it means a world of pain that need not be, imposed upon a world of pain that must be.—George A. Gordon.

"One never realizes his mortality as long as his mother is living."



"'Tis not how wide our name
Or strong our selfish will;
But, rather, can we live
A helper, still?"

In one wonderful prophetic utterance the Master's strong controlling tenderness is taken up by the Eternal Himself as the only worthy image of His own. He clasps to His infinite heart the tired and broken hearts of His human children. And, lo! an infinite maternity is found to live and breathe and burn in the depth of the Almighty Father's love. "As one whom His mother comforted, so will I comfort you."—Bishop Moulen.

It is told of Andrew Fuller that he once asked a friend for a contribution to foreign missions and received the reply, "I will give five pounds, Andrew, seeing it is you." But the preacher refused the proffered gift, and his friend, studying his face for a moment, amended his offer. "Well then, seeing it is the Lord, I will give ten pounds."

There is a destiny that makes us brothers;
None goes his way alone;
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own.

Salvation, in the highest sense, has nowhere been described as a state of bodily comfort, soothed by a vague pantheism, but consists in the recognition of a living soul, surrendered to a living Lord—by name, one Jesus of Nazareth.—Henry B. Wilson.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 94. RICHMOND, VA., JUNE 1, 1929. No. 22.

ONE

In the year 1840 a handsome, attractive, thoughtful young woman of an old and respected family in an old and sequestered neighborhood, dedicated herself to the care of her brother's daughter left, by untimely death, motherless at the age of eight months. The woman's naturally strong maternal instincts were concentrated on the baby, later on the growing child and girl. Letters, notes, memoranda, found recently in exploration of long accumulated family papers, tell of ceaseless, vigilant daily and hourly watchfulness over spiritual, mental and physical development, of constant prayer for guidance and help, of mutual devotion of guardian and ward becoming sweeter and more intense as time passed.

Afflictions came. Civil war forced upon the long peaceful community, accustomed to comfortable prosperity and the uneventful routine of orderly and established local society, tumult and horrors, devastation and cruel deprivafield, or in camp arrived in swift dreadful succession. Through it all the faith of the woman never wavered nor faltered. Her confidence in the Wisdom and Mercy of God, in His purpose to bring light from deepest darkness and blessings from direst trouble was unshaken.

She died in 1897, her faith justified, her fondest hopes granted, her prayers answered, her noble ambitions realized. She had lived to see her foster child adored and beloved queen of a large family circle, mother of many children and a grandmother, reigning tranquilly and happily, honored and beloved.

In the thirty-two years since the death of the woman who began her life work eighty-nine years ago the family circle has increased fast and spread into many cities and States. Her influence has grown and widened with the family. Scores now of manly men and womanly women, from blooming youth to ripened maturity and age, devout Christians, clean living, useful, training the oncoming generations to righteousness and usefulness, illustrate and transmit the spirit and teachings derived from her faithful and beautiful devotion applied to a responsive soul.

That is the record and story of one quiet woman whose name, perhaps, never was in print until her obituary was written. The Church, the cause of Christ and the country are safe and going forward because there have been and are yet many such women and men with like souls and hearts. As it happened, this woman, of a Southern State, was partly of old New England stock. Her carefully kept letters from relatives tell the thought and hopes and loves and ideals and purposes of other women, in the East, in lovely harmony with hers. Tickner, almost forgotten poet of Georgia, sang long ago of the women of the Valley of Virginia, whose beauty starred the earth and who lighted with happiness the hearths of countless homes.

Contrast the history and achievement of this modest woman who nurtured the baby to lovely womanhood and motherhood with that of the dry-as-dust professors and self-advertising scientists, small, flippant, cheap philosophers, the obtrusive writers in newspapers and magazines, insisting laboriously that there is no God, no soul, no life beyond what we have here. Making no pretense to intellectual brilliancy, profound thought or large learning, the woman did splendidly the duty given her to do within her own home, did it joyously and patiently. She earned well and delighted in her reward in the development by the objects of her tender care of fine character and purpose and earnest piety. Through the passing years and the coming and going generations her teachings and love live, a permeating influence, quickening and lifting souls, filling hearts with the light that shines on the world in benevolence and kindness and helpfulness for all humanity and loyal service for the Almighty. Professor, scientist, pretentious philosopher and writer, professional sceptic and atheist, do their utmost to shrivel the soul, harden and constrict the heart, pervert minds to reasoning and opinions the inevitable logic of which is concentrated selfishness, bitter cynicism and misanthropy. Contrast this woman, proved, by the written records of her most sacredly secret meditations and by the memories of her cherished by all who knew her, never to have known an impure impulse or harbored a low or mean thought, with the sordid peddlars, of both sexes, of filth who ply their shameful work in books, newspapers, magazines, among students of colleges proclaimed to be centres of "liberal" and "advanced" views. Compare the results of her instruction, example and precept—generations of gentle, refined, God-fearing, God-serving people—with the loud and vulgar products of some of these "advanced" institutions.

It was as impossible for her, with her breeding and surroundings, to feel social inferiority to anybody on earth as it was for her to assert superiority or to deny tolerance and respect and kindly consideration to the humblest or poorest. Crudely written, ill-spelt, letters from former slaves of her family, occurring among the old papers, give eloquent expression of gratitude for generous aid in time of need and of affectionate confidence in her ceaseless kindness. Contrast her with the unhappy people seeking always and everywhere to thrust themselves to the front, believing themselves to be climbing while descending, surrendering in vain quest of social eminence self respect, friendships, opportunities to be of real value and money that could do so much actual good. Contrast her with those who degrade the blessings of honored names and ancestry or wealth by arrogant assumptions and insolent hurting of the feelings of the less fortunate.

The lovely life story of this one woman is preserved and told by the accident of existence and accessibility of family achives. This country has been glorified, strengthened, cleansed and carried onward by such women, by men of like kind, in varying spheres and all degrees and stations. Faithful and reverent believers in God and followers of Christ and living exponents of Christianity and of loyalty to Jehovah, they do magnificently unostentatiously and unobtrusively and go hence; and their works do follow them. Many readers of The Southern Churchman will recognize among their own acquaintance persons like the woman whose outline picture has been drawn briefly here—tireless, lovely ministers and angels of mercy to stricken parents, friends, wives, husbands, sisters or brothers or helpless children. Slaves to outworn, old-fashioned, discarded superstitions these are, according to the sneers of the cackling, shallow, "advanced", professors, preachers, writers, modernists, materialists, all the tribe of the noisy and superficial, the seekers of publicity and pennies; but such slaves make the vitality and progress and assure the stability of this foremost nation. Any advanced scientist or modernist orator or writer can demonstrate quickly that love, loyalty, honor, self sacrifice, by which these ignorant and blinded slaves were and are governed and guided have no scientific basis, can not be traced in the evolutionary processes of any reptile or mammal or in any geological formation or remnant of lost races. It is exactly appropriate that the authorities of Chicago University—somewhat famous as an "advanced" institution—just a few days ago decreed abandonment of the honor system for their students. Honor is a thing no more to be proved scientifically or mathematically than the existence of the soul, the future life or the dimensions of space. If strictly human reasoning directs our conduct, lies, theft, betrayal of trust, when they can be used with apparent safety and for our own advantage, are duties to ourselves. If the Ten Commandments are but the fancies of an unidentified Jew there are no moral laws or restrictions requiring respect or obedience and our indulgence in crime or abstinence from it is a mere matter of taste, convenience or conditions.

Yet the believers in God, those seeking to be His servants, those accepting the commandments as His word, those to whom love, honor, faith, service, are sacred and supreme, are the builders, the benefactors, the leaders and workers in all useful enterprises, the defenders of order and decency and civilization, the valiant fighting men in war, diligent and strong promoters of peace.

The woman we have been considering never thought of being scientific or liberal or advanced, modern in her theology or in any way sensational. She believed in and loved her Saviour and Creator, sought fervently to do their will, took to her arms and heart one of these little ones needing her care. She did beautiful and wonderful good, doubtless undid and prevented more harm than all the modernists and materialists have been able to accomplish. The flavor and inspiration of her life and work, done so faithfully and humbly, and of the lives and work of the others like her, live and will live to the end of time for purification and elevation of the hosts of the future. Intangible, invisible, as the far wafted fragrance of a dew kissed rose, these deathless inheritances make a force igpregnable against all assaults of evil and destruction as the battlement of Heaven, powerful and resistless as the onward march of a phalanx of archangels.

Alfred B. Williams.

The Two Mysteries

The young daughter of a dear friend of Walt Whitman's died a few years ago. The old poet sat in the night-watch about the dead girl and wrote the following, which combines religion and philosophy:

We know not what it is, dear, this sleep so deep and still;
The folded hands, the awful calm, the cheek so pale and chill;
The lids that will not lift again, though we may call and call,
The strange white solitude of peace that settles over all.

We know not what it means, dear, this desolate heart-pain;
This dread to take our daily way, and walk in it again;
We know not to what other sphere the loved who leave us go,
Nor why we're left to wonder still, and why we do not know.

But this we know: Our loved and dead, if they should come this day—
Should come and ask us, "What is life?" not one of us could say.
Life is a mystery as deep as ever death can be;
Yet, oh, how sweet it is to us, this life we live and see!

Then might they say—these vanished ones—and blessed is the thought:
"So death is sweet to us beloved, though we may tell ye naught;
We may not tell it to the quick, this mystery of death,
Ye may not tell us, if you would, the mystery of breath."

The child who enters life comes not with knowledge or intent;
So those who enter death must go as little children sent.
Nothing is known. But I believe that God is overhead,
And as life is to the living, so death is to the dead.

JUSTIFICATION AND SANCTIFICATION

By the Reverend W. R. Guest

Vicar of St. Silas, Toxteth Park, Liverpool.

Justification and Sanctification.

THESE two words denote two of the main aspects of salvation, and it is essential for the student of the Scriptures to understand their meaning, and their most vital connection one with the other. It is to be feared that they are not understood as fully as they should be, though the marvel of Grace that they stand for, is of course inexhaustible in its wonder and blessedness.

The Nature of Justification.

First, as to the nature of Justification.

In the term justification we have the description of our standing in God's sight with reference to the Law of God—the eternal Law of Righteousness, the faultless exponent of which is the Lord Jesus Himself. Justification, compared with the righteousness of Jesus Christ.

I have always found that it is helpful to illustrate this great truth of Justification by considering the case of an offender against the law of the land. Let us suppose the case of a forger. The man is brought before the judge—he is convicted of the crime, and the judge must sentence him! Sentence is pronounced and the man expiates his sentence—he then goes free. The law cannot touch him again, for it has been satisfied; but the man is not made innocent thereby—he is still the forger; the stain on him still remains. He is free, but not justified, nor forgiven.

Take another illustration. I am caught by the police riding my motor cycle without a license or at excessive speed. I am summoned—convicted and fined. I have no money to pay my fine, and it is paid by a friend. I go free; the law is satisfied, it cannot touch me again for that offence—the fine has been paid by another for me. I am free, but a convicted law-breaker—I am not innocent; I am not justified; nor am I forgiven.

Take another illustration. A man has murdered some one—he is convicted and sentenced to death. As he lies in the condemned cell awaiting his execution, a message comes that he is pardoned—there has been some aspect of his deed which in a large measure has mitigated its awfulness; and the King has exercised His royal prerogative of pardon. The man goes free. He is free of the law, but he is guilty—he did commit murder: he will always be a murderer, though he is forgiven: but he is not justified.

One must admit that these illustrations are inadequate, but they will serve to help us in our understanding of the subject.

As regards the first illustration—the man who worked out his sentence. There are none like this in the spiritual sense; for the "wages of sin is death", and "all have sinned", and death has "passed upon all"—there is no completing the terms of this dread sentence.

As regards the second illustration, where the penalty is borne by another out of friendship—thank God, we have believed that to be our case! "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed . . . the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." Wonderful grace—wonderful love! He pays and we go free.

But there is more than this in Justification. This is included—it is the ground-work on which Justification rests; but there is more to follow.

Take the third illustration, that of the condemned but pardoned murderer. "Who can forgive sins, but God only?" The earthly king in exercising his royal prerogative sets the murderer free—pardons him; but what does that mean? He remits the penalty, but does he—can he—take away the guilt? No—never can the king deal with the guilty conscience! No—his is human forgiveness—no more penalty—no more bringing up of his crime—freedom for the guilty; a wonderful thing, but not enough for the sinner. God alone indeed forgives sin—"Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back"; but here is the point where God's forgiveness exceeds that of man—He not only remits the penalty, but He deals with the guilt and takes it away—He purges the conscience and makes it "void of offence".

Now this really is the essence of Justification. There is no possible illustration, because it is a Divine thing—God alone can do it.

If you take the case of a man accused of a crime who is tried and acquitted—he leaves the court free and innocent. Well, the justified child of God is like that; he who was guilty is free of the Law and innocent—guiltless—not because of what he is in himself, but because of what God has made him. He is justified in the sight of God.

"Bold shall I stand in that great day,
For who aught to my charge shall lay?
Fully absolved through Christ I am,
From sin and death, from guilt and shame."

We may at this point gather up the threads of our subject, and, having probed a little into the wonderful nature of justification, proceed to examine some other points. It is scarcely necessary here to point out the need of Justification—rather let me emphasize the need of preaching and teaching the matter clearly, and pointedly.

The Ground of Justification.

As the ground of Justification—we have already seen that the work of the Lord Jesus is the ground on which the whole process rests. It was the purpose of the Incarnation that this great salvation might become possible. His Life of Righteousness made it unnecessary for Him to die for His own sin: thus the Righteousness of Christ is the "fulfilling of the Law for Righteousness to every one that believeth"—the righteousness which justifies is His righteousness. Then His Death is vicarious: He bore the punishment of sin—He tasted death for every man. His Resurrection marked the approval of the Father on His work. It is the sign for all eternity that God is satisfied with Him, and with us in Him, so that it is clearly stated—"He was raised again for our Justification." The Ascension and the promise of the Second Advent show us that this ground of our Justification is so sure that sin is completely overcome as to its past curse, its present power, and its future effects—sin overcome means death destroyed, and justification made apparent for all eternity. God is "just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus".

The Method of Justification.

As to the method of Justification, it is that God applies to—imputes to—clothes with, the righteousness of Christ, everyone that believes the Gospel, and exhibits repentance in sincerity. This explains the righteousness of convicted sinners—the penalty borne by Another, the reinstatement into righteousness on account of that Other's righteousness, Who needed not to pay the penalty for Himself. This may be called the method by which God justifies.

The application of this to the individual sinner is of course by Faith. What a wonderful Gospel! When the heart, moved to repentance by the conviction of sin and need, and the certainty of judgment, turns to God and believes—trusts implicitly on the love and work of Christ—there and then God not only remits the penalty of sin, but "makes" (or reckons) such an one Righteous—removes the guilt from the conscience, and bestows the high heavenly character of a child of God.

"My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear;
He owns me for His child,
I can no longer fear;
With confidence I now draw nigh,
And 'Father, Abba Father', cry."

The Result of Justification.

It goes somewhat against the grain to be dissecting such a subject as this; but suffer one more point—the result of Justification. This will lead us to the second part of our subject.

The immediate result of Justification is Peace with God—"being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." I will not stay expatiating on this point; it is a matter to rejoice in, and thank God for, rather than to spin words about. Praise God for this peace! It has saved many of us from despair and misery. Shame on us that we lie sometimes in Doubting Castle, in the clutch of Giant Despair, with the golden key in our pocket—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." But there is another result of Justification which is really implied in the fact of our Peace with God; which is necessary to its maintenance and enjoyment; and that is our Sanctification.

Here may I pause, before dealing with the second part of our subject, to remark how logical the Gospel is; how one thing follows another in a beautifully ordered sequence! This is a point which the Modernist seems utterly unable to comprehend: if you break into this sequence, and this order, you lose the rest; disturb one stone and the building totters.

If the Atonement be not a substitionary Sacrifice, where is the ground for Justification? If the Resurrection be not actual, where is the pledge of God's acceptance? If the Second Coming be not real, where is the full enjoyment of the Righteousness which is by Faith, and the final complete triumph over sin—its guilt, its power and its effects? And if the Bible is not true, what is the use of bothering about it at all? "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die."

But to return to our subject. The term Sanctification is used in various senses. The sense in which I refer to it will appear subsequently, I hope; I do not forget or ignore the other meanings of the word Sanctification.

Being sanctified implies being set apart in a special way for a special purpose—such an one is a Saint, and all God's people are called to be saints—not when dead, but very much alive—a "peculiar" people like Israel of old.

It thereby follows that the "saint" acquires a new character: he is a changed being; he occupies a new position; he is a new creation; he is born again. Therefore this new character, in which he is to live henceforth, is the natural outcome of Justification: we call it Sanctification. It is the work of Grace entirely: the justified man does not justify himself—therefore he does not (in this sense) sanctify himself. He is holy because he has been made holy.

He belongs to a holy God; and therefore his character or description is a holy one—he is sanctified. He is born into the family of God: he therefore possesses the nature of that family. God's Day is hallowed, God's Book is hallowed, and God's child is hallowed—such an one is a saint—not by his own doings, but by the act of God. "Ye shall be holy because I am Holy." He is not a child of God because he is holy; but he is holy because he is a child of God.

Now this is a truth that is not well understood. It seems to me to be fundamental; not only because it is a wonderful corollary to Justification but because it alters completely (for me at all vents) the way in which we may regard holiness of life; it points us to the starting-point or motives, or the source of all ability to live as a Christian. Let us consider it from another point of view.

If we are justified, then we are children of God; if we are children of God, then God the Holy Spirit dwells within us—our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost which we have of God. "The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

So then Sanctification, in the primary sense, is the character of all justified people—the holy family of God. There follow naturally, on this, several important practical deductions.

1. We are not our own. This truth, when fully understood and acquiesced in, is of such a character as to affect the whole life. It gives a different aspect to life: it means that our strength, our time, our talents, our possessions, are all His, and, like ourselves, are thereby sanctified—set apart for the Master's use; and on us and ours there should be seen the inscription—"Holiness unto the Lord."

2. We have a life within us which must manifest itself. The Holy Spirit dwelling within us is God's Gift to all His justified people, and by this fact are we sanctified and sealed; but He must be allowed to show His power in the life. Here (it seems to me) is the connecting link between two views of Sanctification: the human element and the Divine here meet. It is by the inscrutable will of God that I have any say in the matter; but the fact remains that I have, for I can grieve the Holy Spirit, and can quench His holy fire; I can run counter to His guidings; can disobey His promptings or fail to answer to them; in short, I can so live that He is unable (I speak in human terms) to manifest Himself in me. Such is not "Christ living in me"; for it is I myself and not Christ—I am failing to work out in fear and trembling what God has worked in me. So here is holiness by the act of God, and holiness (in a sense) the result of my own doings. If my will is surrendered to God the Holy Spirit, then my holy character is made known by my holy life.

3. There is a standard of Sanctification given to us; and that is in the Holy Word of God. "Sanctify them through Thy Truth: Thy Word is Truth"—so prays our gracious Saviour; and what He speaks must surely be right. We have the standard of holiness here—a standard open to all God's children; for we have the Holy Ghost to guide us in the truth, an unction from the Holy One to know all things: having the Spirit of God, we can discern spiritual things, and "if any man will do His Will, he shall know of the doctrine." That is the way—ready to learn and ready to obey; no one shall be left in doubt. In the Word are the principles which should govern all the issues of life; and one of the marks of a justified, sanctified man, is that he adorns the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

I am conscious of a singular inability to express even a small part of what all this implies; but I would ask you in the foregoing to note (1) the Origin of our Sanctification and (2) the Ordering of our Sanctification; and now finally (3) the Object of our Sanctification.

Surely the object is the good pleasure of God. To understand that God can be actually pleased with us must always, I think, produce a wondering awe: the pity is, that we so often use the expression that the wonder of it becomes unnoticed. God pleased with me—how is it possible? Well, I am first of all accepted in the Beloved; and then my whole being is restored to the position that man was originally created for—to please God. I am placed in that position; I am given the power to do it if I will; I am shown the way, what to do and how to do it; and I am assured of God's pleasure in me and my preciousness to Christ, as one of that Church which is His Bride. What shall I say then? Could God go further in the matter? How clear seems St. Paul's line of thought—"the love of Christ constraineth us"—"gives us no other choice." I am His, and I must consecrate myself to Him: there are failings, but the fountain for sin and uncleanness is open; there are backslidings, but there is healing and unlimited love; there is weakness, but there is unbounded Grace; there is unprofitable service, but there is the promise—"Abide in Me, and ye shall bring forth much fruit"—"As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you: continue ye in My love."

GENERAL LEE

By the Reverend Pembroke Reed

The following is a sermon preached at the annual service of the Oakwood Memorial Association, which was held this year in Christ Church, Church Hill, Richmond, Virginia, May 5:

2 Samuel 23:15, 16. My text is found in a portion of God's Book which tells of a man of God and a warrior—David. He is giving his last words—reviewing God's acts through m and recording the deeds of his worthies. In the roll call of the heroes who did great exploits we have the three mighty men—who are noted for three things.

1. They joined David in a gloomy cave in time of harvest. They did not wait to gather in the fruit of their toil and outlay but turned their backs upon it all constrained by love for David though he was a fugitive and outcast.

2. They kept so close to David that they caught his sigh.

3. They actually risked their lives to bring David this refreshing draught from the well in Bethlehem, his old home town. To David it represented their blood. It was not right for him to indulge his appetite and sentiment at such expense. Such chivalrous devotion touched an answering chord in their chief. The sparkling water was to osacred to be taken for any baser use than as a libation to Jehovah. It was noble for them to have brought it to him, but it would have been ignoble for him to have quaffed it like water from any other well.

Let David represent the old South—let Lee and his followers represent the spirit of the three mighty men. They left all to join the South, invaded as David's home town was. Like these men living so close they heard the sigh of the South. Other was the dominating motive. Not slavery, but the sovereign right of States—call it what you will, a sacrifice for others was pre-eminently the motive, and a deep love for their own. They risked and gave their lives and now we are the recipients, so to speak of what they achieved for us at such cost. We are constantly abusing our heritage—our age lightly accepts for self gratification what is bought by blood. And so the heritage of the struggle of the sixties, shall we accept and apply it in a selfish way, indulging the pride of sentiment for the great deeds, reaping blessings because of material and social benefits which grew out of the ashes of lives so nobly sacrificed for us. No—it is ours to do as David did. We wish to make an offering to God. Such deeds require and inspire further sacrifices on our part. This ought to be the spirit of our Memorial Day.

2. Let Us Consider Now Our Heritage.

Major Giles Cooke, the only survivor of Lee's staff, said that when he met Lee in '61 here in Richmond he was to him the greatest, ablest and handsomest man he had ever met, and his after years of association with him confirmed him in this estimate.

So much is well known to us and oft repeated that I will only call attention to his greatness of character, ever mindful of what he would have us remember, that in all that he attained to in nobility of character was because of the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and to Him be all the glory.

Some one has said that, "sculpture is knocking away superfluous marble". Certainly in human life the impress of the Saviour is being wrought out by blows—the chisel of suffering and discipline must be a factor in reproducing the Saviour's image. "We did esteem Mim stricken, smitten of God," etc. Therefore He shall divide the spoil with the great. What but divine grace is responsible for such lofty bearing as he showed after the campaign in Western Virginia, which resulted in failure. No one would have known the facts had Lee not whispered it in the ears of President Davis at his earnest request, viz., that had his plans and orders been carried out the result would have been victory. And yet with clamor raised against him in South Carolina he bore it in silence not defending himself. Consider him accused of many things falsely and answering nothing.

See him assigned to duty in Richmond in which, as he says, he could see "neither advantage nor pleasure", but adds, "I will not complain but do my best". Beloved, it seemed like an inauguration from Heaven when the great and good Bishop Meade on the night that he died sent for General Lee, reminded him of the days when he taught him the catechism and gave him his parting blessing. Certainly through all the trials through which he passed he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. He lifted high the banner of Christ. With him his faith was part and parcel of him—he was always the same in victory or defeat, since he walked by faith. It often seems that men are called on to do the thing that is especially repugnant to their nature. Moses, the meekest of men, became the great leader and lawgiver and organizer of a nation. And Lee with a hatred for war, with a nature that was all for love, with an intense sympathy and a heart bleeding over the death of his men, was being crucified during those four years. There seems, in this fact, that which makes his brilliant strategy and generalship more glorious because achieved at the expense of such deep suffering.

What is more conspicuous about him than his Christian faith—he was outspoken about it though never parading it. A man of prayer—praying for Jackson when wounded as he believed he had never prayed for himself, giving thanks after the battle of Fredericksburg for God's mercies and in all his orders and reports always gratefully recognizing the Lord of Hosts as the Giver of victory and expressing humble dependence and trust in Him—it was this living faith which forms the dynamic of this mighty man. Major Cooke tells of his great interest in a colored Sunday School in Petersburg. Hear him preach on the occasion of the day of fasting and prayer called for by Mr. Davis August 13, '63. Lee says, "Soldiers, we have sinned against Almighty God. We have forgotten His signal mercies and have cultivated a revengeful, haughty, and boastful spirit. We have not remembered that the defenders of a just cause should be pure in His eyes, that our times are in His hands and we have relied too much on our own arms for the achievement of our independence. God is our only refuge and our strength. Let us humble ourselves before Him. Let us confess our many sins and beseech Him to give us a high courage and purer patriotism and a more determined will; that He will convert the hearts of our enemies and He will hasten the time when war, with its sorrows and sufferings, shall cease and that He will give us a name and place among the nations of the earth." Oh, that a nation-wide hook-up might broadcast these words to this nation today. He carried high the banner of Christian devotion to duty—writing his daughter to learn the duty to God and her neighbor, for that is the "great object of life". He proved his devotion to duty, for if ever man went through a gruelling test, he did.

He suffered from the incomplete and often traitorous conduct of others—he suffered from politics and was forced against his judgment to fall in with plans, for example, in the final defense of Richmond which, as Lord Wolsey says, was a strategic error and forced on him for political, not military reasons. Nevertheless he goes sublimely on to his Gethsemane. Time may have mitigated it somewhat, but though not a participant myself, though satisfied to be in the Union and opposed to slavery and not grieving over losing the cause we espoused, yet from childhood I confess to you that I cannot read of Lee's surrender without a tender pathos that pains me to the depths of my heart and all but brings tears. Oh, how sublime his grace in defeat and when, like Abraham offering Isaac, he met his supreme test in surrender, he says, weare not to be concerned with what history would say about the surrender of an army in the field, but is it RIGHT"? "Men, we have fought through the war together, I have done my best for you, my heart is too full to say more". DUTY—Crucifixion of soul in surrender of most prized design.

General Lee's son, R. E. Lee, says: "General Lee's physician attributed his death, in great measure, to moral causes. The strain of his campaigns, the bitterness of defeat aggravated by the bad faith and insolence of the victor, sympathy with the sufferings of the Southern people and the effort at calmness under these accumulated sorrows seemed the sufficient and the real causes that slowly but steadily undermined his health and led to his death. Yet to those who saw his composure under the greater and lesser trials of life and his justice and forbearance with the most unjust and uncharitable, it seemed scarcely credible that his serene soul was shaken by the evil that raged around him.

Our Saviour died of a broken heart—this man followed in His train.

No wonder the Union soldier who lifted his gun to shoot him twice and dropped it, was unable to shoot such a good man. His hour was not yet come. The prophet in a bold figurative stroke says, "A man shall be as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land". It was a desert figure and the rock by resisting the drift of sand made posible fertile spots in the dreary waste. In this time of flux and change and unrest—afflicted by commercial drifts—theological drifts and moral drifts how refreshing to look at this commanding figure who is verily a refuge from the storms and the shadow of a great rock arresting the drift. He endured and proved that his colors were burnt in. Of him it might be said, of Milton who in his blindness persecution, peril and misery could yet write:

"I argue not
Against Heaven's hand or will not bate a jot
Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer Right onward."

Such a spirit partly made by you men of the sixties and reflected in your lives and those of our Southland is our heritage.

3. What Is Our Responsibility?

He would not drink, but poured it out to Jehovah. I am persuaded that in these days a mighty sigh goes up for a draught of the refreshing qualities shown by Lee and the men who followed him. We are reviewing what they have brought to us. And while untold blessings were purchased by their blood, we must receive them by rededicating ourselves to the Lord they served.

We have fallen upon such forward looking days that some are forgetting the command "remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set". There are many moorings being cut now when the progressive current is setting in and we may ask how far are we to go with the tide? Or, perhaps, better, we may say, what is progressiveness in the final analysis?

Science has opened a new world—an impressive mansion is being created, but the sandy foundations are giving way before the onslaughts of materialism, atheism and crime. Civilization cannot build on false belief. Look at India and China. Nor can it build on immorality. Look at ancient Rome. We need to look back to consider our moral heritage. We are today because of our yesterdays. O departure from the old foundation truths seen today has not shown its baneful effect fully yet because of a foundation which men received from the old faith.

In old Virginia we are told she is passing into an industrial era. This may be good, but grave dangers attend it. There are new notes and new alignments that may carry us far afield if we do not hold fast to foundation principles.

To money grubbers we say, look at Lee's attitude to money—refusing large financial offers to help to educate young men.

Amid looseness and immodesty and vulgarity see the stainless, chivalrous gentleman sitting in the room with open door while the young men call on his daughter, thus standing for strict modesty and decorum. Amid present extravagance and luxury see his simplicity, amid ease and softness, see his patience and fortitude under trials. Amid lawlessness, violence and godlessnes see his obedience to authority, his gentleness and his abiding faith. Thank God for such a life and for its message to our times.

We never needed to observe Memorial Day more than now. It ought to act as a compass to a drifting derelict. Surely God-given leaders have by their shining examples left their impress—they have been as a magnet—a cohesive force that has gone into our homes and been woven into the fibre of our life and made us one in a heritage that has been a living potent factor as generations have come and gone. More than cold marble is the pulsating, living spirit of Lee. More than traditional tales is the perennial epic of a devoted womanhood with bursting, bleeding hearts and sacrifices too little known they tarried by the stuff. It has been said that at Calvary no woman added anything to the sufferings of our Lord. It ought to be said that but for this faithful band the Oakwood Memorial Association, the message of those times might be all but forgotten or at least its appeal obscured in this community.

The followers of Lee had a loyalty of conviction. But they had more. They had a devotion to the matchless beauty of the noble character which was his. Political questions were lost, swallowed up or, better still, transfigured in a confederacy which by its leader was shot through with faith and love and caused other considerations to retire as the stars before the rising sun.

A Lost Cause—yes, lost as the seed loses its shell and blossoms in the glory of its perfected beauty and refreshing perfume. Lost—with denuded homes, sore feet and starved bodies, aye, but rugged oak like quality—the stuff—purified spirits that through fiery trial developed the glory of true manhood. That's victory in the final analysis.

In old cathedrals they once put perfume in the mortar and so through the ages the building has been fragrant with the odors of the past. Thus the fragrance of their deeds of old must live through our own sacrificial service, even as it is said of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ, "He loved us and gave Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor".

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed"Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by R. R. P., of Dunedin, Florida:

> "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding: For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold" (Prov. 3: 13, 14.

Who will send one from the far-away places as well very near us?

THE LOVE OF GOD.

I plucked a purple violet
From out the soft green sod,
I laid its cool face to my lips
And felt a kiss of God.

I wandered in a forest deep,
Where never foot had trod:
I listened to its myriad tones
And heard the voice of God.

Last night I cradled in my arms
A drowsy head, a nod,
I looked into a rosy face,
And knew the love of God.

THE WONDER OF THE BOOK

By the Reverend Dyson Hague, M A.

The Wonder of Its Language.

ANOTHER wonderful thing is that this Book was not written in Athens, the seat of learning in Greece, nor in Alexandria in Egypt. It was not written by men who received their inspiration from the ancient sources of wisdom. It was written by men who lived in Palestine, in Nazareth, in Galilee. Many of the writers were what we would call illiterate. Not only were they not university men, or scholars or original thinkers; they could not speak their own language properly. There is a strong probability that neither John nor Peter could speak grammatically. You remember Peter was trapped because his dialect betrayed him. He spoke like a Galilean. Did you ever hear a man of Yorkshire or Somersetshire talking? Did you ever hear the brogue of an Irishman from Galway? It was like that with Peter and John (Matt. 27-73; Acts 2-7;4-13). They were uneducated men. And many of the men who wrote the Bible were men of that character. One was a farm hand. Another was a shepherd. They were men of no literary reputation. And yet from men of that type educationally has come a book that God in His mysterious power has so divested of all provincialism that it has become the standard of the language of the most literary nations of the world. And not only so. It is a book that has gone to the North and South and East and West. It is the strongest factor in modern life today, and yet it is of the ancient world. It is the most potent factor in the influence of the great nations of the progressive West, and yet it proceeded from the narrowest and most conservative people of the unprogressive East. All its authors were Jews, and the Jews by instinct and tradition, by education and sentiment, were the narrowest of all narrow people. The Jew was not only narrow; he had no interest in other nations. You know what a time it took to get the idea into Peter's head that he ought to have an interest in the salvation of the Gentiles of the outside world (Acts 10:14; Gal. 2:11-14). A miracle of special revelation only did it. How do you explain, then, the fact that these ignorant men, these most uncosmopolitan men, with all their provincialism, and exclusiveness, and insularity, were enabled to write a book which has become not only the Book of the Jews, but the Book of all men, and The Book of the world today. It is for only one tongue, and that is, the world's. It is for universal man as man. It is the proud boast of the Church of Rome today that it has but one language, and that a dead language, the Latin. But the Bible Society have a prouder boast. It is their boast that they have printed the Bible in over five hundred living languages; that they are giving the Living Word to every nation under heaven, that they may hear in their own tongue the wonderful works of God. Yes! God has so overruled the history of His world that there has been born a Society which has re-established the miracle of Pentecost. It is truly a miracle. It is a wonder to think that an old Hebrew book, written by a lot of Jews, has in God's mystic Providence been so divested of all orientalism and Judaism, and rabbinism, that the millions upon millions of boys and girls and men and women who read it never think of it as the writing of Hebrews or the language of an ancient and oriental race. To them they are simply the words of their own dear mother-tongue. It is the English Bible; the best that our literature can give in simple, noble prose, as Frederic Harrison once said in a lecture at Oxford. And yet, wonderful to think of, the German never thinks of it in any other way. To him it is the German Bible.

The Wonder of Its Preservation.

Another wonderful thing about the Bible is that it is almost the only book in the world that has stood ages of ferocious and incessant persecution. Century after century men have tried to burn it and to bury it. Crusade after Crusade has been organized to extirpate it. Kings of the earth set themselves, and rulers of the Church took counsel together to destroy it from off the face of the earth. Diocletian, the Roman Emperor, in 303, inaugurated the most terrific onslaught that the world has known upon a book. Every Bible almost was destroyed, myriads of Christians perished, and a column of triumph was erected over an exterminated Bible with the inscription: "Extincto nomine Christianorum" (The name of the Christians has been extinguished). And yet, not many years after, the Bible came forth, as Noah from the ark, to re-people the earth, and in the year 325, Constantine enthroned the Bible as the Infallible Judge of Truth in the first General Council. Then followed the prolonged persecution of medievalism. You all know how the Church of Rome denied the Scriptures to the people. The Church of Rome never trusted the people with the Bible. For ages it was practically an unknown book. Even Luther was a grown-up man when he said that he had never seen a Bible in his life. No jailor ever kept a prisoner closer than the Church of Rome has kept the Bible from the people. Not only so. In consequence of Edicts of Councils, and bans and bulls of Popes, Bibles were burned, and Bible readers sent by the Inquisition to rack and flame. Many of us have seen the very spot in old London where baskets full of English Testaments were burned with great display by the order of Rome.

Yet perhaps the worst persecution of all has been during the last one hundred and fifty years. The bitterest foes of the Bible, curiously enough, were men who claimed liberty of thought and Bolingbroke and Hume and Voltaire seemed so confident of the extermination of the Bible, that the Frenchman declared that a hundred years after his day not a Bible would be found save as an antiquarian curiosity. Then came the German rationalistic host, with the fiercest and deadliest of all the attacks. Baur and Strauss and the Tubingen School took up the cry of the Children of Edom: "Down with it, down with it, even to the ground." But He that sitteth in His silent heaven laughed, and Jehovah had them in derision. For here it is today, and stronger than ever. It stands, and it will stand. The adversaries have done their worst. They have charged their heaviest charge. They have fired their deadliest volley. Whatever unexpected adversaries appear in the future, no more destructive trios than Julian and Celsus and Porphyry, than Voltaire and Strauss and Renan, than Eichborn, Wellhausen and Kuenen, will ever be confederate against it. Yet in spite of these age-long persecutions the Word of the Lord is having free course and is being glorified. It is being circulated at the rate of about twenty-five million copies a year, in over five hundred languages of the globe. It has an influence it never possessed before. Verily, as we think of it we may challenge our proud age with the challenge of Moses, and cry: "Ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?" (Deut. 4:32).

Book Reviews

THE CHRIST OF GOD: By Dr S. Parkes Cadman. Cloth. Pp. 177. Published by the Macmillan Co., New York City. Price, $1.75.

Amid the various and compelling activities of his ever-busy life Dr. Cadman has found time to produce this readable and comprehensive volume on what he denominates "the key to the riddle of God". The book evinces large familiarity with current thought and the constant reference to writers prominently before the public is a challenge to the reader. When one has finished the discussion, he will determine that Dr. Cadman is persuaded that Jesus Christ is the Son of God in the unique relation to the Father which the Gospels set forth.

Yet, the reader who knows Dr. Cadman, will all the while feel in the back of his brain the sensation of a suspicion that the author knows how to ride two horses. When he writes (as in a recent personal letter) concerning the Jews and Christianity, "I have come to the conclusion that it is not a fraternal or profitable matter to engage in controversy about these two great Biblical religions or to endeavor to induce those who devoutly follow the faith of the Old Testament to transfer to our faith. Micah's great saying, 'What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy God', is still the guide of many," perplexity runs high and wonderment increases.

In the light of this statement, does Dr. Cadman for a moment believe that his counsel for the Jews of today would have been consistent with the evangel of the Acts of the Apostles? Would there have been any Christian faith at all to survive the hostility of that day, had the apostles presented this diluted gospel? Why does not the Jew of today require as much as then the redemptive power of the Cross? We need not engage in heated controversy; but surely we do recognize our responsibility to witness that "there is none other name under heaven whereby we must be saved." Does Dr. Cadman forget that the apostolic exclamation, "The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek", has never been revoked? Why is he so solicitous to leave the Jews to their self-complacency? Surely, he is relegating us to the period of the Judges when, "every man did that which was right in his own eyes". We wonder reverently how our good Lord is regarding this attitude. Our part is to be kindly considerate; to "think no evil". But we can be hurt in our souls that there may be peril of our Lord's death on Calvary for the sin of the world being relegated by this good man into the limbo of the non-essential.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

APOSTOLIC CATHOLIC VS. ANGLO-CATHOLIC.

"That may not be considered Catholic, which does not appear to be proved from holy Scripture" (Chrysostom, A. D. 390).

Mr. Editor:

In three issues of The Southern Churchman—April 6, 20 and 27—there appeared in the correspondence department communications over the signature of Mr. C. L. Marsilliot, the subject matter of which seems to me is of such importance that I am led to offer a few remarks thereon. Mr. Marsilliot's letters are always clear, forceful, and logical, conveying such definite information as ought to arouse the most somnolent Episcopalian. However, it required a "great earthquake" to awaken the Philippian jailor, spiritually as well as physically (Acts 16:25-31).

In the April 6 issue of The Southern Churchman, Mr. Marsilliot quotes certain items from The Living Church paper relative to Masses as used by the Rev. Selden Delaney in his church; namely, high masses, low masses, and benediction; which induce me to make a few remarks in connection therewith, inasmuch as I am personally aware that very many are not awake to the significance of the teaching and practices constantly and covertly indulged in by the Anglo (Romanizing) "Catholics", and tending towards the ultimate goal—union with the Roman Church. Having studied the principles and teaching of the Roman Church since I was a boy in the Irish Church Sunday School—at the age of fourteen I was able to recite the creed of Pope Pius IV—I feel constrained to pass on what I have learned meantime, not only from Romanist writers, but also from conversation with papal ecclesiastics. (I wonder how many of our Episcopalian ecclesiastics can recite the creed of Pope Pius or ever even read it?) Light is the only specific to dispel darkness. Referring to the Rev. Mr. Delaney's church notices as quoted from The Living Church: what is the meaning and why the use of the word "Mass?" The word is primarily of Latin origin and is so used in the Roman Church (which is known as the "Latin" Church by the Greek Orthodox), in the expression, "Ite missa est", the meaning of which is unknown. I have asked several Roman ecclesiastics and no two were agreed as to its meaning. Some said it meant, "Go, you are dismissed", used at the close of the Communion Office; another said it meant that the commemorative sacrifice had been "sent up to heaven", etc. The word has also an old Anglo-Saxon base, as seen in the word Christ-mas, where it means a "feast". So analyzed, the word "Mass" is distinctly of Roman origin, and has been such for many centuries, and is utterly meaningless. It is not used by the Greek Orthodox Church. To apply the word to the Communion is unintelligible. The word is not Catholic, but the use of the term by the Anglo-Catholic sect, betrays their design as being clearly Romeward, notwithstanding Mr. Delaney's expression "non-papal" offered as a soothing syrup. Further, did Christ celebrate low mass or high mass, or did any of the apostles, or did they introduce and practice "benedictions?" The words of the ancient Apostolic Catholic writer, Tertullian, A. D., 180, should be borne in mind—"All teaching must be set down as false if its tenor is opposed to the truth of the (primitive) churches and Apostles and Christ and God." The Anglo-Catholics seem disposed to swap their intelligence for a man-manufactured catholicism. The warning words of St. Paul to the Elders—not "priests"—of the Ephesian Church should also be remembered: "Of your own selves grievous wolves shall arise not sparing the flock" (The Acts 20:28, 29).

CHURCH UNITY.

Mr. Editor:

Your correspondent reporting the proceedings of the Virginia Diocesan Council has unintentionally made it appear that I am opposed to Church unity, when in fact, I am one of its heartiest advocates. I did not in the Council argue against the resolution to endorse the "reconciliation pact", but I argued for an amendment to that resolution that would protect the doctrine, discipline and worship of our Protestant Episcopal Church in America.

Since the General Church has offered to divided Christendom a basis for union in the Quadrilateral and since the Church in Virginia is an integral part of the General Church, it did not seem to me that the Diocesan Council was altogether within its rights to endorse a "pact" which offered Church unity on any condition less than this. I was not alone in my conviction, for at least forty members of the Council saw it as I did. Maybe Bishop Murray saw it in the same light for he declined to endorse the "pact" except in so far as it deplored a divided Christendom and expressed sympathy in all conferences looking toward reconciliation. Certainly the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church are in every respect far too valuable to be, if only by implication, so lightly set aside., and made of no effect as the wording of the resolution adopted at the recent diocesan convention seems to me to permit.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

The tenth annual session of the Council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held May 21-22 in St. Paul's Church, Salem, Va., of which the Rev. Roland Moncure is rector.

Following its usual custom, the Laymen's League of the diocese had a supper and mass meeting in St. Paul's Parish House Monday evening, at which the clergy were present, but mostly as "silent partners". The main topic was "The Layman's Responsibility". The speakers were Col. George L. Barton, of Virginia Military Institute at Lexington; Prof. Harry I. Johnson, of Roanoke College, at Salem, and Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, of Roanoke.

There were also brief discussions of a number of other subjects. The Rev. Louis G. Wood, of New York, spoke of the methods used by the National Council in calculating diocesan quotas.

The chairman of the meeting was Mr. Cecil E. Bertie, of Roanoke, last year's President of the League.

Officers elected for the coming year are: President, Colonel George L. Barton, Jr., of Lexington; Vice-Presidents, Dr. Harry I. Johnson, of Salem, and Mr. Herbert McK. Smith, of Staunton; Secretary, Mr. John L. Campbell, of Lexington.

The Council opened officially Tuesday morning, 9:00 o'clock, and adjourned Wednesday afternoon at 4:15. The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, presided. Some of the high lights of the Council were:

The Bishop's Address, in which he referred to: (1) The excellent financial record of our diocese in past years and the necessity of earnest efforts to maintain our standard. (2) The history and progress of Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg which, at the request of the Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, he himself founded and served as its first rector until his consecration as Bishop of the new Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, March 24, 1920. The success of the Bishop's recent effort to secure subscriptions to the amount of $200,000; of which $100,000 is to be used in discharging the present indebtedness of the institution and the remainder to be the nucleus of an endowment. (3) Civil Government and the necessity of respect for, and loyalty and obedience to, the constituted authorities.

The Council Sermon, delivered by the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, who spoke on the achievements made possible by faith.

The Address of the Rev. Lloyd S.

Charters, of Norwhich N. Y., who, at a mass meeting on Tuesday evening, spoke on "Personal Evangelism."

The Report of the Executive Board of the Diocese, by the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, of Bristol, Va.

Discussion of a Diocesan Young People's Conference, to be held at Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, June 15-25.

Initial steps taken, looking to a proper celebration, on March 24, 1930, of the tenth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., as first Bishop of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. By resolution the Council requested the Standing Committee to appoint a special committee to have charge of this matter; this special committee to be composed of the Rev. Dr. Thomas D. Lewis, President of the Standing Committee, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, two additional clergymen and two laymen.

Reports of Virginia Episcopal School, the Theological Seminary in Virginia, Stuart Hall, Boys' Home, the Woman's Auxiliary, the Associate Missions, St. Peter's in the Mountains, St. John's in the Mountains, the Wythe County Missions, Christ Mission near Amherst.

Resolution of appreciation of Mrs. W. H. B. Loving and her fine work as President of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Resolution of Sympathy for the family of Dr. E. L. Marshall, who died May 21, while driving near his home in Bedford County. For many years Dr. Marshall has served as a most interested and faithful Senior Warden and Treasurer of St. Thomas' Church near Big Island, Bedford County. A greatly beloved country physician of the old school.

Resolution of Sympathy for the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, rector of Trinity Church, Rocky Mount. Dr. Hobbs is a patient in Jefferson Hospital, Roanoke, where he recently underwent an operation. He appears to be well on the road to recovery.

Discussion of a proposal to change from twelve to a higher figure the canonical limit of the number of vestrymen in a parish. Finally the matter was referred to the vestries of the diocese with the request that they report their recommendations to the Committee on Constitution and Canons before the next Council. Several parishes in the diocese have the usual vestry of twelve and in addition, to increase interest and information as to the work of the Church, an extra-canonical "Associate Vestry".

Appointments and elections as follows:

Diocesan Officers—Executive Secretary and Treasurer, Thos. A. Scott, Roanoke; Chancellor, Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, Roanoke; Historiographer, Hon. Don P. Halsey, Lynchburg.

Standing Committee — The Rev. Messrs. Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., Thos. M. Browne and W. G. Pendleton, D. D.; Messrs. W. W. Brodie, C. S. Hutter and William J. King, Jr.

Examining Chaplains — The Rev. Messrs. Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., W. Cosby Bell, D. D., and Devall L. Gwathmay.

Members of the Executive Board—To serve three years under the rotation system—The Rev. Messrs. Devall L. Gwathmey and Roland Moncure; Messrs. John Lee Logan and R. L. Peirce.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod to be held in Harrisburg, Pa., October 15-17, 1929—The Rev. Messrs. E. R. Rogers, Ph. D., Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., W. Taylor Willis and J. Lewis Gibbs; Messrs. Jas. W. Gerow, F. C. Wiley, Wm. King, Jr., and C. S. Hutter.

Alternates—The Rev. Messrs. F. Ernest Warren, Thos. M. Browne, Carleton Barnwell and James A. Figg; Messrs. S. N. Hufford, John Lee Logan, W. M. Brodie and F. S. Crosby.

Commission on Architecture and Construction—The Rev. Messrs. Thos. M. Browne, John L. Gravvatt, Jr., and Devall L. Gwathmey; Messrs. A. Erskine Miller and C. Edwin Michael.

Trustees of Boys' Home—To serve three years under rotation system—The Rev. G. Otis Mead and Mr. H. Minor Davis.

Trustee of the Diocese—To fill a vacancy—The Rev. Thos. M. Browne.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Unable to be present at a Convention which he has attended continuously for fifty-three years, the Rt. Rev. Joseph Blount Cheshire announced to the annual convention of the Diocese of North Carolina, meeting at Holy Innocents, Henderson, May 14-15, that he had turned over to Bishop Penick, the Coadjutor, the whole general administration of the diocese. Expressing his wish to "be useful in a restricted sphere," Bishop Cheshire will retain some duties His absence at the convention was caused by the illness of Mrs. Cheshire, and her death on the second day.

The adoption of a Forward Movement budget that calls for economy of administration but no curtailment of the work of the diocese, was the subject of most debate of the convention. Characteristically, North Carolina did not question the apportionment given it by the General Church, though it involved an increase of some $4,000 that throws its own budget out of balance.

The report of an evaluation committee, appointed at the 1928 convention, came in for much discussion. Provision for a new policy in the diocesan missionary work, calling for the consolidation of mission fields, was adopted. The convention refused to change the time of its meeting, and was not in favor of self-entertainment of the delegates.

The Rev. Messrs. S. S. Bost and John Long Jackson; Messrs. John H. Cutter and Richard Lewis; and Miss Rena Clark were elected members of the Executive Council.

Delegates to Provincial Synod were elected as follows: the Rev. Messrs. Milton A. Barber, Elwood L. Haines, Isaac W. Hughes, John Long Jackson, Alfred S. Lawrence and Theodore Partrick, Jr.; Mesdames Frank H. Challen and F. S. Spruill; Messrs. J. H. Cowles, John S. Holmes, Henry M. London and J. Renwick Wilkes.

T. P. Jr.

EAST CAROLINA.

The forty-sixth annual convention of the Diocese of East Carolina met in St. John's Church, Fayetteville, Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16. At a pre-convention meeting held in the church on the evening of Tuesday, May 14. Mr. Leon Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, spoke on the need in the Church for lay evangelism. Mrs. F. N. Challen, student secretary for the Church at the North Carolina College for Women at Greensboro, spoke on the influence that St. Mary's House is having on the Church girls at that College. The Rev. William A. Lillycrop, rector of St. Paul's Church, Greensboro, told of a similar opportunity that the Church has with the students at the Eastern Carolina College for Women which is situated one block from the new stone church he is building. About fifty students are turned away from the old church each Sunday for want of room.

"During the past year we have had the largest number of clergymen serving in the diocese that have ever served at one time," said Bishop Darst in his annual address. The Bishop urged loyalty to the new Prayer Book as soon as it could be put into the hands of the people. Telling of the wonderful work that has been done during the year through the aid of the Brotherhood, the Church Army, and the Layman's League of St. James' Church, Wilmington, the Bishop closed his address with an earnest plea for pastoral evangelism.

A new method of making the apportionments for each parish and mission was thoroughly discussed, opening the way for its adoption at the next convention. This method is not based on the number of communicants, but on the ability to pay, being derived from the amount each parish and mission spends on itself.

The convention heard addresses from the Rev. Louis G. Wood and Dr. Larkin Glazebrook. The Rev. A. S. Lawrence, student chaplain at the University of North Carolina, said that there were more Church students at the university than at any other institution of learning in the South.

The convention expressed by resolution its willingness for the Bishop to continue to be of service to the General Church as chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism.

The forty-seventh annual convention will meet in St. Paul's Church, Greenville, next May.

The following were elected as members of the Standing Committee: the Rev. Robert Brent Drane, D. D., president; the Rev. Stephen Gardner, secretary; the Rev. William O. Cone; Messrs. Edmund R. Conger and J. C. B. Ehringhouse

Clerical deputies to the Provincial Synod are the Rev Walter R. Noe, the Rev. George Frank Hill, the Rev. Chas. E. Williams, the Rev. Stephen Gardner, the Rev. William A. Lillycrop and the Rev. William H. Milton, D. D. Alternates: the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., the Rev. I. deL. Brawshaw, the Rev. Harrell J. Lewis, the Rev. A. C. D. Noe, the Rev. Alexander Miller and the Rev. Archer Boogher.

Lay deputies are: Messrs. George B. Elliott, J. Q. Beckwith, John R. Tolar, Dr. C. J. Sawyer, Joseph Huske and T. H. Partrick. Alternates: John W. Dawson, J. R. Pinkham, C. C. Chadbourne, W. A. Townes, L. B. Morrill and Taylor Attmore.

S. G.

From convention address of the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D.:

Pastoral Evangelism.

By Pastoral Evangelism I mean the personal appeal to the individual by the priest and pastor of the flock—the earnest seeking for the sheep that have wandered away, and the loving effort to bring in those who have never been within the fold.

We, of the clergy, are busy with many things, and sometimes we are almost lost in the complicated machinery of modern parish activities, but we can never enter into the joy of our ministry, or realize the glory of our office, until we learn to present Christ in all His saving beauty and power to the individual soul who is waiting for the winning personal word."

NEW YORK.

Bishop William T. Manning has received as an expression of thanksgiving for his restoration to health, the promise of the hearty approval and concurrence of every clerical and lay member of the Diocese of New York in his efforts to complete the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. A resolution making this pledge was adopted amid applause at the closing session of the one hundred and forty-sixth annual convention of the diocese in Synod House of the Cathedral, May 15.

The action on the resolution followed the presentation by the Bishop of certificates of merit to those laymen who had completed more than twenty consecutive years as vestrymen of a church in the diocese. One of those to win a certificate was Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, a vestryman in St. James' Church, Hyde Park, N. Y. His name was applauded. A lay delegate from St. James' Parish stepped forward and offered to deliver the parchment to the Governor. Another to win a certificate was Charles H. Tuttle, United States attorney, a vestryman of St. Luke's Church, Convent Avenue and West One Hundred and Forty-First Street. Still another was S. Edward Nash, of Trinity Church.

The pledge to Bishop Manning was as follows: "Resolved, That as an expression of our thanksgiving to Almighty God for having in His mercy spared our beloved Diocesan to live and continue his great work in the building of the Cathedral this convention desires to go on record as assuring the Bishop and the trustees of the Cathedral that any steps they may see fit to take with a view to the speedy securing of the money necessary for the completion of that noble sanctuary will meet with the hearty approval and concurrence of every clerical and lay member of the convention."

The resolution was offered at the morning session by the Rev. Philip W. Fauntleroy, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Lake Mahopac, and according to the rule that all individual resolutions must be referred to a Committee it was sent to the committee on miscellaneous business.

The committee recommended that the resolution be not adopted as the "ground had been practically covered" by the action of the previous day in adopting a resolution giving thanks for the recovery of Bishop Manning from a three months' attack of pneumonia.

At Dr. Fauntleroy's objection, however, it withdrew the adverse recommendation.

"When you realize that the Bishop himself has collected the greater part of the $12,000,000 which has been paid over in the last five years for the building and endowment of the Cathedral, we owe it to him to adopt that resolution," Dr. Fauntleroy said. "We want the Cathedral to be not only an honorable mausoleum for our Bishop to lie in, but a great temple completed in his lifetime so that he can sit on the throne in the chancel and see the results of his arduous labor."

Bishop Manning called upon Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd to put the question, and a rising vote was then called for. Three elderly men failed to rise, but it is understood they had not heard the call for the vote.

Acting on a resolution offered by William H. Sage, a vestryman of the Church of Heavenly Rest, it was voted to print and circulate 2,500 copies of the annual address of Bishop Manning, which he read to the convention Tuesday afternoon. In this he said it was necessary for him to have a united and sympathetic board of trustees of the Cathedral to help him continue the burden of building it.

Bishop Lloyd addressed the convention. "I am especially pleased that the committee on miscellaneous business was overridden," said Dr. Lloyd. "And I am also especially glad that you adopted this resolution as an act of thanksgiving that Bishop Manning's health has been restored. More than any man I know he is carrying a tremendous burden."

Bishop Herbert Shipman followed Bishop Lloyd and said the present convention was the largest since that at which Dr. Manning was elected bishop.

HARRISBURG.

The most important feature of the twenty-fifth annual convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg, held in Trinity Church, Williamsport, Pa., Tuesday and Wednesday, May 14-15, Archdeacon Charles E. McCoy, rector, was the balloting for the election of a Suffragan Bishop for the diocese. After five ballots, all resulting in a deadlock, the convention was adjourned. It was announced that a third attempt will be made to elect a Suffragan at the twenty-sixth annual convention, to be held in St. James, Lancaster, in May, 1930. The following were nominated from the floor of the convention: the Rev. Canon Harold N. Arrowsmith, the Rt. Rev. W. H. Overs, the Rev. Edwin Royal Carter, the Rev. Malcolm DePui Maynard, the Rev. Hiram Rockwell Bennett, the Rev. Lewis G. Morris, and the Rev. Archibald M. Judd. The latter declined nomination and withdrew his name. Others whose names were written in on the ballot papers were the Rev. George Davidson, the Very Rev. Daniel W. Gateson, the Rev. N. B. Groton, the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, the Rev. C. E. Knickle, Archdeacon Charles E. McCoy, the Rev. Lewis Nichols, the Rev. Walter Byron Stehl, D. D., and the Rev. Alan Van Meter.

On Tuesday afternoon a pre-convention conference for laymen was held. The convention opened with Choral Evensong. Bishop Darlington, in his convention address, urged that greater zeal be shown in bringing children not only to Sunday School, but also to church, and he suggested that the clergy preach sermons which could be appreciated by the children.

At 7:30 P. M. the annual Churchmen's banquet was held in Trinity House. Mr. Archibald M. Hoagland, of Williamsport, was toastmaster, and the speakers of the evening were the Bishop of Erie, Bishop Darlington, and General Charles M. Clement, Chancellor of the diocese.

The second day began with a Diocesan Corporate Communion at 7:30 A. M.

The election to diocesan offices resulted as follows:

Secretary—The Rev. Samuel H. Sayre.

Treasurer—Richard M. H. Wharton, Harrisburg.

Chancellor—General Charles M. Clement, Sunbury.

Registrar—The Rev. A. A. Hughes.

Standing Committee—The Ven. Paul S. Atkins, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., the Rev. Lewis Nichols, the Ven. Charles E. McCoy, the Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, D. D., Thomas H. Hammond, F. K. Lukenbach, Hon. F. W. Culbertson, Abram Bosler and Dr. W. S. Hamaker.

Executive Council—The Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, D. D., the Rev. Frederick P. Houghton, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., the Rev. Hollis W. Colwell, the Rev. Anthony G. VanElden, the Rev. Clifford L. Stanley, and Messrs. Herbert W. Hartman, Ralph T. Smith, Col. W. Fred Reynolds, Gilbert W. Mattson, C. N. Tull and Guy Bresius.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod—Clerical, the Rev. Charles E. Berghaus, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., the Rev. A. A. Hughes, and the Rev. Richard A. Hatch; lay, Benjamin Brown, Edward P. Brinton, John J. Brandt, and P. E. Womelsdorf.

Alternate Deputies to the Provincial Synod—Clerical, the Rev. Azael Coates, the Rev. Anthony VanElden, the Rev. Earl M. Honaman, and the Rev. William H. Bond; lay, Dr. B. F. Smith, Dr. George A. Gorgas, William F. MacBride and S. Wirt Mosser.

A canon was adopted fixing the minimum salaries of missionaries in the diocese at $2,100 and residence. It was also decided to increase the membership of the Executive Council of the diocese.

SPRINGFIELD.

The fifty-second annual synod of Springfield was held at Emmanuel Church, Champaign, Ill., May 15-16. It was preceded by the fifth annual dinner of the Church Club of the diocese, which was held at the Champaign Country Club with an attendance of two hundred men and women from most of the parishes and missions of the diocese. Mr. George A. Williams, the president of the club, was toastmaster and presiding officer. The Church Club presented to the Bishop a purse of $500 which it had raised during the past year for the new building at Woodriver, Ill.

The first speaker of the evening was Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, the National President of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who stressed the importance of the Church training its laymen and older boys in the definite work of Evangelism.

The Rev. Frederick G. Deis, representing the National Field Department of the Church, presented an inspiring challenge to be more interested in the missions of the Church.

The Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, of Akron, announced as one of the speakers, was prevented from coming, owing to a death in his parish.

Bishop Frances, of Indianapolis, representing the Fifth Province of the Church on the National Council, brought the friendly greetings of the neighboring diocese and urged that the Diocese of Springfield lay continued stress upon informing its people of the work of the Church, which would in the long run insure even larger gifts in money.

Bishop White was happy as he addressed his people, for he had before him representatives from practically the whole diocese. The synod dinner was held on the fifth anniversary of Bishop White's consecration, and it seemed to him that the future looked exceedingly bright.

Mr. Spencer, as Executive Secretary, brought a brief message of the Church Club, and urged that the men start the sixth year of the Bishop's Episcopate pledged to make greater efforts than ever before.

The President asked the Church Club to offer a prize to the most efficient branch of the Young People's Association, and following the suggestion of the Bishop to make as its object for the new year the raising of money sufficient to install a pipe organ for St. John's Church in Springfield, both of which suggestions were adopted.

The synod opened Wednesday morning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Bishop was celebrant. Emmanuel Church was practically filled with the deputies to the convention and with the members of the Woman's Auxiliary and local parishioners of Emmanuel Church. Most of the business of the convention was devoted to the hearing of reports of progress along practically every line of Church endeavor. The diocese reported a larger payment on its quota to New York than ever before in its history.

Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, Executive Secretary of the diocese, was reelected as Secretary of the Synod, and Mr. S. Raymond Tingley as Treasurer of the diocese. The Rev. Henry F. Selcer was appointed by Mr. Spencer, with the approval of the Synod, as Assistant Secretary. In elections to the Standing Committee there were no changes in the lay members. The Rev. Herbert L. Miller, rector of Emmanuel Church, Champaign, was elected in the place of the Rev. Joseph G. Wright, who died in February. Delegates to the Provincial Synod to meet in Indianapolis this fall were—the Rev. Morton C. Stone, the Rev. Henry F. Selcer, the Rev. Herbert L. Miller, the Rev. Charles K. Weller; Messrs. Dan G. Swannell, George L. Wilson, Oscar Ruediger and Miles S. Gilbert.

The convention endorsed the drive for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, passing a resolution that every parish and mission immediately take steps to fill its quota to enable the diocese to pay in full its allotment of $8,000, more than one-third of which is already in hand.

The Rev. T. G. C. McCalla, of Centralia, was elected a member of the Bishop and Council, succeeding the Rev. Jerry Wallace of Christ Church, Springfield.

The University Chapel is about to undertake a campaign for $500,000 to finish the Chapel Foundation at the University.

The report of the Committee on the State of the Church was in many ways the most interesting report presented, giving a splendid view of the work of the Diocese over the past year.

The Synod received with great pleasure the announcement by the Bishop of the gift of $30,000 for a new parish house and community center in connection with St. Paul's Church, East St. Louis, and pledged its best efforts to secure the balance of money needed to get the work under way.

Mr. I. W. Metz, the Treasurer of the Orphanage of the Holy Child, reported that institution to be in a healthy condition.

Miss Vera Noyes, of the Diocese of Chicago, addressed the evening mass meeting on Religious Education, when the Bishop's Banner for the largest Lenten offering was awarded to St. Paul's Church School, Alton; and the banner for the largest per capita offering to St. John's Church School, Centralia.

Miss Edna Beardsley, Assistant Secretary to the National Executive Secretary at New York, addressed the women's afternoon session. All the meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary were held in the Chapel of St. John the Divine, Champaign.

Federation of Church Clubs Meets.

An appeal for a strict observance of the canon law of the Church, particularly that relating to divorce, and a call to Church people to observe and help enforce the national laws featured the sessions of the twenty-eighth conference of the National Federation of Church Clubs at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, May 9, 10, 11.

Law enforcement was the central theme of the president's annual address, delivered by Col. George W. Burleigh, of New York. Colonel Burleigh severely criticized those who "wink at the breach of our Church and national laws."

Mr. Charles D. Dallas, of the Church Club of Chicago, was named president of the National Federation, succeeding Colonel Burleigh, and Boston was selected as the 1930 convention city.

"The canon respecting divorced persons must be better enforced and obeyed," declared Colonel Burleigh. "Divorce is becoming a menace to our civilization. The laymen must help the priest in this program. Why should we permit clergy and laity alike to break down the canons of the Church? If they are not willing to observe our canons, it is up to them to withdraw from the Church.

"Likewise, I believe the alien or citizen who does not like and support the laws of our country should be returned to the country from whence he came, or if a citizen, transfer his allegiance to some other country. I refer to the trimmer and those who would rewrite our creeds and laws for their own use. Neither Churchmen, citizens or aliens should be permitted to undermine our institutions and customs with insidious propaganda. We must strive to combat the forces which are trying to prevent our country from being Christian and we must not continue to wink at the breach of our laws.

"The laws of the Christian Church, if enforced and obeyed, would help tremendously in the enforcement and obedience to the laws of the country."

A proposal to make the Federation of Church Clubs the central organization of a broadened law program of activities was favorably received by the conference. The proposal was made by Warren Kearney, of New Orleans, who came directly from a meeting in Washington of a national commission on lay work, appointed by the last General Convention. The conference adopted resolutions providing for the appointment of a committee to work out plans for such a program and submit such to the 1930 conference.

The three-day conference had as its central theme the inspiring of the manpower of the Church to a larger service. With this subject, Charles E. Field, Chicago layman, opened the addresses Friday morning with an appeal for the elimination of indifferent Churchmen.

"There is a great army of supposed-to-be Church members who today are slipping," said Mr. Field. "They have permitted golf, the automobile, the great open spaces and other pleasures to lure them away from a solemn obligation. They think they have done their share when they contribute money to the Church and her work. It is the task of every loyal churchman to use his efforts to reclaim these slipping members. It is one of the great problems facing all Christian bodies at the present time."

Mr. Field termed as "counterfeit" the Christian business man "who professes to be a Churchman but whose contact for at least six months of the year is through his family and the duplex envelope that contains less money than he pays to his caddy or the cost of gasoline for the week previous."

Captain B. Frank Mountford, of the Church Army in America, called upon the laity to be "ambassadors of Christ", asserting that before Churchmen could hope to inspire others, they must themselves be inspired. The job of the lay Christian, he stated, is a "mission of friendship".

"The clerk in the store may well have as great a work before him as the evangelist; the invalid may contribute as much to the Kingdom of God as the famous preacher in the pulpit", he continued. "To every man is given a certain circle whom he and he alone can touch. And no man can do more than charge this contact with the current of life divine."

Mrs. Charles Spencer Williamson, president of the Chicago Woman's Auxiliary, representing the women on the program, called upon Churchmen for a larger cooperation in promoting the Church. "The women of the Church," said Mrs. Williamson, "desire recognition as women with a world vision, who are not dreamers but workers with a definite objective. Too often men look upon the women as merely money raisers; cooks and waitresses at parish dinners; cajoling saleswomen at parish bazaars; middle aged women who like to sew and gossip and find a way of killing time."

Laymen constitute the greatest undeveloped resource of the Church, Leon C. Palmer, Philadelphia, General Secretary of the Brother of St. Andrew, told the conference.

"They are not working as they should," he continued. "Ninety per cent of the Church work is done as a rule by ten per cent of the members. Our real problem is employing the unemployed, getting idle Christians and nominal members to accept personal responsibility for definite Christian service.

"Thousands of Christians today have a merely negative religion, a futile piety. They are good, but good for nothing. They are nonentities so far as definite service to the Church is concerned. Many rectors are so busy nursing the sick Christians that they have no time left for going out into the highways and hedges to constrain others to come in. We look upon our clergy as men whom we have employed and pay to do our religious work for us, just as we employ a stenographer or file clerk, a policeman or janitor.

Representing the young people of the Church, Harold C. Barlow, of Milwaukee, reviewed the work of the young people's groups and urged a larger interest on the part of the men in Church youth. Greater attention to the college problem which he said youth views with alarm was asked.

The Rev. Alfred Newbery, rector of the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, spoke on the technique of interesting other men.

America has entered a new age demanding a new statement and application of basic ideas of right and wrong, Dr. William A. Maddox, president of Rockford College, declared at the final session of the conference.

Bishop C. P. Anderson, of Chicago, spoke of the work of Church clubs, saying the promotion of fellowship is one of the greatest accomplishments of the Chicago Club.

Officers of the Federation in addition to Mr. Dallas are: First Vice-President, Henry Everett, Boston; Second, Dr. L. W. Glazebrook, Washington; Third, Edward R. Hardy, New York; Secretary-Treasurer, J. E. Boyle, Chicago. Twenty-one dioceses were represented at the conference.

"Special."

The reduction in the appropriation to the Missionary District of Mexico necessitated by the "pay-as-you-go-plan" was $1,711, or three per cent of the total appropriation.

Upon learning from the Bishop of the serious results to the work in Mexico because of this reduction, a generous member of the Church has sent in his check as a "special" for the full amount of the reduction.

Drury Declines Pennsylvania Bishopric.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Smith Drury, Headmaster of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., has declined his election as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. He based his decision, presumably, on the fact that Bishop Garland had refused to name the date upon which he would retire as diocesan.

Dr. Drury is the fifth clergyman who has been elected to the office and who has declined. A Bishop Coadjutor automatically succeeds his diocesan in the event of a vacancy.

Bishop Garland and other officials of the diocese said the conditions demanded by Dr. Drury were "without parallel in the American Church".

Bishop Garland immediately issued a statement expressing regret that he could not accept the unprecedented condition insisted upon, as he is only sixty-two years old and is physically able to continue serving his diocese.

"Dr. Drury informed the Notification Committee that as a condition precedent to his serious consideration of the call a 'statement should be made' by me 'indicating definitely the date at which I intended to retire and allow the Coadjutor to take over the full control of the diocese', the Bishop said.

"He also stated that he would not make any commitment whether he would accept the call should I consent to the condition. I replied, through Dr. Jefferys, as follows:

" 'My request was for the election of a Coadjutor, whose duties were specifically and definitely assigned. Dr. Drury was elected to this office. I cannot accept his suggestion that, as a condition to his consideration of the call, I should make a statement naming a date on which I would definitely retire as Bishop so that he could take over the full control of the diocese.' "

Dr. Drury's telegram was received late in the afternoon by Dr. Jefferys, who was chairman of the Notification Committee which met Dr. Drury in New York last week. Dr. Jefferys immediately forwarded it to Bishop Garland. The telegram follows:

"When your convention called me to become Coadjutor I thought I ought to accept and I was prepared to do so. Since, after further inquiry, you show me that this appointment must be of a wholly indeterminate duration, I feel no longer impelled to leave work of assured usefulness to accept the post, honorable as it is. I trust you and those who elected me to understand why I now decline."

Bishop Garland declared the successive elections and declinations of five men have "not injured the diocese in the least".

"We must have a Coadjutor and we will continue to elect good men until the office is filled," he said. "I will have to give the matter of calling another convention further consideration."

Dr. Drury's decision came as a surprise to many clergymen and laymen of the diocese. Members of the committee which met him in New York expressed the opinion that he would accept. Of the five men who have declined, none has been as explicit as Dr. Drury in stating his reason, it is said.

It was in February, 1928, that Bishop Garland announced his request for a Bishop Coadjutor to assist him in administering the affairs of the oldest and second largest diocese in the country.

He announced the man elected would share with him the appointments for confirmations, consecrations, ordinations and other Episcopal functions; would assist the Bishop in the work of church institutions; would have full charge of all the missions of the diocese, and from time to time would take over other functions as his familiarity with the work increased.

In May, 1928, the Rev. Dr. Henry Knox Sherrill, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, was elected. He declined and the Rt. Rev. Edwin Makin Cross, Missionary Bishop of Spokane, Wash., was elected at a special convention in October. Bishop Cross declined and the Rev. Dr. Walter Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, New York, was elected at a special convention in December. Following Dr. Bowie's declination, the Rev. Dr. William Scarlett, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, was elected at a special convention January 22.

Dr. Scarlett declined and a special convention was held May 6. On the early ballots a deadlock threatened, the laymen supporting the Rev. Dr. John M. Groton, of New Bedford, Mass., and the clergy favoring Dr. Drury. Dr. Drury was elected on the fourth ballot.

News of the American Churches in Europe.

The convocation of American Churches in Europe has been appointed by Bishop Thomas to be held in the Pro-Cathedral of Trinity Church, Paris, the thirtieth of May.

At the last convocation meeting of the American Churches in Europe, held in Paris, May, 1928, it was recommended by the Rev. Henry R. Wadleigh, in charge of St. Luke's Chapel in the Latin Quarter, that inasmuch as they will soon have to vacate their present premises, an entirely new building should be erected to care for the American students, and continue its active work with a larger and more suitable building.

To raise sufficient funds for carrying out the project, a committee has been organized to make a drive in June next, to raise the necessary funds. Already a certain sum has been contributed, but more will be needed.

Any one who has been connected with the work of St. Luke's has been doing for American students, artists models, and American residents in the Latin Quarter, understands how necessary it is to have a larger and better equipment. The work which St. Luke's is now doing under the direction of Dean Beekman and Mr. Wadeligh, is splendid, and it would be worth while for our Church people visiting Paris to visit the Chapel and attend its services.

It is hoped that the drive in June will be successful in raising a sufficient sum for this need.

The services in Christ Church, Lucerne, begin the first Sunday in June and continue until the second Sunday in September.

Fire Insurance For Churches.

The daily papers report an event of great significance and importance to every one of our Protestant Episcopal Churches in the United States. A fire insurance corporation organized for the Protestant Episcopal Church commenced operations May 22 at 14 Wall Street, with a board of directors comprising J. P. Morgan, Newcomb Carlton, Samuel M. Vauclain, Joseph E. Widener, Walter C. Baylies, John Nicholas Brown, Robert S. Brewster, R. Fulton Cuting, George Cabot Lee, Stephen Baker, Robert L. Gerry, William Fellowes Morgan, Frank L. Polk, George W. Wickersham and Monell Sayre.

Mr. Sayre, who is executive vice-president of the new corporation, is also head of the $22,000,000 pension fund which was devised in 1913 to safeguard the old age of Episcopal clergymen and which was eventually written into the laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church, so that contributions to the pension plan by member churches are now canonically obligatory.

"The fire insurance plan will be optional," Mr. Sayre explained, however. "It originated in the belief that the fire insurance rate on churches should be lower than any other structure because there is no moral hazard on a church.

"These churchmen who are the board of directors," Mr. Sayre said, "supplied all the necessary capital so as to give the Episcopal Church a fire insurance company for itself whereby it carries its own insurance. The Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation, as it is called, will reduce costs by selling direct to churches and their affiliated organizations with five-year policies payable on the instalment plan."

Abstract of the Action of the Commission on the Ministry Dealing With Placement of the Clergy.

Radical changes in some of the present practices of the Church are here proposed by the Commission on the Ministry to help cure troubles which arise out of Placement of the Clergy. These proposed changes are submitted for consideration and discussion and later, with such alterations in details as further deliberation may dictate, will be incorporated into Canons to be presented at next General Convention.

The Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, D. D., of the Department of Religious Education, gave the Commission the results of his long study of the records, presenting facts and statistics which witness to the great need of some such action. Placement of the clergy is one of the serious problems of the Church and the Commission puts forth these suggestions as the best means toward relief. If any one objects to the proposals let him ask himself if he has anything better to suggest.

The following Preamble and Resolutions embody these ideas—and the Commission invites discussion of them. The Commission is seeking the best solution to a situation which cries out for mending. Copies are being sent all Bishops for such consideration as Diocesan Conventions may care to give these suggestions:

Whereas our parishes are seeking responsible and intelligent aid in the finding and election of suitable ministers; and

Whereas it is highly desirable that there be provided honorable and systematic means by which the clergy may be so placed that they may serve the Church to the utmost of their powers; and

Whereas we should encourage men to go forward to Holy Orders by the promotion of effective strategy and system in the placement of available men in our ministry;

Therefore, this Commission recommends to the consideration of the Church for ultimate legislation by the General Convention the following suggestions as to a possible plan of operation for the placement of ministers of this Church:

That the responsibility of Placement be committed to the Bishop and Standing Committee of each diocese or missionary district, or to the Bishop and some other Committee, as may be determined by the Diocesan Convention.

It shall be the duty of this Placement Committee, in case of a vacancy occurring in the rectorship of any parish, to nominate at least three clergymen to the parish for election as rector. If none of the persons so nominated by the Placement Committee be satisfactory to the parish, the Placement Committee shall then nominate three more and continue so to nominate until a selection has been made.

In case of a vacancy occurring in a mission the Bishop shall advise with the Placement Committee in making an appointment to fill the vacancy.

The appointment of assistants in any parish shall be subject to the approval of the Placement Committee.

No ordained minister may become canonically resident in any diocese or missionary district without the approval of the Placement Committee.

On petition from a minister, or a vestry, or on its own initiative, the Placement Committee shall have power of removal or transfer. The right of a hearing shall be given to the parties interested and at least six months must elapse before action becomes effective.

It shall be the duty of the Placement Committee:

(a) To keep individual records of the work of all diocesan clergy.

(b) To see that these records accompany Letters Dismissory.

(c) To notify the National Placement Committee of all transfers and to transmit to them copies of the individual records.

That there be a National Placement Committee to consist of the Presiding Bishop, ex-officio, two clergymen and two laymen from the membership of the National Council and such other persons as the National Council may determine.

It shall be the duty of the National Place Committee to keep, on a standard form, individual records of all the clergy of the Church. This information shall be available to diocesan and provincial Placement Committees.

Each Province may create a Provincial Placement Committee to advise Diocesan Placement Committees, when requested so to do, concerning placements, removal or transfer of clergymen within the Province.

At the present time there does not exist anywhere in the Church a complete and authoritative file of the clergy which gives facts about them and their work.

These Committees, both Diocesan and National, would provide a place to which the vestry of a vacant parish could turn for reliable information, to which a Bishop could turn when he desires a man for a mission station. Further it would provide a place to which the clergy could turn when seeking a change and do so with confidence they would be heard with sympathy and helped without loss of self-respect or prestige.

The Kuling School for the Children of Missionaries in China.

Synod House
Amsterdam Ave. and 110th Street
May, 1929.

To the Friends of the Kuling School:

On April 10, the Board of Trustees decided to reopen the school at Kuling in the autumn of 1929.

This decision was in accord with the unanimous judgment of the Managers in China.

Those who have stood by the school so faithfully will hear of this decision with satisfaction—a feeling which no doubt the whole Church will share, the more as such action must add to the morale of the Church in China.

Fortunately Mr. Stone and his wife, though at real sacrifice to themselves, have felt constrained to return, so the school will be opened under the best possible guidance.

Mr. Stone is taking with him a lady who will serve as matron. The rest of the staff for the time being will be secured on the field.

For the present the high school department will not be resumed, as the number of advanced pupils does not now seem to justify it.

I have special satisfaction in advertising the fact that by their unwavering fidelity the friends of the school have made it possible to reopen without delay or embarrassment.

Such a demonstration will, I am sure, increase the number of those who will be glad to help carry the responsibility for the school's maintenance. Whatever is strong and bears good fruit makes its own appeal to those who want to help.

Very truly yours,
A. S. Lloyd,
Chairman Board of Trustees.

Personal Notes

The Rev. R. Maxwell Bradner, formerly rector of the Church of the Nativity, Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted a call to St. Margaret's Church, Staatsbury, New York; the change to be effective June 1.

The Rev. Henry N. Hyde, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of West Missouri, will act as summer supply in his former church, St. Paul's-by-the-Lake Chicago, beginning Sunday, July 28.

The Rev. John H. Griffith, formerly rector of St. Andrew's Church, Canton, N. C., is now in charge of the Church of the Advent, Ocean View, and Epiphany, Lafayette Park, Norfolk, Virginia, with address at 1307 Lafayette Boulefard, Norfolk, Va.

The Rev. Allen Moore, Durant, Oklahoma, sailed in May on the S. S. de Grasse for the Havre. He will later embark at Marseilles for Algiers, where he lived for some years and founded two missions for the Church of England, thence proceeding to the Holy Land, Egypt and back to Italy, France and England. He will be away three months.

The Rev. Halsey Werlen has accepted the Deanship of St. Luke's Cathedral, Panama.

Deaconess Margaret Peppers has been transferred from the Philippine Islands to the Diocese of Olympia.

Dr. McC. Fellows has been transferred from the District of Anking to the District of Shanghai.

The Rev. Donnon E. Strong, rector of Christ Church, Warrensburg, Missouri, has accepted his election as Dean of Christ Cathedral, Salina, Kansas. He will begin his residence and work there September 1.

ORDINATIONS.

Orrin Francis Judd, B. A., was ordained deacon in St. Paul's Church, Harrisburg, Pa., on Wednesday, May 22, 1929, by the Rt. Rev. James Henry Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg. The sermon was preacned by the candidate's father, the Rev. Archibald M. Judd. The presenter was the Rev. Harry Mershom, rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, St. Clair. The Rev. Hollis W. Codwell, of Harrisburg, read the Litany, and the Ven. Alexander McMillan, of Carlisle, read the Epistle. Other clergymen present in the chancel in addition to the above mentioned were Archdeacon Paul S. Atkins, and the Rev. Messrs. Bridgeman, Dowie, Hughes, Caruthers, Sutton, Claire and Sayre; also the following students from the Philadelphia Divinity School: A. L. M. Worthey, Robert C. Fletcher and William Hugh Fryer.

The newly ordained Deacon is a graduate of St. Stephen's College, and the Philadelphia Divinity School. He has accepted appointment as curate of the Church of the Mediator, Philadelphia.

Four men were advanced to the Priesthood and five others made Deacons by Bishop Garland at a Service of Ordination May 27, at ten o'clock in St. Andrew's Collegiate Chapel of the Philadelphia Divinity School, Forty-second and Spruce Streets, Philadelphia.

Those advanced to the Priesthood were:

Rev. John William Irwin, assistant at Grace Church, Mt. Airy, presented by the Rev. Charles E. Eder, rector of Grace Church, Mt. Airy.

Rev. Arthur Trent Helms, assistant at Trinity, Oxford, and in charge of Trinity Chapel, Crescentville; presented by the Rev. Waldemar Jansen, Jr., rector of Trinity.

Rev. Hugh Latimer Willson, Fellow Divinity School; presented by the Rev. J. Cullen Ayer, Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Philadelphia Divinity School.

Rev. Charles Harold Harrison, presented by the Rev. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's, Philadelphia.

Those ordained Deacons were:

Charles Henry Ewing, presented by the Rev. S. Lord Gilberson, rector of St. James, Kingsessing. Mr. Ewing will be assistant at St. James.

Francis John Pryor, presented by the Rev. A. W. Lucas, Headmaster-elect of Cathedral School for Boys, Washington, D. C. Mr. Pryor will serve as a missionary in Nebraska.

Carl Ludwig Appleberg, presented by the Rev. George H. Toop, rector Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. Mr. Appleberg will continue his work at the Seamen's Church Institute.

Cedric Earl Mills, presented by the Rev. S. Sydnor Thomas, rector of St Barnabas, Germantown. Mr. Mills, on June 1, will take charge of St. Cyril's, Coatesville, and Ascension Mission, West Chester, succeeding the Rev. Samuel H. White, resigned.

Ruell Howe (for the Bishop of Spokane), presented by the Rev. Charles H. Arndt, rector of Christ Church, Germantown. Mr. Howe will serve in the Diocese of Spokane.

The Rev. John E. Rowell was advanced to the priesthood on May 14, 1929, in St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., by Bishop McElwain. The Rev. Dr. P. E. Osgood preached the sermon and presented the candidate. Eight other clergymen joined in the laying on of hands.

COLLECT FOR FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, the strength of all those who put their trust in Thee; Mercifully accept our prayers; and because through the weakness of our mortal nature, we can do no good thing without Thee, grant us the help of Thy grace, that in keeping Thy commandments we may please Thee both in will and deed; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

"O ALL YE WORKS OF THE LORD, PRAISE YE THE LORD!"

Gene Scott Wright.

O gift of beauty, gift of love,
How sweet and fair this day in June!
The sun sprang up an hour ago,
Curled up the mists from valleys low,
Inspired the birds on every bough,
And put the world in tune.

The west wind wakes, and waters bright
With dimpling laughter wake with him;
He whispers to the leaves, and they Respond with questions of the way
He's traveled far since yesterday
Broad fields and forests dim.

The dewdrops tremble in the light,
And breathe the perfume of the rose;
Each pansy lifts a smiling face;
The hollyhocks, a royal race,
Flaunt brilliant colors in their place,
And daisies pale unclose.

Between them and the river's rim
A velvet band of turf is spread;
Two kittens gambol on the green;
Two peacocks near their plumage preen;
A swan floats slowly in the scene;
And pigeons fly o'er head.

For gifts of beauty from Thy Hand,
Dear Lord of earth and heaven above;
My heart is bursting with Thy praise,
Grant me a voice that I may raise
Sweet songs thru all the coming days
To celebrate Thy Love!

Substance and Shadow.

Flowers have faded since time immemorial. In fact, there is a whole season dedicated to decay. In order to compensate us the poets have sung of the amaranthine bloom whose radiance is never dimmed in the fabled land of Arcadie. Christ has given substance to the fairest dreams of our race, and Olympus has bowed to Olivet.

What is substance? Some one says: The material object. So said Aristotle in the golden age of Greece. But Plato had said the material vanished away, and therefore the abiding element is the general essence or idea behind the object, of which the object is only a particular mode or expression. According to this theory not the universe is eternal, but God who created it, and nature is but the ever-changing fashion of his thoughts.

What does this mean in everyday practice? Simply that the things apparent to our senses are only for a little while, and the eternal realities are truth, justice, beauty, and righteousness. To live only for the former is to leave the substance to follow the shadow. Religion creates a trans-valuation of values. Matter is the insubstantial pageant faded as Prospero said, leaving not a wrack behind, but love and truth are absolute, inviolable, eternal, and of the very nature of God.

How is Christianity related to such a conception of life? Jesus has left us three symbols that fade not away. The first is the Cross. This is not a crucifix—it is a life imbued with the spirit of sacrifice. "He that loveth his life shall lose it," and the cross of Christ has become the central figure in history. It is the way to salvation.

. The second symbol is the Kingdom. This is not an empire of the world with armies and navies to promote its cause. It is the rule of God in human hearts. Creeds and churches may depart, but His will must be done on earth as in heaven. So He said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Third is the Crown. God and heaven were more real to Jesus than space and time. "My Father's House" is not a castle in the air. It is the eternal mansion that fadeth not away. So while we live in the world, let us live for eternity.

To the unbeliever these are only shadows, but to the man of God they are the strong foundations of life.—Dr. Robert MacGowan, in Presbyterian Banner.

Hunger.

Mary Danforth Dodge.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

Incline your ear, and come unto Me; hear, and your soul shall live."—Isaiah 55:2, 3.

One day recently I was walking down Fifth Avenue. Before me, behind, and on both sides pressed the numberless throng, a typical sample of the city's population. Men, women and children of many nationalities, of all classes and conditions jostled against me as I walked along the famous thoroughfare. Faultlessly gowned, arrogant women alighting from their cars; shabby, pinched-faced girls plodding wearily home from work; carefree boys striding insolently along; feeble old men and women shrinking through the crowd; successful business men, confident in their power—all these surged against me on Fifth Avenue that day.

Gradually, I became aware only of the faces in the hurrying crowds—faces flaunting and bold-eyed, faces marked by fear and sorrow, faces eager and seeking, faces unutterably weary, faces laughing and gay, faces indifferent and empty, faces passionate and alluring, faces cold and cynical. But as I walked I looked in vain for one truly happy, peaceful face in all the vast crowd. Instead, through each one of those countless faces a soul looked out in longing, dissatisfaction, hunger.

Hunger, that was what I saw written on the faces around me, a torturing, ceaseless soul-hunger which nothing in the world can satisfy. Pleasure, riches power, all are alike powerless to banish this hunger, as the Fifth Avenue crowd bore witness that afternoon, while life's disappointments and sorrows but fan its flames into a devouring fire.

As I sat at home that evening thinking over my day, I realized that it was also a sample of the world's. For everywhere, from youth to old age, the anguish of hunger torments the human soul. In the days of the Hebrew prophet, Isaiah, more than seven hundred years before Christ, it was just the same. Then, as now, the people spent their money for "that which is not bread," and their "labor for that which satisfieth not". Then, as now, they strove by amusement, wealth, power, and the gratification of passion, to satisfy the hunger of their souls. And then, as now, their efforts were all in vain. For why? "Thou hast made us for Thyself, O God, and the soul of man is restless until it finds rest in Thee."

"O weary ways of earth and men!
O self more weary still!
How vainly do you vex the heart
That none but God can fill!"

GOD! That is what the soul of man is ever hungering for, today, in the days of old, in all days to come. "Incline your ear, and come unto Me; hear, and your soul shall live." This is what God, through His prophet, proclaimed to the men and women of twenty-six centuries ago; this is what, through His beloved Son, He declares to us today. "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you. . . . . I am the Bread of Life . . . . he that cometh to Me shall never hunger" (St. John 6: 27-35).

And deep within the human soul, unknown, it may be, even to itself, is hidden a longing which only God can fill, a hunger which only He can satisfy who is, Himself, the Source, the Goal, the Life of every soul.

Building Men.

the achievements of men, to glorify the the achievements of men, to glorify the stone out of which they have wrought and the material that they have fashioned. We think of what men have done with the materials, but there is a greater thing than this. That is to consider what the material has done for men. For in its last analysis every achievement of man has its highest value in what it has done for man and not what man has done for it. The man who built the Brooklyn bridge was bigger than his bridge and more important. The great kings of commerce who have handled the wealth of the world have been much more important than the wealth they handled. Not what they have done with their money is the question, but what their money has done for them. In choosing our tasks, the greatest thing in all the choice is what task shall make me a bigger man, a braver, stronger man, more humble and more Christlike, more brotherly. And the output of all these things are men trained to higher things by the tasks they have done, or debased to lower things by the tasks they have done.

We do not need so much these great material conquests as we need a race of men—men in whose lives is the fibre of righteousness and in whose heart is the glory of love, whose faith laughs at the impossible and cries it must be done.

DO NOT GIVE UP.

Maude F. Mumma

Do not give up hoping,
Though every hope be lost,
Do not give up giving,
Though dead may be the cost.

Do not give up loving,
Though ones you love be dead;
Do not give up living,
Though long your heart has bled.

Do not give up trying
Though long the road may be,
Do not give up helping,
Though no reward you see.

Do not give up smiling,
Though smiles so oft deceive;
Do not give up cheering,
Though you no praise receive.

Do not be discouraged,
But go right on your way;
Helping, loving, giving,
And bright will be your day.

A LITTLE GIRL STORY.

"Cadwallader Colden Hoffman."

Margaret McIlwaine.

The little girl stood by her mother's bedside and gazed timidly at a very tiny little screwed up red face and two tiny red fists doubled up against a rose-bud mouth. Her "new little brother", they told her. And he must have a name. But what a big one!

The little girl could say it perfectly, for she had heard it over and over—"Cadwallader Colden Hoffman".

It was in something father had been reading to mother before the baby came. All the children listened when father read, for he had a beautiful voice. And he was always so sure of his story. It was like seeing it happen when father read.

And the Cadwallader Colden Hoffman was such an interesting story; one could quite see why mother wanted the new baby named for him; though it was such a tiny red baby for such a tremendous name!

You see, this Cadwallader Colden Hoffman had once been just a little boy himself. And his parents' name was Hoffman, so he was not responsible for that. And the answer he would make to "What is your name?" would just be, "Cadwallader Colden". And if you had asked him, "Who gave you this name?" he would have said just as you do, "My Sponsors in Baptism" and all the rest of it. For his parents were Christian people, who wanted their little boy to grow up in God's Family and inherit the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now if you are going to inherit a kingdom, and if you are at all intelligent, you wish to know all you can about your kingdom. How far it extends, and what people belong to it and all about it. And if you can in any way help your father to increase the kingdom without being unkind, why, so much the more for you to inherit.

Perhaps Cadwallader Colden Hoffman thought this, or perhaps he just loved his Father, the King of Heaven, so much that he wanted to help Him unselfishly. At all events he began very early to compare earthly riches with heavenly riches and he decided that heavenly riches were best.

In fact, they were so much best that it would be well worth-while to invest all his earthly riches in such a way as to secure more heavenly treasure. Then he must have thought over what he had that he could invest. And besides his share of the family money he found he had some time—twenty-four hours of it every day—and some good health, and strength he could use, to help extend his Father's Kingdom.

The next thing he looked for was a place on earth where people did not belong to the Kingdom of Heaven. He was sure they would like to belong to it if they knew his Heavenly Father, for every one loves Him who knows Him.

So he learned that in Africa, at that time, hardly any one had been told the good news that "God so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but should have eternal life." Cadwallader Colden Hoffman therefore resolved to use all his money, and all his time and all his health and strength in carrying this good news to Africa.

It was necessary to study a good while and to learn a good many things before setting out on such a long journey, to such a strange land, to tell such great news to such unusual people. So he spent a number of years in learning all he could about these people, and about their country, and their ways, and how they ate and lived and talked to one another.

Cadwallader Colden Hoffman had been very well brought up at home by his excellent parents; and he would have thought it very rude indeed to go among these people without trying to understand their likes and dislikes, and so to offend their very best ideas by behaving contrarily. What would have become of all his good news if people were too displeased to listen?

At last he set sail for Africa on the Feast of St. Matthias in 1849, eighty years ago. Another young man named Rambo went with him. Two together; that was Jesus Christ's way. And early in April he wrote, in a beautiful letter to his mother, "At 11 o'clock today Rambo and I got into the boat at the side, manned by six noble naked savages. We landed on the beach in the surf, and some of us were carried out on the shoulders of the Kroo-men."

You would be amused at the names of the various African tribes in this part of Africa called Liberia; Veys and Kroos and Golas and Bassas and Kabos and Dabos and Grebos, and many others. No doubt our names sound quite as queer to them.

Please notice that Mr. Hoffman called them noble naked savages, and as the next event was Easter Day he talked to them about Jesus and the Resurrection.

How you would enjoy reading some of his letters home at this time. One can almost see the beautiful scenery he describes and hear the people talk and sing. Other teachers had been along the coast, now and then, for a number of years, and a few had stayed long enough to build schools and teach English and Arithmetic.

When you read of Liberia, you will find the name "Hoffman Hall", which is a school begun by the Rev. Cadwallader Colden Hoffman.

It is now said to be the best school in Liberia. It is very old, so old that one of the buildings needs to be pulled down and built over again. The pennies in your missionary box will help to build it new.

How do you earn your money for it? Do you run errands? Take care of baby? Dust the what-not? Help in the garden? The little girl in my story did all these things and earned her first missionary dollar.

She felt very happy and so will you.

Boys and Sheep.

Joe came home with his clothes and even his hair all wringing wet. "I just knew the ice wasn't strong 'nough," he said.

"Then why did you slide?" asked his auntie.

"'Cause all the other boys did," answered Joe. "So I had to, or they'd laugh. And nobody wants the other boys to laugh at him, you know."

His aunt gave him dry clothes, set him down by the fire and made him drink hot lemonade. Then she told him a story:

"When I was a little girl, Joe, my father had a large flock of sheep. They were queer things. Where one went, all the rest would follow. One day a big ram found a hole in the fence, and he thought it would be fun to see what was on the other side. So in he jumped, without looking where he was going, and tumbled to the bottom of an old, dry well where father used to throw stones and rubbish.

"The next sheep never stopped to think what had become of him, but jumped right after, and the next and the next, though father tried to drive them back, and Watch, the old sheep dog, barked his very loudest. But they kept on jumping and jumping till the well was full. Then father had to pull them out as fast as he could, and the sheep at the bottom of the well were almost smothered to death."

"My, what silly things!" exclaimed Joe. Then he looked up at his aunt and laughed and became quite red in the face.—The Christian World.

Sure Of It.

Foreign-made articles are in great demand among the natives of Africa, so when young Matumbo, son of a native Christian, found an almost-new jackknife one day, he fairly radiated joy as he came home to show his possession to his mother.

"See what I have found," he exclaimed.

But his mother had imbibed Christian ideas which made her inquisitive as to the origin of the find.

"Where was it?" she asked.

"It was lost on the trail," her son replied.

"But are you sure it was lost?" the mother insisted.

"Indeed I am sure that it was lost," said Matumbo. "I know it was, for I saw the missionary and his bearer looking all over the place for it."—Ex.

There is need for ceremonies, the water must have its cup. But when the cup is made the main thing and is ornamented and jeweled and almost adored as though it had some magical virtue and could save the soul, when we trust in beautiful churches and elaborate rituals and gorgeous trappings, we have turned our religion into something as childish as a child's doll.—Presbyterian Banner.

The Eternal City

"And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst."

Revelation Ch. 21. vs. 19, 20.

John, the beloved disciple, in the above, endeavors to express in human language the most transcendant spiritual beauty and permanence of the heavenly city,—the everlasting city. He selected, singularly enough, to describe the foundations thereof, beautiful crystalline gems, every one of which appears in the minute crystals of

"The Silk of The Trade"

When the surface of this granite, which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals, is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

How peculiarly fitting that monuments to loved ones be erected of lasting granite, containing the very gems which the Apostle John mentions in this metaphorical description of the foundations of the walls of the everlasting city, the city of our resurrection hope.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

DIANA DAUNTLESS
By Paul Kester

Author of "His Own Country", etc.

A spirited novel of the Romany roads and the gay court of early eighteenth century England. Sir John Dauntless, of Irish royal rank, has lost his title and lands by supporting the Pretender. Blind and poverty-stricken he and his lovely granddaughter, Diana, come to England to regain their fortune which has fallen to an old cousin, Lady Bridget O'Malley. But, through intrigue and forgery, their relations believe them dead and no one will recognize them. Only after many and diverse adventures do they come into their own. Diana is a fascinating figure with her quick Irish wit and warm friendliness, and the men and women who cross her path are as vivid. Each plays a distinctive part in this colorful, quick-moving drama.

Deaths

MRS. JOSEPH BLOUNT CHESHIRE.

MRS. JOSEPH BLOUNT CHESHIRE, wife of the Bishop of North Carolina, died in Raleigh, N. C., on May 14th, and was buried in Calvary Church Cemetery, Tarboro, N. C., on May 16th. The funeral in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, was conducted by the Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, Bishop Coadjutor, assisted by the Rector, the Rev. Henry G. Lane, and the Bishop of Southern Virginia.

The Convention of the Diocese was in session at the time of Mrs. Cheshire's death and passed resolutions of respect and sympathy.

Mrs. Cheshire, a native of Maryland, was a daughter of the Rev. Walter A. Mitchell and Susan Thomas Mitchell. She was in her seventy-first year.

DR. ALFRED FRONTIS HARGRAVE.

Died, at his home, in West Point, Virginia, on March 18th, DR. ALFRED FRONTIS HARGRAVE, aged 71.

Dr. Hargrave was born in Lexington, North Carolina, a son of William and Wilhelmina A. Hargrave, and was educated at the University of North Carolina. He was a resident of West Point for 31 years.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Houseworth Hargrave, one daughter, Mrs. J. M. Lewis, of Gloucester, three sons, Dr. W. W. Hargrave, of the Medical Corps, United Statee Navy, Alfred F. Hargrave, of West Point, and Raymond Hargrave, of Norfolk. He is also survived by two step-daughters and two step-sons, Mrs. Charles Gresham, of Tappahannock, Miss Susie Corr, of West Point, Richard Corr, of Richmond, and Beverley Corr, of Lynchburg.

Dr. Hargrave was a devoted member of St. John's Church, in West Point, and was a vestryman for many years. For the past ten years he was the Senior Warden of the parish. In his death the Church has lost a devoted and faithful member and the community a most useful citizen.

The funeral services were held at St. John's Church, conducted by the Rev. C. C Graves, the rector, assisted by the Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D., of St. John's Church, Richmond, a former rector of the parish.

MRS. MICAJAH WOODS.

Beautiful and gracious women have always been the best interpretors and the finest models of the social life of their era. Here in Charlottesville lived one, who brought down into the new day the perfume of the vanished loveliness of the old Virginia country home.

Born amidst the broad acres of a Hanover County plantation Tillie Morris was reared in Clazemont, so named in memory of the ancient dwelling place of her Morris ancestors in Wales. The house was jammed with children, the quarters still filled with dark-skinned servants. Near neighbors and intimates were Pages and Dabneys, Fontaines and Carters and their compeers. Hospitality was the law of the land. Gracious manners and cultured talk were the habit of the people. Always to fear God and never to fear man was their religion. Outdoor labors and outdoor games, outdoor sports fostered health and strength, simplicity and naturalness. Youth, beauty, native sweetness, ingenious charm drew suitors from far and near to Tillies' feet.

Married to a rising young Albemarle attorney, Micajah Woods, long honored as the leader of the Charlottesville bar, she transplanted into her new home the intrinsic spirit of her old abode. Life was kind, Dame Fortune was propitious. Men and women, the old and the young, felt the sun grow brighter and the air sweeter when this blonde young matron greeted them with her engaging smile. Soon beautiful children came to inherit her beauty and grew up to learn and practice her charm. The Woods home in Charlottesville became a gathering ground for men and women who knew and loved the spirit of that older Virginia.

The winning simplicity of her girlhood, the sweet urbanity of her manner and address, the warm sympathy with her neighbor's hopes and fears—these clung to her and defied the assaults of age. Such lingering dearness, as of some unspoiled child touched all who knew her and seemed translated into our everyday speech. We never ceased to think of her and often spoke of her as Tillie.

Sorrow came with the later years, pain and disaster. Then illness and darkness descended, which neither care nor love nor science could remove. But to the last the touch of beauty remained and the fragrance of an old world charm and that sweet simplicity as of an eternal child, until Jesus said once more "Suffer the little children to come unto me".

THE MASTER.

By W. R. Bowie.

In contemplating this book it is quite evident that the author has given his readers a Character which is splendidly human and but slightly divine. As the Character moves through the book, as the author says, he sees him "so fully human that among those same forces by which all lives are shaped he shaped his own". In this estimate of his own labors it is not difficult to discover how he comes to his conclusions as the character moves through the book.

The narratives of the Virgin Birth are discounted, and considered more as the lyric effort to account for history than as being history itself, which "begins not in Bethlehem but in Nazareth. It is 'tradition', adoration like a prologue spoken in the high rhapsody of the Church's interpretation", by no means historical in character.

Thus discarding the Gospel's way of accounting for the union of the two Natures in one in the Virgin Birth, there is a note of anxiety as the author realizes that necessity is upon him to suggest and supply some other plan which may take its place in the thought and heart of the world. Descriptive words and phrases are sought here and there, but as none are used the second time, it is evident that the quest is disturbing. The author finds himself unable eventually to do better than this, "In transfigured moments of his imagination he beheld a new meaning for Messiah. And in that mystery of his soul's awareness, into which no analysis can follow (black ours), he felt himself to be God's chosen Son through whom the message of the highest should be expressed." And so "the news of John's appearance on Jordan . . . . came to the ears of Jesus like a bell striking the decisive hour". Adopts a mystery, not to be analyzed, in place of one discarded, which has filled the need of the ages these many years. Here we seem to meet the poet in the author, as we shall see again, which seems to justify his apologist who says he is more poet than theologian.

But the Character moves on in the book and having removed the Virgin Birth, the chief difficulty, other difficulties in the way of the author's purpose are boldly, though gently, brushed aside. The Commendatory voices at Baptism and other times are minimized or nullified. This is illustrated in the poetic treatment of the Transfiguration as the movement goes on. "The disciples looked and they never forget what they beheld. There was a light upon his face that made it seem (sic) transfigured. It shone there in the darkness as when the moon is risen" (what a shallow description), cloak about him seemed (sic) to glisten like white flame. Then a cloud drifted over the peak of the mountain. For a moment they seemed (sic) left alone and they said it was as though the voice of God spoke to them out of the dimness. 'This is my beloved Son.' The mist blew by and there again was Jesus—Jesus with something tremendous in his eyes!" A poetical explanation in pleasing language, but which can hardly be found satisfying.

This reminds us of the July political orator who soared aloft to such high heights that he did not know how to get down, so he quickly wound up his speech by saying that the bird of Liberty soared aloft and fell and broke his neck.

The treatment of the miracles is not consistent in that some are apparently accepted while others are rejected, unless the reason is found in the fact that the healing miracles—the ones usually accepted, keep the movement in the realms of humanity in that healing miracles are performed by men today as then. The admission of the healing miracles, therefore, keep the movement in proper channels. But the author's estimate of Miracles not of this nature may be found in his treatment of the feeding of the five thousand. Hear him: "When all is said and done, there will always be an element of the unexplained about this account of the feeding of the multitude. . . . He first took all the food the disciples had—five loaves and two fishes—and blessed that, and used it; and then his 'contagious confidence' drew forth from somewhere enough food more to satisfy the hunger of the whole obedient group." To believe which one is compelled to exercise more faith than is necessary to believe the Bible account in the old orthodox way. We don't care for Barmacide feasts. They set very lightly on our empty stomachs.

And thus "the Character moves on through the book" outward and away from orthodox ways to a purpose and a goal all the author's own. The New Testament is shredded of its miracles; the ways and formalations of the Prayer Book are swept away with the sacred hymnology of the church-ages in accumulating—and made a thing of naught, while the earnest believer in things as they were and are is left aghast.

We cannot believe that with all the genial, gentle, amiable qualities which the author has devoted to his Character, that this is our Saviour of the world which stilled the anxious cry of the woman of Samaria, attracting others to Him, as she went exclaiming, "Is not this the Christ?" nor that this is He who stayed Peter in his purpose to go back to the world, and through penitence and prayer, got him ready to preach his great sermon on the day of Pentecost; nor can it be the Christ that has down the ages gone into the hearts and lives of men to remake them, nor can it be the Christ if there is any balm in Gilead, who is still the cry of a troubled world today. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

On page 90 of Dr. Russell Bowie's book we find that he refers to our Lord and Saviour of the World as "God's nearest Son". Think of it! and compare Dr. Bowie's description with our great Church Creed:

> "God of God, Light of Light, Very God of very God; Begotten, not made; Being of one substance with the Father; by whom all things were made; Who for us men and for our salvation came down from Heaven. And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary."

Bowie's description sounds to us like "nearest" puerile profanity.

In our opinion, any one who writes such a book as "The Master" is far more fit to be a minister in the Unitarian Church than to occupy the position of minister or leader in the Protestant Episcopal Church of America.

This book of Dr. Bowie's seems to us to be "elaborately useless and ingenious unprofitable", if not dangerous, in spite of the fact that it is replete with artistic verbosity, but conspicuous by omitting the vital credal principles of our Church.

We are reminded of Shakespeare's statement:

"In law, what plea so sainted and corrupt
But seasoned with a gracious voice
Obscures the show of evil? In religion
What damned error but some sober brow
Will bless it and approve it with a text."

We can readily believe that this book, "The Master", was written by the same man who issued the statement recently to the effect that our Apostles' and Nicene Creeds were not very vital to religion, but should be considered as "poetic expressions of religious emotion", which would permit us to be led into a maze of ambiguous religious beliefs whose end is destruction.

Our Apostles' and Nicene Creeds give us an accurate description of our Master Jesus Christ, and we advise strongly against any believer wasting his time reading this book called "The Master", published by the Rev. Russell Bowie, apparently for his own amusement and profit. "Hinc haec lacryma."

We strongly commend to the study of Rev. Russell Bowie that great old hymn:

"Lord, forever at Thy side
Let my place and portion be:
Strip me of the robe of pride,
Clothe me with humility.

"Meekly may my soul receive,
All Thy Spirit hath revealed;
Thou hast spoken, I believe,
Though the oracle be sealed.

"Humble as a little child,
Weaned from the mother's breast,
By no subtleties beguiled,
On Thy faithful Word I rest.

"Israel now and ever more,
In the Lord Jehovah trust;
Him, in all His ways, adore,
Wise, and wonderful, and just."

ORDINATIONS.

The Rev. Edward Reinhold Rogers, Ph. D., was ordained to the priesthood on Friday, April 12, at 10:30 A. M., by Bishop Jett, the service being held in Emmanuel Church, Covington, Va., of which the Rev. Dennis Whittle is rector.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., of Trinity Church, Staunton, and the candidate was presented by his brother, the Rev. George Floyd Rogers, of Asheville, N. C. The Rev. Mr. Whittle read the Litany. The Rev. C. F. Magee, of Clifton Forge, had the Ante-Communion service. The Rev. Ambrose H. Beavin, of Hot Springs and the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, of Emmanuel Church, Staunton, read the Epistle and Gospel, respectively. Bishop Jett celebrated the Communion, assisted by the newly ordained priest. Dr. Rogers is Superintendent of Boys' Home, Covington, Va.

The Rev. Paul Hamilton Baker was ordained to the priesthood on Monday, April 15, 1929, by the Rt. Rev. W. B. Roberts, D. D., acting for the Bishop of Minnesota, in St. Luke's Church, Hot Springs, S. D.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. E. C. Prosser, and Bishop Roberts preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Baker will continue for the present in his work at Hot Springs.

The Rev. George Stanley West was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Warren Lincoln Rogers, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio, in Grace Church, Toledo, Ohio, on the morning of Tuesday, March 12. The presenter and preacher was the Very Rev. Francis S. White, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland. There were ten clergy present.

William Henry Martin was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Big Spring, Texas. The Rev. A. B. Hanson, of Colorado, Texas, presented the candidate. Rev. Mr. Martin will remain in charge of his present work.

The Rev. Michael Joseph Kippenbrock, Deacon, was advanced to the priesthood on Sunday, April 21, 1929, in St. George's Church, Cordova, Alaska, by the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, D. D., Bishop of Alaska.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Rowe. Mr. Kippenbrock was presented by the Very Rev. Charles E. Rice, Dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Juneau. Dean Rice read the Litany, and the Epistle was read by the Rev. Bert J. Bingle, Ilam Sound Mission, last July, and will continue as priest-in-charge. This field includes Cordova, Valdez, Latouche, Chitina, McCarthy, Kennecott and Katalla.

The Rev. Sturges Allen, of the Holy Cross Mission in Liberia, died there March 29, 1929, at the age of seventy. He had served, with scarcely a day's illness, in Liberia for more than five years. The Spirit of Missions for February contained a brief article which Bishop Overs had written about this fine and devoted missionary, whose name is now added to the long list of those who have given their lives in Africa for our Lord.

The Rev. Wm. J. Cuthbert, rector of St. Martin's, Brooklyn, N. Y., died in St. John's Hospital on Sunday, April 21, after having been in ill health for some months. A requiem was offered in St. Paul's, Tuesday, April 23.

Protection for Those You Love

To safeguard their interests the ideal combination is LIFE INSURANCE, and a LIFE INSURANCE TRUST.

Give us the opportunity to discuss with you in detail this important matter.

State-Planters Bank and Trust Co.
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Happiness of Saints in this Life

Is in God. Ps. 73:25, 26.
Only found in the ways of wisdom. Prov. 3:17, 18.
Described by Christ in the Beatitudes. Matt. 5:3-12.
Is derived from:
Fear of God. Ps. 128:1, 2; Prov. 28:14.
Trust in God. Prov. 16:20; Phil. 4:6, 7.
Is abundant and satisfying. Ps. 36:8; 63:5.

THE HAPPINESS OF THE WICKED

Is limited to this life. Ps. 17:14; Luke 16:25.
Is short. Job 20:5.
Is uncertain. Luke 12:20; Jas. 4:13, 14.
Is vain. Eccl. 2:1; 7:6.
Is derived from:
Their wealth. Job 21:13; Ps. 52:7.
Their power. Job 21:7; Ps. 37:35.
Their worldly prosperity. Ps. 17:14; 73:3, 7.
Popular applause. Acts 12:22.
Gluttony. Is. 22:13; Hab. 1:16.
Drunkenness. Isa. 5:11; 56:12.
Vain pleasure. Job 21:12; Isa. 5:12.
Successful oppression. Hab. 1:15; Jas. 5:6.
Leads to sorrow. Prov. 14:10.
Definition of Happiness—The state of being happy; good fortune; felicitousness. Syn.—joyfulness, bliss, felicity.
Ant.—Unhappiness.
Happy—Enjoying pleasure or good; successful; prosperous; lucky; living in concord; satisfied; propitious; felicitous.
The word without the Spirit results in rationalism.
So-called spirit ministration without the Word is delusion and fanaticism.
How dreadful to face the impartial Supreme Who knows what we are and ignores what we seem. To meet empty-handed the just King of Heaven with talents unused and sins unforgiven!

"Up then, and be doing, thou indolent soul,
So fearfully nearing eternity's goal—
Let thy thrown-away life be redeemed while it may,
Be wisely improving the precious to-day."

GOD GIVE US MEN
By Rev. C. H. Mead, D. D.

God give us men—determined, brave and strong—
Who stand for right and dare to smite the wrong;
Whole-hearted men—unselfish, fearless, bold—
Whose love of truth outweighs the greed for gold;
Devoted men, who think and pray and plan
How best to serve and help their fellow man.
While selfishness misrules, and greed and lust
Entice and drag their victims in the dust,
Send up the prayer, again and yet again,
With faith unfailing still—GOD GIVE US MEN!

Got any rivers you think are uncrossable,
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through,
We specialize in the frankly impossible,
Doing the things no man can do.

A BROTHER OF MAN

Did you give him a lift? He's a brother of man
And bearing about all the burden he can.
Did you give him a smile? He was downcast and blue,
And the smile would have helped him to battle it through.
Did you give him your hand? He was slipping down hill,
And the world, so I fancied, was using him ill.
Did you give him a word? Did you show him the road?
Or did you just let him go on with his load?
Did you help him along? He is human like you.
But the grasp of your hand may have carried him through.

Did you bid him good cheer? Just a word and a smile
Were what he most needed that last weary mile.
Did you know what he bore in that burden of cares
That is every man's load, and that sympathy cheers?
Did you try to find out what he needed from you,
Or did you just leave him to battle it through?
Do you know what it means to be losing the fight
When a lift just in time might set everything right?
Do you know what it means—just the clasp of a hand
When a man's borne all that a man ought to stand?

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ"—
Galatians 6:2

THE NEW

"CHRISTIAN HERO" BOOKS

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Thrilling as vivid action. The noble examples of these strong characters help mold and influence the lives of young people who read these books.

JOHN WESLEY. By Elsie E. Egermeier.

The life of the great Wesley, preacher and reformer, is well displayed in this book. His life was full of events—gripping ones. He loved God, and dared to do God's bidding. The record he leaves is one that is inspiring and uplifting. Cloth bound. 130 pages. 75 cents.

JOHN G. PATON. By Bessie L. Byrum.

It is difficult to find a good place to stop reading until you turn the last page of this book. Much of the story is in the form of a dialog. It keeps one's interest on edge all the time. It gives a very good account of the life of this famous missionary to the cannibals. Cloth bound. 127 pages. 75 cents.

MARTIN LUTHER. By J. A. Morrison.

The sub-title of this book is "The Lion-Hearted Reformer". It required a man of iron nerve and courage to do what Luther did. How he fearlessly took his stand against the corruption of the Roman Church and in the face of losing his life, is a most absorbing story. You will enjoy it. Cloth bound. 75 cents.

JAMES HUDSON TAYLOR. By Gloria G. Humnex.

It was written by a missionary to the same country where Taylor acquired his fame. The author is particualrly fitted to make the story interesting and accurate because of her experiences. Chinese life, manners and customs are charming, and this story of Taylor is one of unusual interest. It is time well spent to read it. Cloth bound. 75 cents.

Just Off the Press.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE. By Jessie Kleeberger.

This great Christian hero was an explorer as well as missionary. Right into the very jungles of Africa he fearlessly went preaching and winning the heathen natives to Christ. His life story as told in this book is one thrilling narrative of history every Christian should read. This story is particularly charming for young people. It is certain that any one who reads it will find both pleasure and profit. Illustrated. 75 cents.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Love never works by the clock."

One can counterfeit almost everything but courage.—Interior.

"Be grateful for your blessings and it will make your trials seem small."

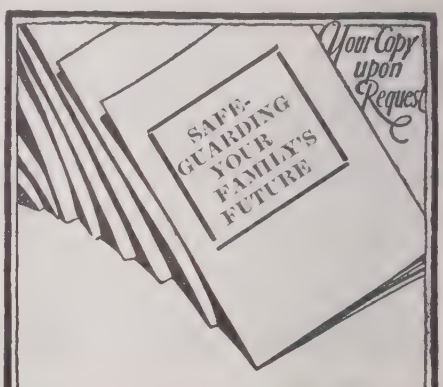
"Many a man who is anxious to reform the world has a gate that is hanging by one hinge."

"Success in any calling is due to a stand that means something."

"If the Word of God is hid in the heart it will come at once into our thoughts when we are tempted to sin; and the reply to the tempter will be, 'It is written'."

Why should we faint and fear to live alone, since all alone—so Heaven has willed—we die, nor e'en the tenderest heart, and next our own knows half the reasons why we smile and sigh? Each in his hidden sphere of joy or woe, our hermit spirits dwell and range apart; our eyes see abound in gloom or glow. Hues of their own fresh borrow from the heart.—Keble.

What is more beautiful than the sight of a child throwing its arms around the neck of its father and resting trustingly in the bosom of his love? Even so does God invite us to dwell in the bosom of His love and to call Him Father.



Victor Hugo said in his old age: "When I go down to the grave I can say like many others, I have finished my day's work, but I cannot say, 'I have finished my life'. My day's work will begin the next morning. My tomb is not in blind alley, it is a thoroughfare; it closes with the twilight to open with the dawn."

To look into a dull future and smile; to stay bound and not chafe under the cross; to endure pain and keep the cheer of health; to see hopes die out and not into brutish despair; here is courage before which we may pause with reverence and admiration.—T. Munger.

I regard salvation by character as an enterprise of despair. Just how you feel about my own. I would not care to offer it as a certificate of salvation.—Woodrow Wilson.

We know full well that, in that dim Hereafter,
The thread of that great scheme whereof this life
Is—as a something tells us—but a part,
Shall not be lost, but taken up again
And woven into one completed whole.

"All is of God that is, and is to be;
And God is good! Let this suffice us still;
Resting in childhood trust upon His will
Who moves to his great ends, unthwarted by the ill."
—Whittier.

SALVATION

It is said that there is no creed but what has in it at least one good article to save it from wholesale condemnation. The chiefs of the Salvation Army are right in holding that the help proffered to men in the name of religion should concern their present welfare. We know that many do not accept the Mosaic account of man's original condition and subsequent fall; but none can depy that all of the race have the bias toward evil, and that the inevitable outcome of the unregenerate must be hopeless misery. We are not uttering the dogmas of the pulpit, but the teachings of natural philosophy when we say that willful persistence in wrong-doing must result in perdition. It is an inevitable law written in the constitution of things, and needs no Divine revelation to make it known, and no throne of judgment to enforce it. A defiance of law in whatever realm is remediless ruin.

Those who have addressed themselves to the task of recovering man from his tendency to evil, have thought too much, as it seems to us, of the ultimate end of his course and too little of the present crushing burden. They would save him from final condemnation, whereas the great concern should be to deliver him from the existing bondage to evil passions, unholy desires, impure affections, and all that makes the end of his career so terrible in its aspect. There has been, as we think, altogether too much preaching about the fitting of men for the life beyond the grave and too little about the uses of religion for the present life. If we take the orthdox Christian faith, the day of salvation is here and now; the gospel feast is not a banquet for disembodied spirits, but is intended for immediate consumption. If we go outside of all religious creeds the same truth is everywhere presented. "Conversion" is not merely a theological term, designed for religious gatherings and inquiry meetings. It is a demand made of every one who is conscious that he is wandering from the path of holiness. It means that he turn about and go the other way. How he can do it and what help he may need to overcome his natural tendency to vicious indulgence is another thing, but the call is imperative and sounds in every ear.

If life in only a probationary state and salvation is something to be enjoyed after death, while conversion is merely a preparation for it, then the appeal loses its pressing earnestness and procrastination is thereby directly encouraged. In this view no present use can be made of the acquisition and no matter how far the feet have strayed from the path of virtue, or how confirmed may be the habits of evil, every one may hope to arrest his steps this side of the fatal plunge, and to secure the good he covets by a change just before he shall leave the world. "Be good and go to heaven" is a far-off cry that interferes but little with a man's present evil ways. A sudden illness startles him, and he wonders if it is not about time for him to look death in the face and to prepare for that which may lie beyond. A friend or loved companion drops from his side, and hours, perhaps days of thoughtful consideration follow, full of suggestions that the time of his departure may be nearer than he thinks. The prevalence of a fatal epidemic stirs within him anew the thought that he ought to secure his title to the life inheritance to be enjoyed hereafter. The poet but described a common experience when he likened this kindled apprehension to the closing of the wounded air after the passing arrow, and exclaimed: "So dies in human hearts the thought of death!"

But if salvation is not a deliverance from the consequences of an evil life that may come to a man after the earthly existence is over, then all talk of a death-bed repentance, or of the white-washing of the soul just as it leaves the body in the act of dissolution, is more of an argument for present waywardness than for holy living. We do not say that one may not look back on a long life wasted in selfish and unholy living with a penitence so profound that it shall change his whole character, and the peace that follows may be an earnest of a new and better way which the feet, just tottering on the verge of the grave, may follow on the other side of the hiding curtain. We believe that there may be and have been such radical changes in the heart as the eyes were looking their last on earthly scenes. But it is not a common experience. An eminent physician who had stood by many death-beds, and heard these spasmodic efforts of a departing spirit to grasp at a glorious future with hands that till that moment had been greedy for unearned gains and were red with the tokens of guilt, testified to us that he never knew of one his skill brought back to life from that hour of peril, who kept the promise which the dread of a coming penalty had thus extorted.

Salvation is not a deliverance from the penalty of sin. That will follow of course, but it is not the matter of chief concern. Salvation is breaking with the evil whose end is perdition, and this ought to be the burden of its message to men. It is something to be acquired here and now, and not a promised good to be made over to one holding the title after he has left the world. Take this view of it and there is no temptation to postpone the happy change. Procrastination gives way to strong desire when the good to be gained may become a present possession. The man to whom it is offered loses something every day he lives without it. It is not a legacy for which he must wait till death comes to his door, but a useful, peace-giving life to begin on the instant and to grow more and more radiant as the years go on. The earlier it is accepted the more its possessor has of it. It gathers royal interest with each succeeding cycle of time, and it is secure beyond all fear of decay or loss.

This is the salvation revealed in the Scriptures, and offered in the plainest terms to all the inhabitants of earth. Selfishness is the root, stem, bud, blossom and fruit of all that is evil in the world; it carries its own penalty with it, and has no need of judge, jury, or executioner. The witness of guilt is furnished by every conscience, and if there is no change the doom is inevitable. The man who leads a selfish life, however free it may be from overt acts of grosser name, needs to be saved, and his salvation comes to him when this is changed to a life of loving service. This change is sometimes called regeneration, because it is so radical that it is like a new birth. It is called conversion it turns about the entire current of the man's being. The fetters are broken, and the liberty dates from that day of deliverance. The old evil will fight to regain the mastery, and the struggle will last throughout the longest life, but the old tyrant shall never more be victor. Some are weak-handed and half-hearted in this struggle. They do not reach out for the help they might obtain, and hence do not enjoy as they might the sweets of liberty. But if the bonds of evil are really broken, if the face is firmly set toward a life of unselfish service, the subject of the change is saved. They who have gained this boon should concern themselves chiefly to save others. A man is saved when he is no longer the servant of sin, and the freed men out of gratitude for their own deliverance and an unselfish desire for the good of others, will seek to break these binding fetters all the world over. The true problem of salvation is how to be saved from sin, and not how to escape its penalty. To preach the true Gospel is to show how men may become holy in heart and life. When this is secure no one need concern himself about the hereafter. Not a life of probation, but a life of loving service to God and man is the crying need of the hour.

REAL CAUSE OF SECESSION

By J. A. Early

UNDER a solemn sense of duty to my unhappy country, and to the brave soldiers who fought under me, as well as to myself, the following pages have been written.

When the question of practical secession from the United States arose, as a citizen of the State of Virginia, and a member of the Convention called by the authority of the Legislature of that State, I opposed secession with all the ability I possessed, with the hope that the horrors of civil war might be averted, and that a returning sense of duty and justice on the part of the masses of the Northern States, would induce them to respect the rights of the people of the South. While some Northern politicians and editors, who subsequently took rank among the most unscrupulous and vindictive of our enemies, and now hold me to be a traitor and rebel, were openly and sedulously justifying and encouraging secession, I was laboring honestly and earnestly to preserve the Union.

As a member of the Virginia Convention, I voted against the ordinance of secession on its passage by that body, with the hope that, even then, the collision of arms might be avoided and some satisfactory adjustment arrived at. The adoption of that ordinance wrung from me bitter tears of grief; but I at once recognized my duty to abide the decision of my native state, and to defend her soil against invasion. Any scruples which I may have entertained as to the right of secession, were soon dispelled by the mad, wicked, and unconstitutional measures of the authorities at Washington, and the frenzied clamor of the people of the North for war upon their former brethren of the South. I then, and ever since, have regarded Abraham Lincoln, his counselors and supporters, as the real traitors who had overthrown the constitution and government of the United States, and established in lieu thereof an odious despotism; and this opinion I entered on the journal of the Convention when I signed the ordinance of secession! I recognized the right of resistance and revolution as exercised by our fathers in 1776, and, without cavil as t othe name by which it was called, I entered the military service of my State, willingly, cheerfully, and zealously.

When the State of Virginia became one of the Confederate States, and her troops were turned over to the Confederate Government, I embraced the cause of the whole Confederacy with equal ardour, and continued in the service, with the determination to devote all the energy and talent I possessed to the common defence. I fought through the entire war, without once regretting the course I had pursued; with an abiding faith in the justice of our cause; and I never saw the moment when I would have been willing to consent to any compromise or settlement short of the absolute independence of my country.

It was my fortune to participate in most of the great military operations in which the army in Virginia was engaged, both before and after General Lee assumed the command. In the last years of this momentous struggle, I commanded, at different times, a division and two corps of General Lee's Army, in the campaign from the Rapidan to James River, and, subsequently, a separate force which marched into Maryland, threatened Washington City, and then went through an eventful campaign in the Valley of Virginia. No detailed reports of the operations of these different commands were made before the close of the war, and the campaign in Maryland and the Valley of Virginia has been the subject of much comment and misapprehension. I have now written a narrative of the operations of all my commands during the closing year of the war, and lay it before the world as a contribution to the history of our great struggle for independence. In giving that narrative, I have made such statements of the positions and strength of the opposing forces in Virginia, and such reference to their general operations, as were necessary to enable the reader to understand it; but I do not pretend to detail the operations of other commanders.

I have not found it necessary to be guilty of the injustice of attempting to pull down the reputation of any of my fellow officers, in order to build up my own. My operations and my campaigns stand on their own merits, whatever they may be. Nor, in anything I may have found it necessary to say in regard to the conduct of my troops, do I wish to be understood as, in any way, decrying the soldiers who constituted the rank and file of my commands. I believe that the world has never produced a body of men superior, in courage, patriotism, and endurance, to the private soldier of the Confederate armies. I have repeatedly seen those soldiers submit, with cheerfulness, to privations and hardships which would appear to be almost incredible; and the wild cheers of our brave men (which were so different from the studied hurrahs of the Yankees), when their thin lines sent back opposing hosts of federal troops, staggering, reeling, and flying, have often thrilled every fibre of my heart. I have seen, with my own eyes, ragged, barefooted, and hungry Confederate soldiers perform deeds, which, if performed in days of yore by mailed warriors in glittering armor, would have inspired the harp of the minstrel and the pen of the poet.

I do not aspire to the character of a historian, but, having been a witness of and participator in great events, I have given a statement of what I saw and did, for the use of the future historian. Without breaking the thread of my narrative, as it proceeds, I have given, in notes, comments on some of the errors and inconsistencies committed by the commander of the Federal army, General Grant, and the Federal Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, in their reports made since the close of the war; also some instances of cruelty and barbarity committed by the Federal commanders, which were brought to my immediate attention, as well as some other matters of interest.

As was to have been expected, our enemies have flooded the press with sketches and histories, in which all the appliances of a meretricious literature have been made use of, to glorify their own cause and its supporters and to blacken ours. But some Southern writers also, who preferred the pen to the sword or musket, have not been able to resist the temptation to rush into print; and, accordingly, carping criticisms have been written by the light of after events, and even histories of the war attempted by persons, who imagined that the distinctness of their vision was enhanced by distance from the scene of conflict, and an exemption from the disturbing elements of whistling bullets and bursting shells. Perhaps other writers of the same class may follow, and various speculations be indulged in, as to the causes of our disasters. As for myself, I have not undertaken to speculate as to the cause of our failure, as I have seen abundant reason for it in the tremendous odds brought against us. Having had some means of judging, I will, however, say that, in my opinion, both President Davis and General Lee, in their respective spheres, did all for the success of our cause which it was possible for mortal men to do; and it is a great privilege and comfort for me so to believe, and to have been able to bring with me into exile a profound love and veneration for those great men.

In regard to my own service, all I have to say is, that I have the consciousness of having done my duty to my country, to the very best of my ability, and, whatever may be my fate, I would not exchange that consciousness for untold millions. I have come into exile rather than submit to the yoke of the oppressors of my country; but I have never thought of attributing aught of blame or censure to those true men who, after having nobly done their duty in the dreadful struggle through which we passed, now, that it has gone against us, remain to share the misfortunes of their people, and to aid and comfort them in their trials; on the contrary, I appreciate and honor their motives. I have not sought refuge in another land from insensibility to the wrongs and sufferings of my own country; but I feel deeply and continually for them, and could my life secure the redemption of that country, as it has been often risked, so now it would be as freely given for that object.

There were men born and nurtured in the Southern States, and some of them in my own state, who took sides with our enemies, and aided in desolating and humiliating the land of their own birth, and the graves of their ancestors. Some of them rose to high positions in the United States Army, and others to high civil positions. I envy them not their dearly bought prosperity. I had rather be the humblest private soldier who fought in the ranks of the Confederate Army, and now, maimed and disabled, hobbles on crutches from house to house, to receive his daily bread from the hands of the grateful women for whose homes he fought, than the highest of those renegades and traitors. Let them enjoy the advantages of their present positions as best they may; for the deep and bitter execrations of an entire people now attend them, and an immortality of infamy waits them. As for all the enemies who have overrun or aided in over-running my country, there is a wide and impassable gulf between us, in which I see the blood of slaughtered friends, comrades and countrymen, which all the waters in the firmament above and the seas beneath cannot wash away. Those enemies have undertaken to render our cause odious and infamous; and among other atrocities committed by them in the effort to do so, an humble subordinate, poor Wirz, has been selected as a victim to a fiendish spirit, and basely murdered under an executive edict, founded on the sentence of a vindictive and illegal tribunal. Let them continue their system; they are but erecting monuments to their own eternal dishonor, and furnishing finger posts to guide the historian in his researches. They may employ the infamous Holt, with his "Bureau of Military Justice", to sacrifice other victims on the altars of their hatred, and provost marshals, and agents of the "Freedman's Bureau", may riot in all the license of petty tyranny, but our enemies can no more control the verdict of impartial history, than they can escape that doom which awaits them at the final judgment.

During the war, slavery was used as a catchword to arouse the passions of a fanatical mob, and to some extent the prejudices of the civilized world were excited against us; but the war was not made on our part for slavery. High dignitaries of both church and state in Old England, and puritans in New England, had participated in the profits of a trade, by which the ignorant and barbarous natives of Africa were brought from that country, and sold into slavery in the American Colonies. The generation in the Southern States which defended their country in the late war, found amongst them, in a civilized and Christianized condition, 4,000,000 of the descendants of those degraded Africans. The Almighty Creator of the Universe had stamped them, indelibly, with a different color and an inferior physical and mental organism. He had not done this from mere caprice or whim, but for wise purposes. An amalgamation of the races were in contravention of His designs, or He would not have made them so different. This immense number of people could not have been transported back to the wilds from which their ancestors were taken, or could they have been, it would have resulted in their relapse into barbarism. Reason, common sense, true humanity to the black, as well as the safety of the white race, required that the inferior race should be kept in a state of subordination. The condition of domestic slavery, as it existed in the South, had not only resulted in a great improvement in the moral and physical condition of the Negro race, but had furnished a class of laborers as happy and contented as any in the world, if not more so. Their labors had not only developed the immense resources of the immediate country in which they were located, but was the main source of the great prosperity of the United States, and furnished the means of the employment of millions of the working classes in other countries. Nevertheless, the struggle made by the people of the South was not for the institution of slavery, but for the inestimable right of self-government, against the domination of a fanatical faction at the North, and slavery was the mere occasion of the development of the antagonism between the two sections. That right of self-government has been lost, and slavery violently abolished. Four millions of blacks have thus been thrown on their own resources, to starve, to die, and to relapse into barbarism; and inconceivable miseries have been entailed on the white race.

The civilized world will find, too late, that its philanthropy has been all false, and its religion all wrong on this subject; and the people of the United States will find that, under the pretence of "saving the life of the nation, and upholding the old flag," they have surrendered their own liberties into the hands of that worst of all tyrants, a body of senseless fanatics.

When the passions and infatuations of the day shall have been dissipated by time, and all the results of the late war shall have passed into irrevocable history, the future chronicler of that history will have a most important duty to perform, and posterity, while pouring over its pages, will be lost in wonder at the follies and crimes committed in this generation.

My narrative is now given to the public, and the sole merit I claim for it is that of truthfulness. In writing it, I have received material aid from an accurate diary kept by Lieutenant William W. Old, aide to Major-General Edward Johnson, who was with me during the campaign in Maryland and the Shenandoah Valley until the twelfth of August, 1864, and the copious notes of Captain J. Kotchkiss, who acted as Topographical Engineer for the Second Corps and the Army of the Valley District, and recorded the events of each day, from the opening of the campaign on the Rapidan in May, 1864, until the affair at Waynesboro in March, 1865.

Note.—The above is the preface to General Early's account of the War Between the States, written November, 1866.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee"—Ps. 119:11.)

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. D. P. Holland, of Bastrop, Texas:

> "Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God, lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled" (Hebrews 12:15).

Who will send one from the far-away places as well very near us?

TESTIMONY

Maria H. Pinckney.

Sixty-three years' experience with the veracity of the Bible has brought me no confusion of face.

The earliest stand I remember making for the truth of the Bible was about the age of eleven. I was under the care of a physician and family friend, and sat next to him at table. One day several gentlemen were his guests and he was explaining to them that Mr. Agassee had proved that mankind had originated in seven different localities. To prove one point he raised my arm and told me to spread my fingers; I closed them closely and said, "You cannot use my hand to contradict St. Paul!" In a few years Darwin was reasserting St. Paul's statement. Some years later I spent a vacation with a friend and her two brothers amused themselves in attacks on my Biblical belief. "Writing was not invented until long after the time of Moses." Well, we have written records going back one thousand years earlier and even long before Abraham.

"The life of Moses is only a myth." Time, however, has unrolled the wrapping around the mummy of the daughter of Pharaoh and there is the same "myth". The Bible tells us the Hebrews built treasure cities for Pharaoh. One of them, Pithom, has been discovered and there the record agrees, as always, with the Bible. The first ten feet of wall is made with bricks mixed with straw, then comes those with stubble, and then only mud.

One of the aforementioned young men insisted that the arable land of Palestine could not have furnished the grain the Bible mentions, "Unless there were two crops a year!" I replied, "Three if necessary." Now, we know four and five crops were not uncommon—bills were made out to be paid out of these crops.

THE WONDER OF THE BOOK

By the Reverend Dyson Hague, M. A.

The Five Crowning Wonders.

BUT before I close I would like to briefly refer to five other things that are to my mind the crowning wonders of the Book.

Its Self-Authenticatingness.

There is, first of all, what we might call its self-authenticatingness. You need no historical critic or university professor to prove that the Bible is God's own Word. The Holy Ghost alone is the Author and Giver of that conviction. If you will but hear the accents of His voice you will be assured beyond all possibility of argument that this book is God's own Word. Men have come and still come to unsettle and destroy. The Spirit of Christ comes to validate and confirm with a Divine conviction and a Divine certainty that is incommunicable by mere reason, and is impervious to the assaults of doubt. You have perhaps heard Spurgeon's famous story of the poor woman who was confronted by a modern agnostic, and asked: "What are you reading?" "I am reading the Word of God." "The Word of God? Who told you that?" "He told me so Himself." "Told you so? Why, how can you prove that?" Looking skyward, the poor soul said: "Can you prove to me that there is a sun up in the sky?" "Why, of course; the best proof is that it warms me, and I can see its light." "That's it!" was her joyous reply. "The best proof that this Book is the Word of God is that it warms and lights my soul." (Read 1 Cor. 2:12.) You cannot explain this. But it is a fact deep and real,

Its Inexhaustibility.

Another wonder of the Bible is its inexhaustibility. It is like a seed. You can tell how many acorns are on an oak, but you cannot tell how many oaks are in an acorn. The tree that grows from a seed produces in turn the seeds of other trees; each tree contains a thousand seeds; each seed the germ of a thousand trees. Its depth is infinite; its hight is infinite. Millions of readers and writers, age after age, have dug in this unfathomable mine, and its depths are still unexhausted. Age after age it has generated, with ever-increasing creative power, ideas and plans, and schemes, and themes, and books. Yes, books; and in many cases books that are the only literature of the nation. The greatest minds have been its expositors. Myriads of students have studied it daily, and its readers from day to day can be numbered by millions. The volumes that have been written on single chapters or even verses would fill the shelves of many a library, and today they are as fresh, as fertile, as inexhaustible, as the day they were first written. The treasures yet to be found are as the stars of the sky in infinity of multitude.

Its Non-Improvableness.

Another wonder is its non-improvableness. You cannot gild gold. You cannot paint rubies. You cannot brighten diamonds. And no artist can touch with final touch this finished Word of God. This proud-pinnacled century can add nothing to it. It stands as the sun in the sky. If the greatest Bible-lovers of the last century, like Irving, and Gladstone, and Spurgeon, and Parker, had attempted to improve it their work would have been a patch and a disfigurement. It has the glory of God.

Its Authoritativeness.

Its irresistible authoritativeness. This is another wonder. It breaks upon you as a Voice from Heaven. Five hundred times in the Pentateuch it prefaces or concludes its declarations with the sublime assertions, "The Lord said", or "The Lord spake"! Three hundred times again in the following books it does the same, and in the prophetical, twelve hundred times with such expressions as: "Hear the Word of the Lord", or, "Thus saith the Lord." No other book dares thus to address itself to the universal conscience of man as man. No other speaks with such binding claim, or presumes to command the obedience of mankind. While all the books of the Bible are not equal in grandeur of revelation or of spiritual value, or ethical importance, there is throughout an equality of inspiration and finality of authoritativeness. The strange thing is that men in every age and clime acknowledge it. They know that the book speaks to their inner consciousness with an authority like the authority of God Himself.

Its Perennial Re-Inspiration.

Another wonder is what might be called its perpetual re-inspiration. Men think of the Bible as a book that was inspired. But the wonder of the Bible is that it is inspired. From the far-distant heights of time it comes sweeping into the hearts of man today, and the same breath of God that breathed into it its mystic life makes it live and energize again today. It is the Living Word, vital with the life of the Living God who gave it and gives it living power. The Twenty-third Psalm was inspired, but again and again today, as it is whispered in the hush of the death-chamber, or read with the hidden cry, "Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold the wondrous things of Thy law," it is re-inspired, and the Spirit makes it live once more. For this is the most remarkable and unique feature of the Bible. I feel that it is mine. Its promises are mine. As I read the one hundred and third Psalm, it is not ancient Hebrew, it is present-day power; and I, a living soul, overwhelmed with gratitude, cry out: "Bless the Lord, O my soul." The other day I took up this dear old Bible that my mother gave me, and I noted a verse in Genesis with a date written on the margin. There floated back upon my mind a time, some years ago, when I was in great trouble. I had to leave my dear wife and children, and to travel in quest of health in distant lands; and my heart within me was sad, and one day opening my Bible, at random as men say, my eye caught these words in Gen. 28:15: "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land." Shall I ever forget the flash of comfort that swept over my soul as I read that verse! All the exegetes and critics in the world could never persuade my soul that that was a mere echo of some far-off relic of a Babylonian legend, or of an Oriental myth. No, no! That was a message to me. It came straight down to me. It swept into my soul as a Voice from Heaven. It lifted me up, and no man will ever shake me out of the conviction that that message that day was God's own Word to me, inspiring because inspired, inspired because inspiring.

Its Christfullness.

But the final wonder of the Book is Christ. He is its fulness, its centre, its fascination. It is all about Jesus! Old Testament and New Testament alike tell of Jesus, the great Fact of history, the great Force of history, the great Future of history; for of this Book it can be said: "The Glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof." And as long as men live upon the face of this globe the Book that tells of that Supreme Personality, the Centre of a world's desire, Jesus; Jesus, the arch of the span of history, the key-stone of the arch of prophecy; Jesus, the Revealed, the Redeeming, the Risen, the Reigning, the Returning Lord; Jesus, the Desire of all nations; so long will this Book draw men's hearts like a magnet, and men will stand by it, and live for it, and die for it.

The Last Word.

And as I close, let me say this one word more. Oh! do not think and do not say, as I have heard men say they think, that we ought to read this Book as we read any other book; we ought to study it and analyze it just as we do any textbook in literature or science. No, no! When you come to this Book, come to it with awe. Read it with reverence. Regard it with a most sacred attention. "Take thy shoes from off thy feet, for the ground whereon thou standest is holy ground." Never, never compare this Book with other books. Comparison is dangerous. They are of earth. This is from heaven. Oh, do not think and do not say that this Book only contains the word of God! It is the Word of God. Think not of it as a good book, or even the better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word, of God; nay more, as the living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; inspired in totality.

(THE END.)

TRUTH AND FAITH

By the Reverend H. W. Hinde

Report of an Address given by the Reverend H. W. Hinde, M. A., Vicar of Islington and Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, at a Public Meeting of the Committee for the Maintenance of Truth and Faith, held at Sion College, England, January 15, 1929.

IT is my duty and privilege this afternoon to set forth on behalf of the Committee for the Maintenance of Truth and Faith the course which they have considered in outline and now advocate for the Bishops to follow at this very grave juncture in the history of our Church of England.

Let it be most emphatically said at once that in setting forth this scheme we do so with full regard to the respect which is due to the Bishops. It rests with them to take some action, and they have declared their intention of shaping their course at a gathering this month. But while responsibility rests on them, we should fail in our duty towards our Church and towards those who are associated with us, if we did not set forth what we believe to be the right course for them to follow. Very respectfully then we submit five things:—

(1.) The proposals put out in September by the Bishops should be withdrawn as not calculated to promote peace and as offensive to the conscience of large masses of the English people (as was stated in the Group Movement Manifesto). When some of their most staunch supporters during the attempted passage of the Prayer Book Measure see in their present proposals a lapse from moral rectitude, we need not stay to justify our contention that a mistake has been made and that these proposals should be withdrawn.

(2.) The Bishops should now deliberately and confessedly set themselves to administer and enforce the 1662 Book of Common Prayer, as far as is practicable, having also due regard to the amending acts of 1871 and 1872.

This needs a little explanation. Notice then at once the words "as far as is practicable". The charge which is constantly brought, especially by Bishops, against the Clergy generally, that no one keeps the law is not really so justifiable as it sounds, even if in such a wholesale way it is justifiable at all. In many of our Churches, in spite of every encouragement from the Bishops to break loose from the rubrics, the Prayer Book Services are practically indistinguishable from the services of old days. It is true there is not the same succession of services which pertained a generation ago, because more advantage is taken of the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act and services are separated. Nevertheless, in far more Churches than the utterances of some of the Bishops would lead us to believe there is no radical change in the regular services. In some there are found such changes as a reduction in the number of psalms sung, intercessions after the third collect at Evening Prayer, and so on; but they have come about as much through the instigation of Bishops as through anything else. Some such departures have commended themselves generally, and, as I say, with Episcopal approval have been adopted. It is not fair, therefore, now to turn on the Clergy who have adopted them and accuse them of being law breakers and rule them out of court in consequence. And the fact still remains that in some Churches even these changes have not taken place at all regularly, in some only very occasionally, and in some not at all.

At the same time, let it be acknowledged that there are rubrics and instructions which cannot now conveniently be carried out. Some things are no longer practicable. One or two instances will suffice. "The curate of every parish shall diligently upon Sundays and Holy-days, after the second Lesson at Evening Prayer openly in the Church instruct and examine . . . children . . . in some part of the Catechism." That direction is not practicable today, and its place has been taken by Sunday Schools and special Children's Services. Neither is it generally feasible in these days to baptize children "immediately after the last Lesson at Morning Prayer, or else immediately after the last Lesson at Evening Prayer, as the curate by his discretion shall appoint." It is because of such things that we say the Book should be administered "as far as is practicable."

Immediately it will be asked, how are we to know what is practicable? Who is to determine that? The answer is that we must at least assume the Bishops to be honest and to have some common sense. A scheme cannot be propounded on any other hypothesis. Given an honest intent there should be no difficulty on this point; and assuming it I should be prepared to leave the point to their discretion.

No doubt the Majority Bishops will say, it is impossible to administer the 1662 Book and yet allow Reservation. The answer to that is, we agree. Reservation is inconsistent with our Church doctrine, and we attempt no provision for it. There is no place for it in the Church of England.

Let the Bishops then administer and enforce the 1662 Book as far as is practicable. They cannot say that it is not possible to do that as far as it is practicable. But we add also "having due regard to the amending acts." What are they?

The Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Act, 1871, gave us the revised Table of Lessons with which most of us have always been familiar and is bound up in the ordinary 1662 Prayer Book. That Act says, "upon occasions to be approved by the Ordinary, other Lessons may, with his consent, be substituted for those which are appointed in the Calendar." It also says that "upon occasions to be approved by the Ordinary other Psalms may with his consent be substituted for those appointed in the Psalter." For our purposes we may assume the Ordinary to be the Bishop. This Act gives him power to authorize special Psalms and Lessons on such occasions as he approves. Too little use has been made of this provision. The Bishop who ordained me did authorize Special Psalms and Lessons for many occasions throughout the year, and published them in his Diocesan Calendar. Let the Bishops use, and even use generously, this liberty.

Then there is the Act of Uniformity Amendment Act, 1872, which gave power to separate and to shorten services, and authorized certain other things. One might suppose from the way reference is made to this Act (and strangely little has been heard of this Act in all the consideration of the Prayer Book Measure) that it did no more than allow the separation of services and permit the daily services in ordinary Churches and additional services on Sundays and in Cathedrals to be shortened. It allowed, however, more than that. Let me quote: "Upon any special occasion approved by the ordinary" (which, in this case, though printed with a small O may still be taken to mean the Bishop) "there may be used in any Cathedral or Church a special form of service approved by the ordinary, so that there be not introduced into such service anything, except anthems or hymns, which does not form part of the Holy Scriptures or Book of Common Prayer." If the Bishops, in authorizing or permitting special forms of service, had adhered to this proviso we should have been spared much of the trouble that has come upon us. I mention it to draw attention to the power which the Bishops now already possess. As this Act was the outcome of a Commission appointed to secure, among other things, "general uniformity of practice in such matters as may be deemed essential", it may be assumed that this permission was not intended to be so seldom used as to appear to have been quite forgotten.

This same Act authorized the shortening of the Morning and Evening Service on week-days, with some exceptions, omitting the Exhortation, one or more Psalms, one Lesson, and other things; and also laying it down that "the Minister using the Shortened Order . . . may in his discretion add in its proper place any exhortation, prayer, canticle, hymn, psalm or lesson contained in the Order for Morning Prayer or for Evening Prayer in the Book of Common Prayer and omitted or authorized to be omitted from such shortened order." Later on I shall suggest a new Measure and I would here throw out the idea that in such Measure this permission should be extended to allow a Bishop to authorize when he sees fit such liberty on other than week-days in Churches where he thinks a shorter or more simple service is desirable. In some of our poorer parishes this might be very helpful and no controversy would be involved.

It will be seen then that in the administration of the 1662 Book the law already allows considerable freedom from the original rubrics. Nor is this all. Many people for instance have hoped for some change in, or permission to change when desirable, the Order for the Burial of the Dead. Few, however, know that the Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880, allows, under certain circumstances, instead of the ordinary Burial Service, the use of a special form of service prescribed or approved by the Ordinary. The said form, however, must be in keeping with Holy Scripture. It may be said that this opens the door to certain teaching, which we maintain is not in the Prayer Book or true to the Church of England. I say no—not if there is an honest intent as we are now assuming.

If the Bishops would frankly declare their intention of administering the 1662 Book as far as is practicable, but with full regard, and even generous regard, to the permissions of the 1871 and 1872 Acts, while adhering to their safeguards, I do not hesitate to say that they would have the approval of the overwhelming majority of the people of our Church and of our country, and indeed would become quite popular. The circumstances may, however, have become such that this could not be done in a day. That would not, indeed, be expected; but again, given an honest intent and tactful patience, the desired result could be brought about in due course, and perhaps more speedily than some think. All loyal sons of the Church would have patience while such an effort was being made and would give all the support they could.

(3.) Let a non-controversial Measure be drawn up and passed as speedily as possible which would embody all the non-contentious variations which would have been permitted by the Deposited Book. Some one will probably ask the usual question, How are we to tell what is non-controversial? The obvious reply is, If there is any body of opposition to any specific proposal, let that at once be excluded. Force nothing against any responsible body of opinion. In any doubt omit the thing in question. Let the Measure be honestly non-controversial. Certain Bishops have laid hold of some particular detail which they are pleased to suggest is non-controversial, but which meets with opposition, and then when that opposition is expressed they throw up their hands and say "nothing is non-controversial." That is most unfair. Let honesty be assumed on both sides.

But it is not suggested that the non-controversial Measure now advocated should bring in any new Prayer Book or "Deposited Book." The suggestion is that the Measure to be introduced should be on the same lines as the 1872 Act of Uniformity Amendment Act. The demand today is for more liberty, but liberty of a kind which does not disturb the even tenor of our ways. Such a Measure might include some authorization for additional prayers for some subjects not directly provided for in our present Prayer Book, e. g., Missionary, Industrial, National, etc., some safeguard being inserted to provide that they do not depart from the standard of doctrine of our present Book and the 39 Articles. An honest endeavor in a spirit of goodwill could accomplish much in this direction in a very short time.

(4.) Let there also be prepared at once some agreed Ecclesiastical Courts Measure, even if only of a partial character, but sufficient to meet the immediate need. A Measure on the lines of the Report recently laid before the Assembly will not do. It would be better to start afresh on other lines. It has been often said by Bishops that they will be no party to any policy of persecution or prosecution. We do not ask for the former, but we do not hesitate to say that if men will not keep the law in all ways which are practicable they should be proceeded against and some penalty should be imposed. The penalty need not be imprisonment, as some of the Bishops seem to want us to imagine. There has lately passed into law a Benefices (Ecclesiastical Duties) Measure which imposes penalties upon incumbents who fail to carry out their duties through negligence. If a Commission, specially appointed, finds that an incumbent's failure to carry out his duties is the result of negligence, the Bishop may himself appoint a curate and may also inhibit the incumbent from performing all or any of the duties connected with the benefice. An incumbent so inhibited may not reside in the parsonage house of the benefice, and his stipend must bear the cost of the curate's stipend. Should this state of affairs continue for five years the benefice may be regarded as vacant. It would not seem difficult to pass some Courts Measure imposing such penalties, surely none too heavy, on men who continue to refuse to administer loyally the Book to which they assented when they were ordained, and again when appointed to their present benefices. Personally, I should not advocate waiting five years before declaring the benefice vacant. But with the desire to be fair after a prolonged period of lawlessness and Episcopal encouragement, we do well to stay from deprivation for a reasonable period of time.

(5.) Of my Fifth point little need be said. Everywhere the mention of it evokes sympathy. Let the Bishops, and the Government, cease to promote those who are not loyal to the spirit of the 1662 Book. The first recommendation of the Royal Commission of 1906 has not yet had any attention given it. "The practices . . . plainly significant of teaching, repugnant to the doctrine of the Church of England and certainly illegal, should be promptly made to cease by the exercise of the authority belonging to the Bishops and, if necessary, by proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts." On the contrary, those who make use of these practices have had great Episcopal encouragement and in places, more than any one else.

If the Bishops will follow the lines now respectfully set forth they will find that the more contentious difficulties will solve themselves.

THE PASTOR

An Ordination Address

By the Venerable W. S. Claiborne, Archdeacon of Sewanee

St. John 20:21-23.—Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and said unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.

Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

THE writer of this gospel is essentially a pastor and evangelist. He is himself very conscious of the life which faith in Christ has brought him, and he is interested in others who have not the same consciousness. His hope is that they, too, may have a fuller faith in Jesus, both as the Jewish Messiah and as the Son of God, a message for all of God's children. Knowing the needs and weakness of human nature he is attempting as a faithful physician of the soul to prescribe, having diagnosed the condition of the individual.

St. John also realized that man is incapable of working without organization, and that the divine plan seems to have been from the beginning to have an outward visible sign of organization where men can gather and work, looking forward to the divine purpose. We, as individuals, cannot think or live without a definite organization; we should not, however, become slaves to it. An organization that lives on itself, when man becomes a cog within the wheel, is an organization that will fail. The organization must realize the responsibility of the individual, and the the ability of the individual to do his work with and by the organization. The Christian world has always recognized the Church as the Kingdom of God on earth, the Bride of Christ, the Mother of Souls. Organization must have its official officers, but these officers are not always slaves nor are they tyrants; they must, in order to carry out the work entrusted to them as individuals, be pastors and learn to serve. We are living in the Middle Ages in thought and action, making many of the same mistakes, creating the same colossal organizations, and in many respects using the same excuses that were used in the Thirteenth Century, depending too largely on the organization to carry itself, believing the large corporation will of itself speak from the throne and man will obey.

The bishop, priest or deacon, who forgets his individual responsibility as a physician of souls to those within his cure, has, I fear, missed the purpose of his divine orders and will develop a cold, well organized piece of machinery which cannot touch or help the individual soul. If the bishop is not a pastor to his clergy and the people of his diocese to whom they can turn in sorrow and troubles, of what use is he? If the priest is not sought out by individuals for help of every description, both in spiritual and material things, how can he possibly be a pastor and lead or shepherd the souls under him? Is it not high time that the Church arise and shake off the impediments of over-organization from which so much false pride and jealousy occur? Human nature today is reaching out for food. Millions of suggestions are made, but do any of them show us the real Christ who ministers to the individual soul? We point with pride to our magnificent cathedrals and parish houses, statistics and a thousand other things, and forget the men who are really carrying the burden of the Church and who are rarely heard of except when they die. Pupin has well said in his recent book, "The New Reformation", that we need to change our terms, for at the Reformation really no reformation occurred, and surely we need now a reformation. Perhaps science will help us, though science is as dogmatic as a theologian, as shown by "The Dogma of Evolution", by More. We cannot be too dogmatic and narrow. How could we be if we were busy about our Father's work? Francis Underhill has written an excellent book, "Feed My Sheep", or rather has edited it, and we would all do well in reading it over and taking an inventory of ourselves. The world is going to continue to ask for help; it has not lost confidence in the Church, but it has lost confidence in many of so-called leaders, as shown in a little book published a year ago, "Pastors, Pacifists, Politicians". If a bishop, priest or deacon, is not sought out by the laity for help it is the fault of the bishop, priest or deacon, and he should take an account of himself and ask what the trouble is. The Church has given us our liturgy, sacraments and Bible, all that is necessary to feed the hungry souls created by God, but these cannot do the work without the officer, and the officer cannot be an efficient officer unless he has been a part of the needs of the Church. We cannot give the thing we have not. One doubts if the world has ever been so ready to hear the simple gospel of the Church as it is today. Men everywhere have time if the officer of the Army and of the Living God has anything to give. The world has been torn to pieces with envy, hatred and malice, and men realize that the things of the world do not help them unless they really need help, and they are eagerly waiting for a real physician of the soul to minister to them.

Into these conditions, my dear brother, you are called before the altar of God to pledge yourself a faithful servant. You have thought out well, no doubt, the condition of things in which you are about to enter—the weakness of human nature, and the disappointments and discouragements that await you. But are they to be discouragements and disappointments? They will not be when you realize the weakness of your fellow men and your own weakness. Remember that today you are entrusted with a most sacred office, for you are to be admitted a shepherd of God's flock; you are to go out and minister to the people where you are to be stationed; you must study their conditions and try in every possible way to alleviate pain, mental or physical, and attract people to the Christ as the only true physician. It will become your duty to listen patiently to the sorrows and temptations that beset the individual, to direct, and in the name of God, absolve those who come. If they do not come to see you it is your fault, for you have been chosen, accepted and sent forth to continue the work that our Blessed Lord did along the shores of Galilee. You are an officer in the Church, the Kingdom of Heaven on earth that He worked in those thirty years in Palestine. Kindness begets kindness; love begets love, and sympathy begets sympathy. As my Father has sent me, even so send I you.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted By Rev. Frank Cox

249 West Forty-third Street, New York, N. Y.

WE are all familiar with the problems that are presented by personal difficulties in the parish. Every one knows of parishes whose usefulness has been either wrecked or at least badly hampered by difficulties within the membership. We are accustomed to take these things for granted and feel that only death or removal can cure them. The early Church while afflicted with these things now and then, in the main drew from the pagans the exclamation—"how they love one another!"

These lightly regarded parish squabbles may be in God's sight very serious affairs indeed, for no church that is occupied with them can give any sustained thought to the world without. There are two methods of dealing with them. The customary one is this—the rector acts as a sort of consecrated oil can when Mrs. X and Mrs. Z are on the outs, and should he by dint of patient effort succeed in having an amnesty proclaimed, he feels that he can enjoy a well earned rest. He takes good care that the two are not thrown together again too soon. This is the way of defeat, in which we more or less acquiesce in the situation and make the best of it.

Surrender can deal very definitely with such affairs, and in a positive manner. The day will come when men will realize that such church fights may be as serious in God's eyes as drunkenness and that two choir members who are not on speaking terms need conversion as much as pickpockets. God does not catalogue sins and have one class marked—respectable: permitted, though deplored, and another deadly; not done. When we see things in God's light we shall cease to allow respectability to cloak what is really deadly sin, and shall begin to reach our contented church sinners where they really live.

God's miracles work for the church Pharisee as much as they do for the so-called down and out. Then instead of confining our miracles to Old Born Drunk and his kind, we shall have such titles as—Miracles of Grace; Choir singers reconciled—Parish priest repents and becomes as a little child—Vestryman, who had not darkened the church door for weeks is convicted of sin. These titles may seem a little far-fetched, but they are fully possible and in some cases badly needed.

Several things are required to make such results possible. In the first place the minister must not be afraid of his job. He must declare the truth so fearlessly and faithfully from the pulpit that people will recognize immediately that any ill feeling is an abnormality and must be righted. In the second place we need individual workers who instead of talking about people will talk to them. People who are not afraid to be peacemakers. Then we ought to have some times in church when there are some really frank confessions of sin, and appropriate restitutions. The sight of one person apologizing to another whom he may have wronged is more effective in convicting others than many sermons. Then we must have real prayer and a parish busily engaged in the Lord's business, too busy in fact to attend to other people's.

SIMPLIFIED TRUTH FOR YOUNG AND OLD; By Edward W. Lewis, D. D. Hamilton Brothers, Boston, Mass. Price, $1.50.

This is a book of sermons and addresses to young people by the Author who is known as the "Young People's Evangelist". It is given in the plain, easy, every-day language which delights children. Speaking to children entertainingly is an art—such speakers, like poets, "are born not made". However, much of it may be acquired and there is great need always for this kind of speaking.

Those who have opportunity for such sermons and addresses and aspire to speak to young people, will get much help from this book. J. R. Ellis.

ROMANISTS ON THE RISE.

Mr. Editor:

By the way, would you be good enough to have the Churchman sent to my new address? I enjoy reading it and regard it as the best hope for the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. The Romanists are on the rise in Washington. As the Major Prophet would say all the Washington clergy nearly has gone a-whoring after the Anglo-Catholic bunch. It means a fight, friend, brother and fellow Churchman. The sooner we throw the gauntlet in the pathway of their onward march the sooner the Church of our Fathers will be permanently entrenched in the unassailable trenches of her doctrines and glorious history.

But, old friend, who has the intestinal stamina to boldly proclaim Christ and His Cross? All the world needs is an abiding faith in the fact of Jesus, not only, but also belief in Him as the great Reconciler and Saviour.

If the Parsons will get down to the proposition of preaching a sense of sin and the need of a Saviour nobody will need to worry where the Church will end. But as long as they are so vitally concerned about the rise of their intellectual superiority to the detriment of their soul's salvation this world is going to be a pretty bad place for the sinner who knows he is one and who earnestly wants God to cleanse him.

Minister of P. E. Church.

EVANGELIZATION OF THE NEGRO.

Mr. Editor:

It cannot be questioned that all the Bishops of Virginia to Bishop Whittle, inclusive, ever laid great stress upon the evangelization of the Negro. Bishop Whittle, with emphasis, asserted that the same commission which commanded the minister to preach the Gospel to the white race also commanded him to preach to the blacks. I recognize all the conditions and the general situation of affairs which confront us. Nevertheless, it is the duty of the Church to prosecute this work earnestly, which it is not doing at present. Methods that could have been used a quarter of a century ago are worthless today. We shall find it most difficult to make any prevailing appeal to the colored race if we so amend the Constitution of the General Convention, as to recognize therein "race" or "color". The whole trend of Negro life is against any phase of "segregation". I simply state the fact, without comment. It appears to me that a way out of the difficulties which now confront us is a slight amendment to Section I, of Article VI of the Constitution.

The first part of that article reads, as at present:

"Section I. The House of Bishops may establish Missionary Districts in States and Territories, or parts thereof not organized into dioceses. It may also from time to time change, increase, or diminish territory included in such Missionary Districts in such manner as may be prescribed by Canon."

I suggest an addition to the above to immediately follow. The suggested addition is this: It may, further, upon the requests of the diocesans concerned, establish Inter-Diocesan Districts, of two or more contiguous dioceses, embracing such congregations that are not in union with any diocesan convention. Such Districts shall have the same status as other Missionary Districts."

Not one word is said either of race or color, and yet under such provisions the entire business could be handled satisfactorily to all concerned. Is ours the "Holy Anglo-Saxon", or the Holy Catholic Church?

WANTED: EVANGELICAL RECTOR.

Mr. Editor:

Could you make it known amongst your friends, the Clergy, that the Church of the Nativity, Ocean Avenue and Farragut Road, Brooklyn, N. Y., is vacant and looking for an evangelical rector. Stipend about $3,000. No rectory. Fees good.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

HONOLULU.

Bishop Burleson visited Honolulu, Hawaii, during the months of April and May, and presided at the twenty-seventh annual convocation of the Missionary District, held in St. Andrew's Cathedral. In the annual address the bishop-in-charge proposed that Hawaii should erect a memorial to their late well-beloved Bishop, John Dominique La Mothe, and suggested that such an undertaking be inaugurated at once by those who knew and loved him, rather than wait for the new bishop, who might not even have known Bishop La Mothe. From personal information and from official connection with the National Council Bishop Burleson said that he knew that the future of Iolani School weighed heavily on the shoulders of the late Bishop. He, therefore, suggested for consideration a memorial of $300,000 to pay for the land and temporary buildings, to erect adequate permanent buildings, and to lay the foundation for a proper endowment for this school.

As a result the convocation immediately directed the appointment of a committee to carry out the plan to raise $300,000 as a memorial to the late Bishop Iolani School to be the objective. Before the Bishop left Honolulu, a committee of nine was appointed of which the Hon. Lawrence M. Judd, who will enter into office as Governor of the Islands July 5, is the honorary chairman. Retiring Governor Farrington is also a member of the committee, together with a personnel representing the most influential persons of the Islands, the membership not being confined to members of the Episcopal Church. This committee is entering energetically and hopefully upon its great undertaking. It is believed that there are many in the Continental United States who will be glad to have a share in so fitting a memorial to the late Bishop La Mothe. He endeared himself to all the people of the Islands, and with Iolani School as an objective the appeal will be a strong one.

The name of Iolani is known wherever mission-minded people are to be found. Iolani School was founded by Bishop Willis, of the English Church, and bears a well-known name. It was begun in order to educate the princes of the royal family and the alii (the chiefs or nobility). With the coming of other foreign races it became a school largely for the Orientals, and is doing a great work among the polyglot population of the Islands. In some years its enrollment has reached 300. Up to last year it has been conducted in an old house made of coral on the Cathedral grounds, which building was the cradle of the educational work in the Islands, occupied originally by the Rev. Richard Armstrong, a missionary of the American Board, who became the first minister of Public Education. Here was born his son, General Samuel Chapman Armstrong, who afterwards founded Hampton Institute, Virginia.

In the last year of his episcopate, Bishop La Mothe realized that Iolani could not carry on in its limited surroundings, and a fine property was purchased up the Nuuanu valley, part of the estate of the Hon. Clive Davies, including his family mansion. Here temporary wooden buildings have been erected and the school is going on. It furnishes an outstanding opportunity to place at the gateway of the Orient a strategic institution for Christian Education.

LONG ISLAND.

The sixty-third convention of the Diocese of Long Island was held in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, May 21-22, 1929. At the celebration of Holy Communion with which the convention opened, Bishop Stires was celebrant and preacher, and seemed to have recovered quite fully his usual good health.

Just before the sermon, the Bishop dedicated a memorial pulpit placed to commemorate his predecessor, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Burgess, D. D., second bishop of this diocese.

Two former missions, having been incorporated as parishes, were admitted into union with the convention: St. Joseph's, Queens Village, and St. Paul's College Point.

The convention was marked by a rare degree of harmony and despatch. Changes in important places were: the Rev. S. M. Dorrance for the Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Louis Dutton for Mr. Lewis W. Francis on the Diocesan Council; the Rev. Horace E. Clute for the Rev. George S. Grange (deceased) on the Ecclesiastical Court; the Rev. Arthur R. Cummings for the Rev. Jacob Probst (deceased) as deputy to the provincial synod; the Rev. John E. Gerstenberg and the Rev. Rush R. Sloane for the Rev. A. R. Cummings and the Rev. Wm. A. Sparks as provisional deputies to the same; the Rev. C. Lawson Willard for the Rev. Willis B. Holcombe, and the Rev. Robert A. Brown for the Rev. Robert Rogers, on the Board of Christian Social Service.

The only matter that seemed likely to produce a spirited debate was the revised constitution for the diocese, submitted last year by the chancellor, Col. Jackson A. Dykman, and reported this year by the committee on canons. One impassioned speech against it was made, and it was then by motion of the chancellor referred to a special commission of five clergy and five laymen, who were directed to prepare a revision of constitution, canons and rules of order, to publish their draft not later than March 1 next, and to hold public hearings between that date and the sitting of the next annual convention. The commission appointed by the chair consists of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Larned, the Rev. Richard D. Pope, the Rev. Robert Rogers, D. D., the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., the Rev. Rush R. Sloane; Col. Jackson A. Dykman, Mr. Origen S. Seymour, Mr. Edward H. Floyd-Jones, Mr. Robert L. Pierrepont and the Hon. William C. Redfield.

Bishop Larned made a fine address upon the opportunities before the diocese, stressing equally the diocesan missionary problem and the responsibility to the national council. He announced that this diocese, though it had never yet paid its quota in full, had nevertheless in 1928 paid more than ever before, and moreover had paid more than it promised—$110,000. By paying $10,000 beyond its promise it had saved the province from falling behind. When Bishop Stires followed this by reading pages from the personal diary of Bishop Creighton, of Mexico, relating his dismay and discouragement over the cut in his appropriation, there was prompt response from the floor, and a layman promised $1,000 towards making up to Bishop Creighton the cut that he had suffered.

The budget of diocesan expense was presented and approved. It is greater than last year by approximately the amount that was voted for the salary and expense of the suffragan bishop; and this will result in an increased assessment on the congregation by about $15 in each $1,000 of current expense.

The convention finished its business at 12:30 on the second day, so that no afternoon session was necessary. Bishop and Mrs. Stires entertained the members of the convention at the Bishop's House after the close of the first day's session.

EASTON.

The sixty-first annual convention of the Diocese of Easton was held at Emmanuel Church, Chestertown, Maryland, May 6, 7 and 8, with the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., presiding, and about sixty clerical and lay delegates in attendance. Preceding the formal opening a dinner for the clergy and laymen, numbering about 125, from all points of the diocese was held in the parish house. The after-dinner speakers were Bishop Davenport, the Rev. L. C. Washburn, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, and Robert S. Barrett, of Alexandria, Va.

The convention opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion on Tuesday morning at 10 A. M., the Bishop being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. George C. Sutton, president of the Standing Committee, and the Rev. C. L. Atwater. The bishop's annual address was followed by the organization of the convention. Mr. S. E. Shannahan was elected secretary, and Mr. John S. McDaniel, treasurer.

The main business of the morning was the presentation of reports of various committees.

In the evening there was a mass meeting over which the Bishop of the Diocese presided. The Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearley, D. D., Bishop of Newark, was the speaker.

The elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee—Rev. Geo. C. Sutton, Rev. W. D. Gould, Rev. C. L. Atwater, Hon. Wm. H. Adkins and Edwin Dashiell.

Executive Council—Clerical members: Rev. John White, Rev. W. D. Gould, Rev. F. W. Kirwan; lay members: Clayton Wright, David Dallas.

Examining Chaplains—Rev. C. L. Atwater, Rev. Wm. McClelland, Rev. R. W. Lewis.

Treasurer Pension Fund—J. Harper Skillin.

Delegates to Synod—Rev. R. R. Gilson, Rev. S. R. MacEwan, Rev. R. W. Lewis, Rev. John White; lay, H. Lay Beaven, John S. McDaniel, David Dallas, P. A. M. Brooks; alternates: Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Rev. C. L. Atwater, Rev. Raymond Adams, Rev. H. R. Zeigler; lay, S. E. Shannahan, Thos. Perkins, J. T. C. Hopkins, H. T. Hartman.

An interesting resolution was adopted requesting the Bishop of the Diocese to appoint a committee which shall take under consideration and inaugurate plans for the commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the holding of the first service of the Church of England on Kent Island, Maryland, and what is now the Diocese of Easton, by the Rev. Richard James in 1631.

MINNESOTA.

Bishop McElwain, in his address to the seventy-second annual council of the diocese, held in St. Clement's Church, St. Paul, May 28-29, commended the Advance Work program of the diocese. He said: "We must keep everlastingly at the job of giving our share of the budget; there are, in almost every parish, men and women who could give more than they do, but who hesitate on account of giving the impression that they will carry the whole load, which they certainly ought not to do. The 'Advance Work' budget is the place where they can find a project in which they can be personally interested, with which they can keep in personal contact, and to which they can give without discouraging anybody else's donations. I urge the clergy to study this program of Advance Work and to present it to such parishioners as I have mentioned."

The Rev. C. W. Brown was elected secretary of the diocese, and Mr. John C. Wade was elected diocesan treasurer.

The present standing committee was reelected in its entire membership, and the following members were elected to the Bishop and Directorate:

Clerical: The Rev. Messrs. A. E. Knickerbocker, E. H. Eckel, Jr., D. H. Atwill and C. W. Baxter. Lay: Messrs. H. S. Gregg, J. T. Warne and V. E. Lofstrom.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod—Clerical: Rev. Messrs. A. E. Knickerbocker, P. E. Osgood, E. W. Couper, F. D. Butler, G. C. Menefee and Frank Zoubek. Lay: C. B. Lyon, C. A. Rasmussen, W. H. Lightner, R. A. Moore, C. J. Gutgessill, and Ralph Brownson, Jr. Alternates, Clerical: Rev. Messrs. Thos. Dewhurst, W. E. Harmann, W. C. Hengen, Geo. Buzzelle, John Temple, J. Ross Colquhoun. Lay: Messrs. E. N. Rundell, E. V. Hunt, B. F. Beardsley, A. J. Lobb, C. M. Morse and G. S. Weston.

The Rev. A. E. Lichtenberger spoke on Missions in China in behalf of the National Council.

Greetings were sent to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which was meeting at St. Paul on that day, and the committee which carried them was received with great enthusiasm.

The attendance at the council was large.

SUMMER SCHOOLS AND CONFERENCES

COLLEGE STUDENT CONFERENCES.

By Frank C. Bancroft.

This month will see throngs of American college students flocking to eight conference centers. Each has its own specific theme; the general quest of all the conferences will be for a deeper search and appropriation of Christian truth for the lives of college men and women today.

During the last fifty years, under the auspices of the Student Christian Movement (the Student Department of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations), college students have gathered annually for these occasions.

The need for helping the young college generation of the Church to avail itself of this opportunity is great indeed. The material rush of life in movie, in stadium, in prom, and in plans for business, has poured in upon their consciousness almost to the exclusion of the simple, spiritual verities. It is not irreligion, but profound unreligion.

The clergy of our Church are giving warm support to several of these conferences this year. Bishop Dallas, of New Hampshire, is to lead the Northfield Conference. Bishop Cross, of Spokane, has been asked to lead the Seabeck Conference, Dean Nes, of New Orleans, Blue Ridge. The Rev. Paul Roberts, of Colorado Springs, will share in the leadership of the Estes Park Conference. The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, secretary for college work of our Church, is urging seminary students and Episcopal Church collegians to attend the conferences. If this help can be strengthened by the personal support of the laity, collectively and singly, a great contribution to the life of the Church can be made.

A list of the conferences follows:

College Student Summer Conferences, 1929.

For Men Students:

Kings Mountain, N. C.—June 1-9.
Seabeck, Wash.—June 8-17.
Geneva, Wis.—June 12-20.
Northfield, Mass.—June 14-22.
Blue Ridge, N. C.—June 14-24.

Co-ed Conferences.

Hollister, Mo.—June 4-14.
Estes Park, Col.—June 7-17.
Eagles Mere, Pa.—June 12-22.

For Women Students.

Blue Ridge, N. C.—June 4-14.
Spelman College, Atlanta, Ga.—June 7-14.
Asilomar, Cal.—June 15-25.
Seabeck, Wash.—June 18-25.
Camp Maqua, Poland, Me.—June 18-28.
Silver Bay, N. Y.—June 20-28.
Geneva, Wis.—June 21-30.

Other Groups:

Blairstown, N. J. (preparatory school boys)—June 22-27.

SWEET BRIAR, VIRGINIA.

The fourteenth annual session of the Virginia Summer Conference of Religious Education will be held at Sweet Briar College, Sweet Briar, Virginia, June 24-July 6.

This school is under the auspices of the Dioceses of the Episcopal Church in the State of Virginia. Courses are offered for Church School Teachers and Officers, Leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary, of Young People, of the Church School Service Program, and for Social Service workers. Thus all departments of the Church's work are studied. The clergy will find this school most helpful.

Early registration is urged. All pupils must be recommended by the rector or some parish or diocesan official.

Registration Officer for Diocese of Virginia—Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., 8 N. Laurel Street, Richmond, Va.

For Southern Virginia—Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Walnut Hill, Petersburg, Va.

For Southwestern Virginia—Mr. Thos. A. Scott, Box 1068, Roanoke, Va.

For all others—Mr. Thos. A. Scott, Box 1068, Roanoke, Va.

The Diocese of Virginia will provide a limited number of scholarships to pupils attending from the smaller churches when recommended by the rectors.

TAPPAHANNOCK, VIRGINIA.

The seventh annual session of St. Margaret's Summer School at Tappahannock, Virginia, will be held June 17-21.

The school is conducted under the joint auspices of the Rappahannock Valley and Piedmont Convocations, and with the endorsement and support of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. Its purpose is to provide training for leadership in our various departments of church work for those who cannot attend the Diocesan School at Sweet Briar or other longer term schools.

$1.25 per day or $5.00 for the entire four days will be the cost for both room and table board. Fifty cents each will be charged for meals for those attending only through the day.

Applications should be made as early as practicable to the Rev. H. S. Osburn, Tappahannock, Virginia.

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

A Diocesan Young People's Conference will be held at the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, Virginia, June 15-25.
